Mr. President, Senator SEWELL was in no sense a spectacular man. We who knew him best knew that he avoided crowds, he avoided applause, he never played to the gallery. He was always intent upon the one thing which he sought to accomplish. The motive power of his career was its directness, its courage, its outspokenness. When he started in the railway business he meant to be president of the railway, and he was; in finance he meant to get a fortune, and he secured it; in politics he meant to go as far as he could under the laws and the Constitution of the United States, and he did.

In this Senate his value was in the fact that he undertook nothing which he did not completely understand, and that which he did understand by the submission of the judgment of his associates to his great judgment, backed up by his wonderful information and industry, became the law of the land.

He started to redeem the State of New Jersey from its rock-ribbed condition in the Democratic party. It had been allied to that party ever since the time of Jefferson, and including Jefferson's time. In that State, which is peculiarly interstate, within itself, in the families who married and intermarried, there were traditions and legends of party associations most difficult to break, most difficult to sever; and Senator SEWELL'S success in the twenty years' struggle by which he turned that State over to his own party, and by which it looks as if it might be kept there, was due to the qualities of leadership in which he differed from most of the political leaders of my time.

Political leaders, as I have known them—and I have known almost all of them in almost every State for forty years—are jealous of youth; they are afraid of young ambition; they hesitate to acknowledge the rising genius which appears in the different localities of their State, and they frequently put a heavy hand on a young man who is marching ahead, according to their judgment, too rapidly, and may possibly interfere with or remove them from the seat of power. SEWELL never had any fear on that point. Wherever there was ambition in youth he encouraged it; wherever there was ability he recognized it; wherever a young man could be placed so that he could be most useful to the cause which SEWELL loved, and which he believed ought to triumph, it never occurred to his brave and manly heart that that boy or that young man could be a rival of himself.

There is one race, Mr. President, which has contributed more to the government of this world in modern times than any other. It bears a very small proportion to other races, almost an infinitesimal portion. Wherever you go around the world, in seeing foreign countries and foreign sights, you come upon the colonies of the British Empire, and recognize that the sun in its course around the globe never sets upon the British flag. Wherever the situation is difficult, wherever government is almost impossible, wherever the climate is most deadly, wherever the population is nearer to barbarism and savagery, and therefore almost impossible to assimilate, there you find as a governor a member of the Scotch-Irish race. The Scotch-Irish race is a very small part of the inhabitants of the British Islands, but in the civil and military affairs of England they occupy more distinguished, more powerful, and more numerous stations than all other races combined.

That race has contributed much to the glory of the American Army and of the American Navy. Though an almost infinitesimal part of our 80,000,000 people, it has contributed several Presidents to the United States, but it never gave to our public and our business life, it never gave to our citizenship a better example or a more useful service than when it contributed the grit, the pluck, the modest courage, the ability, and the indomitable ambition of Senator WILLIAM J. SEWELL.

Mr. DRYDEN. Mr. President, as the junior Senator from New Jersey, precedent assigns to me the duty of speaking the last word in these memorial services. But the story of General SEWELL'S life, to which we have just listened from the lips of those who knew and honored him, renders it unnecessary for me to speak of him at length.

It is especially fitting that this body, of which General SEWELL was a member for nearly one-fifth of his busy and eventful career, should bear testimony by appropriate action and in a public manner to his sterling character and distinguished services. These solemn observances are far more than a mere adherence to a venerated custom. They testify to a public loss. They signalize a recognition of the virtues of a useful citizen, a brave soldier, a wise statesman.

Devoid of the pomp and show which would characterize a similar event under other forms of government, their very simplicity lends to them a force and dignity appropriate to the life of the man whom we mourn and to the memory of a patriotic and self-sacrificing servant of the Republic, in whose service he was when he died.

Considering the circumstances of his foreign birth, remembering that he came to this country a mere boy in years, both fatherless and motherless, and that without friends or means, and with but scant store of education, he by the exercise of great natural abilities rose step by step from a very humble position in life to be a major-general and a Senator of the United States, the story of Senator SEWELL'S advancement is remarkable and in some respects singular. Except that he was of Anglo-Irish lineage above the common, he might not inaptly have said in the slightly altered language of Bulwer Lytton:

> My father died; and I, the lowly born,
> Was my own lord. Then did I seek to rise
> Out of the prison of my mean estate,
> And with such jewels as the exploring mind
> Brings from the caves of knowledge, buy my ransom
> From those twin gaolers of the daring heart—
> Low Birth and Iron Fortune.

The outbreak of the civil war found General SEWELL, then a young man, residing in New Jersey and already occupying a responsible position in railroad work. He was among the first to answer the nation's call for men to maintain its unity, and recruiting a company of his own went with it to the front as its captain. I shall not attempt to tell his story as a soldier. How he bore his part in that mighty four years' conflict which followed is splendidly attested by his early and numerous promotions, through which he rose steadily to the ranks of lieutenant-colonel, colonel, brevet brigadier-general, and finally brevet major-general. His first star was given him for "gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle of Chancellorsville," where he was severely wounded. For his brilliant services in action at Spottsylvania and Gettysburg, as well as in other great battles of the war, he was awarded a medal of honor by Congress. He was but 30 years of age when he was entitled to wear the double star of a major-general. These memorial events in his career are a part of our country's history, and their story of his bravery and patriotism and of hardships endured for the love of his country will remain there to kindle the pride of his descendants and to encourage American youth to emulate his noble deeds.

Two events subsequent to his service in the civil war illustrate, one, the strength of his martial spirit, and, the other, his capacity for command. Soon after the close of that great conflict he became identified with the National Guard of the State of New Jersey and continued in it for the remainder of his life, being its major-general commanding at his death. Occupying that position when the late war with Spain broke out he was anxious to take the field again and was, in fact, appointed and commissioned a major-general of United States Volunteers by the late President McKinley. Following that occurred a most unusual event. You will remember, Mr. President, you and those who were serving in the Senate with him at that time, how, at the urgent request of the late Vice-President Hobart and a large number of his Senatorial colleagues who believed General SEWELL'S services were imperatively demanded here as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, he with great reluctance and regret declined the appointment and remained in the Senate at the post which, in the judgment of many of his associates, duty assigned to him.

Of his ability as a military commander I will mention but a single instance. In the year 1877 the country was profoundly agitated by labor troubles, particularly in connection with some of the railroads. In certain localities outside of my own State the fires of discontent, which had been smoldering, broke out in open conflagration. Property was destroyed and human lives sacrificed. Great lines of transportation were tied up and business was in a state of partial paralysis. The trouble reached New Jersey, and the calamity there was imminent. The conditions demanded the exercise of talent of the highest order. To meet the emergency General SEWELL was made provisional commander of the forces of the State, assembled to preserve order, and sent to Phillipsburg, N. J., the greatest point of danger. With rare courage, decision, and good judgment he opened and kept open the lines of travel throughout the territory under his command, restored peace and order, vindicated the majesty of the law, and, what is worthy of the highest praise, accomplished all this without the destruction of property and without the loss of a single life. In the language of a conservative and competent authority, the late Adjutant-General Stryker, of New Jersey, "A more skillfully planned, silently but rapidly executed, and thoroughly effective movement was never made by State troops in the history of this country."

The qualities that enabled General SEWELL to rise to high rank and command in the military service of his adopted country marked him out for conspicuous success in the ranks of peace. Returning upon the close of hostilities in the civil war to his antebellum occupation and resuming his old home in New Jersey, he soon began climbing the paths of peace to new places of honor and trust. No obstacles or difficulties could long stay his advancement. Just as he had shown a marked genius for war, so in business and in statecraft he possessed all the important qualifications that make for success. He was a man of sound judgment, quick in decision, and untiringly industrious. He had in a marked degree one other trait which is essential to permanent distinction in any vocation in life—absolute fidelity to his promise. His plighted faith was an inviolable obligation. No man could ever truthfully charge General SEWELL with lukewarmness or faint-heartedness to any friend or cause he professed to serve.

Immediately after the civil war, associating himself with the Republican party in New Jersey, he was chosen to the State senate in 1873, and continued a member of that body until elected to the Senate of the United States. His influence in shaping public affairs steadily grew, and in the councils of his party in his own State he became the acknowledged and undisputed leader. In the larger field of national politics he was also potential.

Nearly everyone now a member of this Senate knew him well as a colleague, some for a long period of time. Those who served with him will bear me witness that here, as wherever else duty called him, he discharged every obligation with scrupulous fidelity. He did not aspire to the fame of an orator. He was essentially a man of action, not words. His ambition was to be known as a faithful, untiring, and effective worker. How well and aptly he might have said, speaking the words of one of Shakespeare's kingly characters:

> I profess not talking. Only this—
> Let each man do his part.

His favorite resort here was the committee room—that place where so much of the effective business of the Senate is transacted.

But if he shrank from public speaking, he was alert, active, tireless, and zealous in the performance of every duty. He was a man of strong and rugged character and when greatly moved by any cause near to his heart his whole nature became aroused and he could express himself with a directness and force clear, powerful, and convincing. Naturally a man of few words, he weighed his language carefully, but every utterance had its significance and place. I will quote one and only one sentence from the speeches of this taciturn man. It was upon an occasion when the conditions, the circumstances, the surroundings were all calculated to move him profoundly. He was about to retire from the senate of New Jersey, to sever connections which had lasted for years, and to take his seat as a Senator of the United States. As he arose at the call and amid the plaudits of his old friends, he said with much feeling:

> You will not hear from me as an orator, for I am a simple man, laboring as many hours a day as any mechanic in the State, but when the nation and State are attacked and need a bosom to be bared to meet the attack, mine will be bared.

These words furnish a key to his character.

Very much of his influence with his political as well as business associates grew out of the trait of character to which I have already alluded—the absolute dependence that could be put upon his promise. His personal integrity was unimpeachable. Under what appeared at times to be a rather cold and even haughty exterior he had a kind, sympathetic, and tender heart which moved him to do many acts of benevolence. His faithfulness to anyone who had obtained his confidence and esteem was proverbial. His friendship was as

Constant as the northern star,
Of whose true-fixed and resting quality
There is no fellow in the firmament.

To sum up the life and character of WILLIAM J. SEWELL, judging him by the standard of what he was and what he did, the facts lead to the inevitable conclusion that in his threefold capacity of citizen, soldier, and statesman he acquitted himself in a manner to reflect the highest credit upon the country that gave him free, ready, and largest opportunity to develop and bring into splendid fruition the varied and brilliant qualities born in him, upon the historic State that honored itself in long honoring him, and upon all who were concerned or associated with him in his noble and remarkably successful life work. His exalted quality of citizenship is attested by his achievements in the walks of peace, conspicuous among which was his evolution as a masterful developer of the great railroad system in which he started in a very humble capacity, and with which he was prominently identified nearly all his mature life. His character as a soldier, as incarnated in his deeds, proves him to have been a born commander, as full of sagacity as he was of courage, equally ready as he was resourceful, skillful, and efficient. In the Senate, first of the State he so much loved and so richly adorned and then of the nation whose Government and institutions he idolized, he bore himself from first to last as a wise, painstaking, and patriotic legislator.

There is only the assertion of a simple truth in saying, Mr. President, that the man whose very distinguished career closed upon the 27th day of December, 1901, and whose memory is the occasion of these justly deserved remembrances, was in all the relations of life, private as well as public—

Zealous, yet modest; innocent, though free;
Patient of toil, serene amidst alarms;
Inflexible in faith; invincible in arms.

The Senate thereupon, in accordance with the sixth resolution (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), adjourned, the adjournment being, under the order made this day, until Saturday, December 20, 1902, at 12 o'clock m.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

TIMBER AND STONE FOR RAILROAD PURPOSES IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the use of timber and stone for domestic and industrial purposes in the Indian Territory," approved June 6, 1900, be amended so as to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for the procurement of timber and stone for domestic and industrial purposes, including the construction, maintenance, and repairs of railroads and other highways, from lands belonging to either of the Five Civilized Tribes, and to fix the full value thereof to be paid therefor and collect the same for the benefit of said tribes: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent allottees from disposing of timber and stone on their allotments, as provided in section 16 of an act entitled 'An act for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes,' approved 1898, from and after the allotment by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes.

"SEC. 2. That every person who unlawfully cuts, or aids or is employed in unlawfully cutting, or wantonly destroys, or procures to be wantonly destroyed, any timber standing upon the lands of either of said tribes contrary to the provisions of this act and the regulations prescribed thereunder by the Secretary of the Interior, shall pay a fine of not more than $500, or be imprisoned not more than twelve months, or both, in the discretion of the court trying the same."

The following amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs were read:

After the word "highways," in line 11 of section 1, insert the following: "to be used only in the Indian Territory, or upon any railroad outside of the said Territory which is part of any continuous line of railroad extending into the said Territory."

After the word "approved," in line 5, section 1, page 2, insert "June 28."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DOUGHERTY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STATUES OF CHARLES CARROLL AND JOHN HANSON.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Chair will lay before the House a communication from the governor of the State of Maryland, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Annapolis, Md., December 15, 1902.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to inform you that in acceptance of the invitation contained in section 1814 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the general assembly of Maryland, by chapter 311 of the Acts of 1898, made an appropriation to procure statues of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and John Hanson, President of the Continental Congress of 1781 and 1782, to be placed in Statuary Hall, in the Capitol, at Washington, D. C.

By authority of the act of the general assembly of Maryland, the governor appointed John Lee Carroll, Douglas H. Thomas, Thomas J. Shryock, Fabian Franklin, and Richard K. Cross to constitute a commission to procure and have the statues erected.

I am informed by the commissioners that the statues were made by Mr. Richard E. Brooks, of Boston; that they are completed and have been placed in position, and are now ready to be presented to Congress.

As governor of the State of Maryland, therefore, I have the honor to present to the Government of the United States the statues of the distinguished statesmen named.

Very respectfully, JOHN WALTER SMITH,
Governor of Maryland.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the communication just read, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance from the State of Maryland of the statues of Charles Carroll of Carrollton and John Hanson, erected in Statuary Hall, in the Capitol, be made the special order for Saturday, January 31, 1903, at 3 o'clock p. m.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

On motion of Mr. PEARRE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 227. Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1902, on the 18th day of said month.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 6461. An act providing for an additional district judge in the district of Minnesota; and

S. R. 131. Joint resolution to purchase a bronze portrait bust of the late President McKinley from Mrs. Emma Cadwallader-Guild.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. MARTIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4850) to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs in the military or naval service of the United States, or are totally disabled in the same, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 6461. An act providing for an additional district judge in the district of Minnesota—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. R. 131. Joint resolution to purchase a bronze portrait bust of the late President McKinley from Mrs. Emma Cadwallader-Guild—to the Committee on the Library.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15140. An act providing that the circuit court of appeals of the fifth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Fort Worth, in the State of Texas, on the first Monday in November in each year; and

H. J. Res. 227. Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1902, on the 18th day of said month.

PENSION INCREASE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 4850) to increase pensions of those who have lost limbs in the military or naval service of the United States or are totally disabled in the same, with House amendments disagreed to by the Senate.

The House amendments were read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SULLOWAY, Mr. CALDERHEAD, and Mr. MIERS of Indiana.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16021, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MONDELL in the chair.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I raised the point of order as to the last sentence on page 80, line 12 to 18, inclusive. After investigating the matter as thoroughly as I could, I have come to the conclusion that the point of order is not well taken. I therefore ask unanimous consent to withdraw it, if that is the proper course to pursue.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to vacate the action of the committee on the point of order named by him on yesterday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem allowance for special agents, classification division, when actually traveling on business of the Post-Office Department, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not exceeding $4, and for other actual and necessary traveling expenses arising in connection with the business of the classification division, $7,000.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania why it is that the salary of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General is increased? It seems to me it is a well-known fact that the duties of that office are being rapidly decreased.

Mr. BINGHAM. Primarily the increase was recommended by the Postmaster-General. He believed that the heads of the respective divisions, his assistants, should receive an increased compensation. He recommended an increase of $1,000 in the salary of the First Assistant and of $500 each in the salaries of the Second, Third, and Fourth Assistants. As the work on the part of each of these gentlemen embodies about the same number of hours in labor, being somewhat on a par, your committee did not feel that it could discriminate in the matter of salaries in a continuance of one under current law and a lifting of the other three.

Therefore, without going into the details of the work and recognizing that they all work and give full service, your committee felt that it had better accept the recommendation of the Postmaster-General at this time and not increase one or two, because it would be only a question of a year when the others would come in and ask for an increase. The committee therefore gave the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Assistants each $500. That was the reason for the action of your committee.

Mr. MADDOX. Is it not true that the salaries of these gentlemen are fixed by law?

Mr. BINGHAM. By existing law at $4,000. I will state that this increase is subject to the gentleman's point of order, if he insists upon it.

Mr. MADDOX. I wish to ask the gentleman if it is not true that the duties of the office of the Fourth Assistant are decreasing all the time, every day, every hour, as the rural deliveries are started.

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not think there is any service in the Post-Office Department that is decreasing.

Mr. MADDOX. Not the Fourth Assistant's? Surely the gentleman must be mistaken about that. How many thousand offices have been abolished?

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state that he has the entire inspection of the service of the Post-Office Department under his control, not only the matter of the fourth-class post-offices, but the general inspection of the service of the postal administration.

Mr. MADDOX. Surely my friend will not insist that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General has under his control the inspection of the rural delivery. That is under the First Assistant Postmaster-General. All this business is being taken away from him gradually.

Mr. BINGHAM. The rural free delivery is under the First Assistant.

Mr. MADDOX. Yes, and the inspectors are under him.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, but I want to say this about the rural free delivery: It is just now for the first time in detail in this bill. We are endeavoring to organize that service, notwithstanding the increase that will doubtless be carried in the Post-Office bill for the extension of that service. Your committee hopes there will be such an organization in what might be called the headquarters division of administration; that there will be a reduction in the Post-Office Department in connection with the expense of rural free delivery. But, primarily, I repeat, we followed the recommendation of the Postmaster-General for these increases for all of his assistants.

Mr. MADDOX. What I wanted to call your attention to was this: It is apparent to everybody—everybody knows—that the duties devolving upon the office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General have decreased largely within the last twelve months, you might say, or within two years.

Mr. BINGHAM. In what respect?

Mr. MADDOX. Why, by the abolishing of fourth-class post-offices in the country.

Mr. McCLEARY. Oh, no.

Mr. MADDOX. Not all of them, but a great many of them. Where a rural free-delivery route is established, in nearly every instance three or four fourth-class post-offices go out of existence.

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not think the employment of the body of fourth-class postmasters took up much of the time of that department. I think his real body of work consists in his investigations and the superintendence of the whole service.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will suggest to the gentleman that that work is a very limited part of the work. Nearly all of those appointments are made upon the recommendation of members of Congress for these smaller post-offices, and all there is to do is to make out the appointments. That is a very limited part of the work, and it would not be fair to increase the other assistants of the Postmaster-General and not increase the Fourth Assistant.

Mr. MADDOX. Suppose we abolish all the fourth-class post-offices in the country, then what is your Fourth Assistant going to do?

Mr. HEMENWAY. He has charge of the inspection service.

Mr. MADDOX. Of what offices, the Presidential offices?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think of all the offices.

Mr. MADDOX. Not for the rural delivery. He has nothing to do with that.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am not familiar with all his duties, but he has numerous duties to perform, and the appointment of postmasters is only a limited part of the work.

Mr. BINGHAM. The compensation of fourth-class postmasters is based upon the certification of the Auditor in the adjustment of their accounts.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General has supervision of all the inspectors except the rural free-delivery service.

Mr. MADDOX. But if all the offices are abolished, then we will have no need of these inspectors. That is where the difficulty is.

Mr. HEMENWAY. A very limited number of offices, as far as business is concerned, are to be reduced by reason of the rural free-delivery service. All the offices in the towns of any size are continued, and the inspection service is a great service, and it must reach out to all of those offices.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman will turn to page 266 of the Congressional Directory, he will find there a statement concerning the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General and the details of his line of work. If the gentleman desires, I will read it. But I will say to the gentleman primarily, accepting the recommendation of the Postmaster-General, who is familiar with the whole question, we determined to make this increase, believing it was a reasonable and fair increase. If the gentleman thinks otherwise, he has his rights under the rules on a point of order.

Mr. MADDOX. I could have exercised my rights and made the point of order on all these gentlemen, but I am trying to find out, if I can, why the salary of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General should be increased.

Mr. BINGHAM. It will take but two minutes, if the gentleman desires it, to read to him a detailed statement of the work of that office, from the Congressional Directory.

Mr. BOWIE. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman from Georgia will yield.

Mr. BOWIE. It is on this particular point.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes.

Mr. BOWIE. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is not true that new fourth-class post-offices are being created nearly or quite as fast as others are being abolished by the rural free-delivery service? In other words, is it not true that the rural free-delivery service extends over only a small part of the country, and that in other parts of the country there is a continual increase in the number of these small offices?

Mr. BINGHAM. Without doubt. The establishment of fourth-class post-offices continue——

Mr. BOWIE. And if that does not equal approximately the decrease caused by the establishment of rural free-delivery routes?

Mr. BINGHAM. That still runs on, as the new offices are asked for by the different communities.

Mr. BOWIE. And if it is not true as a rule that the rural free-delivery routes are established only in what you might call closely settled districts?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, I think I can answer the question. I have the statement right here. I quote from the annual report of the Postmaster-General for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, page 24:

ESTABLISHMENT AND DISCONTINUANCE OF FOURTH-CLASS POST-OFFICES.

There were 3,038 post-offices established during the year and 4,059 discontinued. The principal cause of the discontinuance of so many post-offices was the extension of the rural free-delivery service and the establishment of rural free-delivery stations. The establishment of this service, of course, dispenses with fourth-class post-offices as does the extension of the city-delivery service to towns adjacent to large Presidential offices. During the year there were 1,906 post-offices discontinued owing to the establishment and extension of this rural service, the aggregate of the salaries of postmasters thereat being $116,807.

Now, then, my recollection is, and I can verify it in a moment, that there are about 80,000—between 70,000 and 80,000—post-offices, perhaps. So that there have been almost as many increases as there are decreases.

Mr. BOWIE. That was the point I was trying to bring out.

Mr. CANNON. Here is a great mountain of post-offices, any number, still in the service, and I have no doubt that they will not decrease greatly.

Mr. BOWIE. That was the point I was trying to make.

Mr. BINGHAM. I trust the gentleman will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. MADDOX. I will withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For postage stamps for correspondence addressed abroad which is not exempt from postage under article 8 of the Paris convention of the Universal Postal Union, $550.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 58 of the bill, and offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to return to page 58 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 21, page 58, after the words "confidential clerk," strike out "one thousand two hundred" and insert "eighteen hundred."

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no objection, Mr. Chairman.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 56, the last line on the page, for the purpose of striking out "$1,200," the salary given to the assistant in laboratory, and making it "$1,800," and I could explain the reason why I desire to move that amendment in a moment.

Mr. BINGHAM. I object to returning to that paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will you hear an explanation?

Mr. BINGHAM. With pleasure, and I withhold the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to return to page 56 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman desires to make an explanation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The reason for this request, Mr. Chairman, is this: The assayer of the Treasury Department here in Washington receives $2,200 per annum. He resigned in May this year. No one has been appointed to fill that position; but the assistant is filling the positions formerly filled by both these men. He is a very competent man and an excellent assayer. He has been in that position for twenty years and is only getting $100 a month, or $1,200 per annum. The assistants in some of the other United States assay offices get from $1,800 to $2,000 a year. It is unfair that this man should be held down to $1,200 when other men, performing the same service, get $1,800 or $2,000. The duties are very onerous, he is performing them well, and he deserves to have his salary raised from $1,200 to $1,800 because he is filling the position held by Professor Whitehead, the chief assayer, who has resigned. He could get in any good private assay office in this country twice the wages that he is now receiving.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is nothing in the Book of Estimates recommending promotion or an increase of his compensation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct; but when the matter is called to the attention of the House and it is shown that one of the employees of the Government is doing double duty, I think the House should see that he is given a fair compensation.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The question is continually before his chief, and certainly the chief should submit an item in the Book of Estimates if he considers him entitled to more compensation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The chief ought not to be permitted to keep this man doing the duty of two men; and if he has to do double duty, he ought to have double pay.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is absolutely within the power of the head man to give him the promotion to the place that is vacant.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This man has been performing double duty, and he ought to have more compensation.

Mr. BINGHAM. I decline to return to that page.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to return to page 56. Is there objection?

Mr. BINGHAM. I object to returning to the page.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making an inquiry purely. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] what is meant in the appropriation in this bill for items similar to the one on page 131, that we have just read: "For purchase, exchange, and keeping of horses"——

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman will permit me, these lines have been read, and other questions have been discussed; and I think he had better delay moving his amendment until we read the next paragraph.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I simply asked the question for the purpose of obtaining information.

Mr. HEMENWAY. This paragraph is not open now for discussion, as we have passed it. Of course, it is not in order to return to that, but the gentleman can make his motion on the next paragraph.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Chair will have to decide that. I thought it was to be read down to where it came to the end of the paragraph. I hope the gentleman can at least answer a question which is purely one of inquiry.

Mr. HEMENWAY. We want to pass this paragraph, and then the gentleman can make his inquiry on the next paragraph. The gentleman can then make his motion.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Office of the Attorney-General: For compensation of the Attorney-General, $8,000; Solicitor-General, $7,500; four Assistant Attorneys-General, at $5,000 each; Assistant Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department, $4,500; solicitor of internal revenue, $4,500; solicitor for the Department of State, $4,500; two assistant attorneys, at $3,000 each; four assistant attorneys, at $2,500 each; assistant attorney, $2,000; assistant attorney, in charge of dockets, $2,500; law clerk and examiner of titles, $2,700; chief clerk and ex officio superintendent of the building, $2,500; private secretary to the Attorney-General, $2,500; stenographer to the Solicitor-General, $1,600; two stenographic clerks, at $1,600 each; one law clerk, $2,500; two law clerks, at $2,000 each; three clerks of class 4; attorney in charge of pardons, $2,400; additional for disbursing clerk, $500; appointment clerk, $2,000; six clerks of class 3; three clerks of class 2; six clerks of class 1; telegraph operator and stenographer, $1,200; nine copyists; one chief messenger, $1,000; eight assistant messengers; four laborers; three watchmen; engineer, $1,200; two conductors of the elevator, at $720 each; eight charwomen; superintendent of building, $250; and three firemen; Division of Accounts: Chief of division of accounts, $2,500; four clerks of class 4; five clerks of class 3; six clerks of class 2; six clerks of class 1; two copyists; one packer, $840; in all, $183,570.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

Amend, by adding on page 134, at the end of line 18, the following:

"For the purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws of the United States, and to enable the Attorney-General of the United States to prosecute suits and legal proceedings against persons or corporations who shall violate the antitrust laws of the United States now in force, or that may hereafter be enacted, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may, in the judgment of the Attorney-General, be necessary; to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General, and he is hereby directed to proceed against any and all persons or corporations who may have violated or may violate any of the provisions of the antitrust laws of the United States."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask to have that amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I will make no point of order against that proposition.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this proposition is subject to a point of order. I have but little to say with reference to the amendment. It is a question in which the people are deeply concerned, and which has attracted the attention of the President of the United States, so much so that in his public speeches he has called the attention of the people to the trusts, and in his message to Congress at the opening of this session he recommended that a special appropriation for the purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws of the United States should be made by Congress, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General. The Appropriations Committee has not undertaken to comply, so far as I am aware, with that recommendation of the President.

The Attorney-General, in a speech delivered at Pittsburg on October 14 last, before the Chamber of Commerce, said to the American people that the law now on the statute book had been sufficient to enable the Government to prosecute these violators of the law—the trusts, and combinations in the shape of monopolies—and that if the present law is not effective Congress can, under its constitutional power, amend and extend the existing law so as to remedy any defects and effectively regulate national and foreign commerce so as to prevent the stifling of competition, and to destroy monopolies.

Therefore I have thought it proper to offer this amendment giving the Attorney-General this special fund to proceed against these violators of the law, and directing him to institute legal proceedings against them.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose the proposed amendment, but to call the attention of the committee to the fact that if such a proposition is deemed wise, the amendment should be perfected. Measures involving the same principle are now in the form of bills before the Judiciary Committee of the House and are now under fair and proper consideration. I do not care to raise the point of order against this amendment, although I think it is clearly subject to such a point. The committee should know, however, that this amendment will not be in legal form when it applies to the execution of antitrust laws. There is no such law known to the statutes as the "antitrust law."

There is a law of July 2, 1890, which I presume is intended to be referred to. There are also certain statutes under the internal-revenue laws which should be referred to in the same way, and rather than let the measure go in this incomplete condition the gentleman ought to agree to some change of language to perfect the amendment.

A bill has been sent for which contains the proper language, and I submit to the gentleman that he should consent to the perfection of this amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will consent to the perfection of this measure or to the doing of anything which will carry out the purpose of prosecuting the violators of these laws.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the campaign is over, and it is needless for the gentleman to spring any such language as that. If we are to have this legislation, it should be done sensibly and not in the spirit manifested by the gentleman from Georgia. I raise the inquiry whether it would not be better to let this measure go over until the committee which has it now under consideration shall report and perfect it in the language in which it should be placed upon the statute books.

I was about to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the laws themselves should be specifically mentioned and identified. The law of July 2, 1890, and the internal-revenue laws—the sections of the statutes I do not recollect—should be specifically referred to. I ask the gentleman from Georgia if it would not be better to withdraw his proposed amendment in order to perfect it. I may say—and I speak as a member of the committee which now has under consideration at least two bills involving this identical principle—that there has been no disposition to delay the consideration of either one of these measures. I think it is better that it should be taken up in the usual and proper way.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Has not the Attorney-General in various Administrations said repeatedly that the law of 1890, known as the Sherman law, could not be enforced because Congress had never provided him with the funds with which to carry out the provisions of the law?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am not familiar with any such declarations made, but I have no disposition to dispute the fact.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the Attorney-General has once so reported to Congress. I understand that the disposition here is not to create a new statute, but to provide the Attorney-General with the necessary funds by which he can enforce the law now on the statute books. If that is the case, it seems to me it is purely germane to the bill at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

That for the enforcement of the provisions of the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, and sections 73, 74, 75, and 76 of the act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and other purposes," approved August 27, 1894, the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not heretofore appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General in the employment of special counsel and agents of the Department of Justice to conduct proceedings, suits, and prosecutions under said acts in the courts of the United States: Provided, That no person shall be prosecuted or be subject to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, in any proceeding, suit, or prosecution under said acts: Provided further, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution or punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the proposition just read has been carefully prepared. It has been before the Committee on the Judiciary. I do not know that any action has been had upon it by that committee, but I am confident that it meets the approval of certain gentlemen on that committee. In my mind it is preferable to the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, and particularly in that it identifies the law referred to and gives an added probability of conviction, for without the language here used we might have difficulty in the way of prosecutions. Therefore I very much prefer the substitute just read.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I am familiar with the proposed amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa; in fact, it was offered by him, I believe, as a bill and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. My attention was drawn to it some weeks ago, and it seemed to me that it is an apt provision. I may add that I had in mind, in the event that no other legislation should be had before the reporting of the sundry civil bill—which would ordinarily be the bill to carry such an appropriation as this—to report, if my committee should agree with me, a provision similar to that now moved by the gentleman from Iowa.

But the gentleman from Georgia moved his amendment; no point of order was made upon it—the point, I think, being properly withheld—and that proposition is now before us for consideration. For one I am quite willing to settle it here, so far as we can, and would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he increase the sum from $250,000, as proposed in the substitute he moves, to $500,000, and that he make the appropriation immediately available. Without such a provision the appropriation would not be available until July 1.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out in my amendment "$250,000" and insert "$500,000," and to add the words "to be immediately available."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe there is very much of importance in this proposed legislation. The whole country has been agitated by the question, How shall we deal with the trusts and the combinations? Almost all associations of men that have met during the last six months have discussed this question. All the newspapers are discussing it. In my humble judgment, what we need is not legislation, but it is the enforcement of the laws now upon the statute books. There are difficulties in the way of such enforcement. Our system of prosecuting malefactors is perhaps not the most perfect one. Every gentleman will admit that the public prosecutors in Federal courts are not, as a rule, at the head of the bar to which they belong. They are always or nearly always inferior to some of their associates. The corporations secure the very best of talent—not one man, but they seek out and secure the services of a number of the most eminent in the legal profession. Not only that, they have the means of marshaling and procuring testimony, as the public prosecutor can not have.

There is no fund of which I have knowledge that can be used for the purpose of securing testimony; and our prosecutions have failed, not because the provisions of law were not ample, but because the facts needed to secure conviction could not be presented to the attention of the court. This proposition will obviate these difficulties.

I know that gentlemen will say that the Attorney-General now has the power to procure assistance for the district attorneys. But those men, if employed, will always be subordinate and inferior in authority in the prosecutions to the district attorneys. I believe the Attorney-General ought to have the power to go where he pleases and get whom he may, to secure the very best of legal talent, and then reenforce those temporary officers by placing at their disposal the means of securing the necessary proof.

I want to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to this fact: For years we had a statute which prohibited the granting of rebates by common carriers to shippers; for years it was believed that five great firms in the city of Chicago had been constantly violating that law in the receipt of thousands, and hundreds of thousands, and millions of dollars in the way of rebates upon their trade. The courts were absolutely powerless in the matter because the facts could not be presented. But about a year ago some of the carriers got to quarreling among themselves, and through these contentions the facts became public; and then, using the law that had been upon the statute books for fifteen years, but inoperative, the Interstate Commerce Commission were able to successfully prosecute suits that put an end to those grievances. It was not because the law was insufficient that these long delays in justice had been suffered; it was because of the want of funds to secure those facts absolutely necessary in order that the courts may act. Laws do not enforce themselves. The courts do not operate except as they are moved upon by the ordinary methods of procedure. And we would not have it otherwise. Now, this substitute meets the want from which we have suffered so long.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it lies in the mouth of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] to suggest that the elections are now over, and that this amendment is offered here now by me for political effect only. The committee of which the gentleman from Indiana is a distinguished and honored member has not for a number of years reported any bill or done anything else to relieve the country from the exactions of the trusts, not even when the President of the United States, in his message of December of last year as well as the one delivered to the House at the beginning of the present session, has recommended that some resolute and practical legislation should be enacted to correct the evil of the trusts. And I say that the gentleman does not stand in a position to complain when other members of this House see fit to propose that funds be put at the disposal of the Attorney-General with which to prosecute the trusts of this country. Therefore the criticism that the gentleman from Indiana has made upon the amendment offered by myself is not just or proper.

I offered this because this bill in which it is now proposed to provide funds for the Department of Justice did not contain any sum whatever for that purpose. I offered this because the President of the United States in his message to Congress on the 1st of December, at the opening of this session, recommended that Congress give to the Attorney-General a sufficient special appropriation to enforce the law against trusts and combinations. I offered this because it did not appear that any member of the majority intended to do anything to aid the Attorney-General, or do anything toward prosecuting the trusts of this country, or to carry out the recommendation of the President.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. The sundry civil bill, which is yet to be reported, carries appropriations for the Department of Justice for the enforcement of the law. This bill never has carried them and I am perfectly content that the gentleman should offer his amendment here, but we are not to be chargeable with default until the bill that ordinarily carries such appropriations is reported. Therefore, as the gentleman seems to be anxious that the bill which does not carry such appropriations should carry this amendment, this side of the House interposes no objection, although we are not subject to criticism because this bill did not carry it. It never did carry any appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from Illinois misunderstood me. I said the gentleman from Indiana, before whose committee these antitrust bills have been for years, has not reported any except the one which was reported just before election two years ago, and passed with the knowledge that it would sleep the sleep of eternal death in the Senate of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That has never been heard of since. The Republican party, Mr. Chairman, has been masquerading sufficiently before the country on the subject of their opposition to the trusts, and for one I want to put this amendment before the House that it may be voted on.

Now, I accept the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa, who I know is always in earnest about legislation that he undertakes to pass through this House. I know that he sympathizes with the effort on the part of the Attorney-General or on the part of the people to rid themselves of the oppression of the trusts, but I would suggest to him that he offer that as an amendment to mine instead of as a substitute, and leave in that part of my amendment contained in the latter three lines, which provides that "the Attorney-General is hereby directed to proceed against any and all persons or corporations who may have violated any of the laws" which the gentleman has named in his proposed substitute. I suggest to the gentleman that if he will offer his as an amendment to mine and leave that provision in I would be glad to accept it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would be willing to accept that if it did not contain a reflection on the officer. I do not believe it to be necessary to direct the Attorney-General to perform his duties. He is sworn to do that. The statute imposes the duty upon him, and I think he has shown a disposition to perform it. Now, why should we in this way put this affront upon him?

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa it is far from my purpose to make any reflection upon the Attorney-General of the United States. I think that that officer, inh is speech at Pittsburg before the Chamber of Commerce, which I have before me and which I would like to put into the RECORD, that the country might have it freely distributed, stated what was the correct law on the subject and the condition of affairs that existed and the right of the Government to now proceed against these violations of the law; and I have a high regard of his ability and believe him to be an honest and capable official.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that he may extend his remarks one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as it appears, as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, for whose opinion I have the greatest respect, that this might be a reflection upon the Attorney-General, and not intending to do any such thing, I am content to accept the substitute of the gentleman from Iowa. All I want is legislation on the subject and to give the Attorney-General means to prosecute these violations of the law. [Applause.]

By permission of the House, I append as part of my remarks the speech of the Attorney-General on the subject of the power of Congress to regulate, control, and defeat trusts, combinations, and monopolies. It is a most able and learned exposition of the law on this subject, and shows that if he uses the powers he possesses under the law the evils of the trust can and will be in a great measure remedied and eradicated.

Attorney-General Knox addressed the members of the Chamber of Commerce at the Hotel Schenley here to-night. There were 700 guests present. The subject of his address was "The commerce clause of the Constitution and the trusts."

The Attorney-General said:

"The people, by common consent, have denominated the great industrial and other corporations now controlling many branches of commercial business trusts. The technical accuracy of the term is unimportant, but indeed it is much more apt than might be supposed, when it is recalled that the essential difference between the old industrial trusts and the great corporations owning and controlling subsidiary ones is that in respect to the former the shares of independent corporations agreeing to act in harmony were lodged with a trustee who received the separate earnings and distributed them among the holders of trust certificates, while as to the latter, a corporation is created to take over the title to the stock or properties of the constituent companies and issue its own shares as the evidence of interest in the combination. The corporation owner of corporations invokes specific legal authority from the legislature of the State under which it is created.

"The President, in his first message to Congress, said:

"'There is a widespread, settled conviction in the minds of the American people that these trusts are, in many of their features and tendencies, hurtful to the general welfare. This springs from no spirit of envy or uncharitableness nor lack of pride in the great industrial achievements that have placed the country at the head of the nations struggling for commercial supremacy. It does not rest upon a lack of intelligent appreciation of the necessity of meeting changing and changed conditions of trade with new methods nor upon ignorance of the fact that combination of capital and effort to accomplish great things are necessary when the world's progress is demanding that great things be done. It is bottomed upon sincere conviction that combination and concentration, while not to be prohibited, are to be controlled, and in my judgment this conviction is right.'

NOT APPALLED BY SIZE.

"These great combinations, now numbering thousands, are the instrumentalities of modern commercial activity. Their number and size alone appall no healthy American. We are accustomed to large things and to do them in a large way. We are accustomed to speak with a justifiable pride of our great institutions and what we have fairly accomplished through them. No right-thinking man desires to impair the efficiency of the great corporations as instrumentalities of national commercial development. Because they are great and prosperous is no sufficient reason for their destruction. If that greatness and prosperity are not the result of the defiance of the natural rights or recorded will of the people, there is no just cause of complaint.

"That there are evils and abuses in trust promotions, purposes, organizations, methods, management, and effects none question except those who have profited by those evils. That all or any of these abuses are to be found in every large organization called a trust no one would assert who valued his reputation for sane judgment.

"The conspicuous noxious features of trusts existent and possible are these: Overcapitalization, lack of publicity of operation, discrimination in prices to destroy competition, insufficient personal responsibility of officers and directors for corporate management, tendency to monopoly and lack of appreciation in their management of their relations to the people, for whose benefit they are permitted to exist.

"Overcapitalization is the chief of these and the source from which the minor ones flow. It is the possibility of overcapitalization that furnishes the temptations and opportunities for most of the others. Overcapitalization does not mean large capitalization or capitalization adequate for the greatest undertakings. It is the imposition upon an undertaking of a liability without a corresponding asset to represent it. Therefore overcapitalization is a fraud upon those who contribute the real capital either originally or by purchase, and the efforts to realize dividends thereon from operations is a fraudulent imposition of a burden upon the public. When a property worth a million dollars upon all the sober tests of value is capitalized at five millions and sold to the public, it is rational to assume that its purchasers will exert every effort to keep its earnings up to the basis of their capitalization. When the inevitable depression comes, wages must be reduced, prices enhanced, or dividends foregone. As prices are naturally not increased but lowered in dull periods, it usually resolves itself into a question of wages or dividends.

STORM CENTERS OF DISTURBANCE.

"While this condition may exist under any circumstances, it is exaggerated by overcapitalization in the illustrating case five to one. The overcapitalization securities enter into the general budget of the country, are bought and sold, rise and fall, and they fluctuate between wider ranges, and are more sensitive in proportion as they are further removed from intrinsic values, and, in short, are liable to be storm centers of financial disturbances of far-reaching consequence. They also, in the same proportion, increase the temptation to mismanagement and manipulation by corporate administrators.

"Corporations and joint-stock or other associations, depending upon any statutory law for their existence or privileges, trading beyond their own State, should be required to do business in every State and locality upon precisely the same terms and conditions. There should be no discrimination in prices; no preferences in service. Such corporations serving the public as carriers and in similar capacities should be compelled to keep the avenues of commerce free and open to all upon the same terms and to observe the law as to its injunctions against stifling competition. Moreover, corporations upon which the people depend for the necessaries of life should be required to conduct their business so as regularly and reasonably to supply the public needs.

"They should be subject to visitorial supervision, and full and accurate information as to their operations should be made regularly at reasonable intervals. Secrecy in the conduct and results of operation is unfair to the nonmanaging stockholders, and should, as well for reasons of state, be prohibited by law.

"If these serious evils were eradicated and a higher measure of administrative responsibility required in corporate officers, a long step would be taken toward allaying the reasonable apprehension that the unchecked aggression of the trusts will result in practical monopoly of the important business of the country.

DIFFICULTY IN FINDING REMEDY.

"Less difficulty is encountered in describing the mischief of trusts than in suggesting a rational and practical remedy.

"The Constitution provides (Article III, section 8): The Congress shall have power 'to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes.'

"Congress July 2, 1890, enacted that every contract, combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States is illegal, providing punishments and conferring jurisdiction upon Federal circuit courts to prevent and restrain violations of the act. It was commonly supposed at the time of the passage of this act that its provisions forbade the existence of trusts that were engaged in monopolizing the production throughout the country of various articles of general consumption, and the Government shared in this view. Action was begun by the United States against what was known as the sugar trust. This was a corporation of the State of New Jersey, which had acquired the stock of a number of sugar-refining corporations in another State by an exchange of its own shares for the shares of the vending stockholders of those companies. It was formed, as its charter stated, for the purpose of 'buying, manufacturing, refining, and selling sugar in different parts of the country.'

"The Government's contention was that the purpose of the purchase was to acquire a substantial monopoly of sugar refining, and as the product was for sale and distribution among the States and to foreign countries that the arrangement was a violation of the law cited. The contract challenged was one vesting in the trust the last of the independent refineries but one in the United States, thereby giving it the almost complete monopoly of a necessary of life. Its control was 98 per cent of the whole. The Supreme Court decided that as the monopoly was in the production or manufacture of sugar and its sale or distribution among the States and to foreign countries was but incidental thereto it was not within the prohibition of the law, saying that manufacturing, although it precedes commerce, is not a part of it, and that the act only applied to restraints of commerce.

"This distinction is easily understood when it is recollected that commerce means intercourse, transmission, communication, transportation, and commerce among the States, the regulation of which rests in the Federal power, means, as the term implies, that this intercourse shall be between or among the States.

"Manufacturing, on the other hand, does not imply or necessitate intercourse among the States, but implies a situs or place for its operations?

DESTROYED PIPE COMBINATION.

"In a subsequent case the Government destroyed a combination known as the Addyston Pipe Combination, but upon the ground that it was a conspiracy among independent producers of pipe to restrain its sale and distribution among the States. The combination in this case operated directly upon interstate commerce.

"These cases seem to define the scope of the antitrust law and show how little there is now left for the statute to operate upon. It is not enough, it seems, that a trust or combination owning corporations exists, or that it is engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, for its mere engaging in commerce is not prohibited, or that it monopolizes production throughout the country, or that it is formed to restrain or monopolize business within a State, or destroys competition in buying or selling within a State, or that by any of these things it indirectly affects interstate commerce with a practical restraint or monopoly, to bring the corporation or its particular transaction within the emphatic clauses or under the drastic penalties of the antitrust law. What seems to be necessary is to establish by legal proof in court a combination for the direct monopolizing or restraining of what is strictly interstate commerce, and to prove this against combinations whose affairs are conducted upon the best legal advice as to what is and what is not obnoxious to the law, by methods secret or ingeniously contrived to avoid the letter of the law.

"I want to call your attention to this law, not in a spirit of criticism, but to show you clearly how far it went and where it stopped.

"It undertook to invalidate all attempts to monopolize interstate commerce, which includes, among other things mentioned, transportation, but it did not invalidate monopolies of production or regulate commerce in such a way as to free it from the restraints such monopolies directly impose. The court did not say that these indirect effects upon interstate commerce could not be prevented by Congress. It is earnestly contended by many that as it stands this law expresses the limit of Federal power in that direction. But has not Congress the power, by its regulation, to protect commerce between the States from being restrained by State corporations and combinations engaged in interstate trade, when their purpose or effect is to destroy the freedom of such interstate trade, and when their operations are besides injurious to the general public?

LEAVE STATE POWER FREE.

"Regulation under such a power would not interfere with mere production or the power of the State over production. It would only affect them remotely and incidentally, just as a monopoly that produces all or most of a certain line of goods affects commerce indirectly.

"If it be true that a State can authorize or permit a monopoly of production within its borders because it has the power over production as such, although it indirectly affects interstate commerce, may not the United States regulate interstate commerce, over which it has exclusive control, even though it indirectly affects production, over which, as such, it has no control?

"If Congress, under its power to regulate interstate commerce, may utterly destroy a combination and forfeit its property in interstate transit, as the Sherman Act provides, because it restrains such commerce, it seems reasonable to say that it can in the exercise of the same power deny to a combination whose life it can not reach the privilege of engaging in interstate commerce, except upon such terms as Congress may prescribe to protect that commerce from restraint. Such a regulation would operate directly upon commerce and only indirectly upon the instrumentalities and operations of production.

"If the Sherman Act exhausts the power of Congress over monopolies, the American people find themselves hopelessly impotent, facing a situation fraught with the most alarming possibilities, with which neither the Federal nor State governments can deal.

"While States may regulate the production and sale of articles within their own borders, at these borders their authority ceases.

"Jefferson, in his letter of March 15, 1789, to Madison, says of the Constitution: 'This instrument forms us into one state as to certain objects, and gives us a legislative and executive body for those objects.'

"One hundred years later the Supreme Court of the United States declared 'that in the matter of interstate commerce the United States are but one country, and are and must be subject to one system of regulations, and not to a multitude of systems.'

"These are illuminating and vital statements of the original purpose in founding this Government to provide for national control of intercourse and of the extent of the national power over it. The statements were made, respectively, by that great leader of the constructive period who was most jealous for the reserved rights of the States against the encroachment of the new national sovereignty and by one of the wisest judges who have interpreted the Constitution's purposes and meaning.

"In the light of such statements, then, can it be possible that the people of the United States, feeling the pressure of undoubted evils, are nevertheless totally powerless? Is it true that although they know with growing certainty the nature of the wrong and are seeking a remedy, the Constitution as it stands does not permit them to pursue it; that amendment to that charter is first necessary; that the power of Congress does not now extend over detriments injuring the entire body of citizens in their most vital concerns because these detriments originate in the States, although the States in the aggregate, and by the cooperation which is essential, do nothing effective to remove them?

"I do not believe that we find ourselves so helpless. When the currents of monopoly evil obviously flow out over State lines and cover the country, not only entering but largely filling the channels of interstate and foreign trade, it will not do to say that the evil is beyond the national reach, and that because the first step which may lead to the evil is production, which must have a fixed situs within a State, the States alone may deal with it.

"If the States are a nation for some purposes, as Jefferson said, with full legislative and executive power, and exclusive regulation of interstate commerce is one of these purposes, as the Supreme Court has decided, it would seem monstrous to urge that Congress and the Executive under its authority are powerless and must sit idly by and see the channels of interstate commerce made use of to the injury of the people by monopolistic combinations.

"Plainly the power must reside somewhere, either in the nation or in the States' reservations; but the effect of present doubts is to create a dilemma under which, apparently, all power vanishes, the States saying, "Some of us do and some of us do not approve or permit monopolistic production; that is our concern, but when the products cross our borders the problem passes beyond us and becomes a matter of national regulation and control;' and the nation appearing to reply, 'I can deal with commerce passing beyond any one State, but effective regulation here may indirectly interfere with production, and that is a State matter which I may not touch.' And so the national and local sovereignties halt and the delictum escapes. The Supreme Court has characterized the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, like the related and sometimes auxiliary power to tax, in terms broad and absolute; it has defined this commerce in language which is inclusive of all phases of interstate intercourse, exchange, and trade; it has merely said that production, under an initial phase of modern consolidations which primarily, at least, regards production alone, is not such commerce. I do not think it can be said that the court has gone beyond this point.

THE METHOD OF PROCEDURE.

"Conceding that the present law is not effective throughout the situation, we come to the final alternative: May not Congress, under the existing constitutional grants, amend and extend the law, and thus remedy its defects and so effectively regulate national and foreign commerce as to prevent the stifling of competition, the regulating of output and price, and the restraining of national and international trade? If the answer to this question should be in the affirmative, a second question follows: How might Congress so amend the present law?

"I do not scruple to say that in my judgment the more a thoughtful mind reflects on the first question the more unhesitatingly will an affirmative answer be returned.

"That regulation by Congress in this way would indirectly or remotely affect production would be no bar. The very point of the sugar-trust case was that a consolidated scheme of production might lead to commerce, or might indirectly or remotely affect commerce, but did not for that reason invoke the Federal power over commerce; and the illustration from the converse of the situation is significant on the point just stated.

"Congress under this power prevents the importation or transportation of articles deemed injurious to the general welfare. Thus the laws subject the movement of explosives to safeguards and burdens, absolutely excludes impure literature and diseased cattle, convicts and contract labor, and scrutinizes and prevents or checks many foreign and interstate movements throughout the entire field of international and national intercourse in the interest of all the people on grounds of commercial, hygienic, or ethical policy. Who shall set limits now, in advance of a carefully framed and judicially tested law, to the competence of Congress to regulate commerce in the way suggested in the exercise of the legislative wisdom and in the wide discretion confided to it? Who shall say that the power of Congress does not extend so far? I think it does. I am quite sure no one can now say that it does not.

"Every constitutional question is an open one until it is authoritatively closed by a decision of the Supreme Court.

"The President said in his first message he did not think the authority of Congress to protect the people against the evils of the trusts had been exhausted. The views I have expressed are but an amplification of his.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT IS AROUSED.

"Public sentiment is sufficiently aroused and the situation is sufficiently grave to call for the effort the President is making to secure an authoritative exposition of existing laws and suggesting additional ones, to the end that the public mind shall be set at rest and these economic questions taken from the domain of controversy and uncertainty.

"And now a word as to what has been undertaken and accomplished under many and peculiar embarrassments in the way of executing existing laws.

"In the early part of this year it came to the knowledge of the President that great railway systems in the Middle West, upon which every section of the country is dependent for the movement of breadstuffs, had entered into unlawful agreements to transport the shipments of a few favored grain buyers at rates much below the tariff charges imposed upon smaller dealers and the general public. This injustice prevailed to such an extent and for so long a time that most of the smaller shippers had been driven from the field and the business formerly enjoyed by them absorbed by a limited number of persons who received secret and preferential rates. In a word, there was practically only one buyer on each railway system, and the illegal advantages he secured from the carrier gave him a monopoly of the grain trade on the line with which his secret compact was made.

"In the earlier period of this discriminating practice it is probably true that the producer obtained a price for his grain slightly in excess of its market value at the place of shipment; but that result followed only during the short time that the nonfavored dealer continued in business. When he was forced to the wall, as he soon was, the only buyer whom the producer could reach was the party who had bargained with the carrier for an unlawful trade. Thus competition in the grain business was destroyed, and the price actually realized by the farmer was frequently less than the proper market value. A favored middleman, by connivance with the railroad, monopolized the grain products of a large area of country, and virtually fixed the price both to the producer and the consumer.

CONDITION AN ODIOUS ONE.

"It was an odious condition. Nor does this describe the full measure of wrongdoing. It reached the centers of trade and affected related industries with more or less disaster. In Kansas City, for example, it was asserted that local dealers had been excluded from participation in the grain trade; that their elevators for the storage and transshipment of grain, built at great expense for the demands of an important market, had been deprived of business, and that large numbers of laborers had lost employment and remained in idleness, solely because of the diversion of business from its natural channels as the result of this forbidden monopoly in the purchase and transportation of grain.

"The board of trade of that city presented a complaint to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that body conducted an investigation which disclosed, with convincing particularity and detail, the facts already summarized. That they are true in substance and effect is not seriously disputed in any quarter. The Commission also, about the same time, held another investigation, and reported to the Department of Justice that the six largest meat-packing concerns, popularly known as the 'beef trust,' were in a combination with each other and with many great railway lines, whereby they secured large secret concessions in rates for the transportation of their products, which enabled them to practically monopolize the fresh and cured meat industry of the United States.

"Acting upon this information, which discloses definite and probable facts, bills for injunctions were immediately filed against the principal railroads implicated to restrain them from giving preference to any shipper in the rates or facilities of transportation. In March last there were instituted by the Government in the United States circuit court at Chicago six suits in equity against offending railroad companies, and simultaneously eight additional suits were begun against other railroads at Kansas City. In each instance temporary injunctions were granted, which are still in force, restraining the defendant railroads from paying any rebates or granting any preferences whatever to any shipper, so that all persons should stand on an even footing in respect of transportation over the enjoined roads.

"It was not practicable, of course, nor desirable to bring injunction suits against all the railroads in the United States, but it was believed, in thus proceeding against 14 of the most influential lines and having the interlocutory decree of two very eminent Federal judges to the effect that the facts alleged in the bills entitled the Government to the powerful remedy of injunction, that the other carriers would thereafter conform to the law and abstain from illegal practices. How salutary and wholesome the effect has been ask any fair-minded railway manager, who is now enabled to adjust his business freed from the stress of competition with law-breakers, or any honest shipper upon the defendant roads. It is believed that with few exceptions since the issuing of these injunctions the open tariffs have been applied and uniform rates charged to large and small shippers alike. The small grain buyers in the West have resumed operations, the elevators that were closed are doing a profitable business, and the workmen are again employed.

NEFARIOUS BUSINESS MUST STOP.

"In a few cases the Department has been informed that certain railway officials who were not enjoined have taken advantage of the restraint placed upon their competitors and been led by cupidity to seek unlawful earnings by according secret rates to increase their business at the expense of roads under injunction. Several of these officials have been indicted already, and more will be if evidence of their misconduct can be procured. And in this connection I take occasion to say that the efforts of the Commission to stop rate cutting, and all similar offenses, will be constantly aided by the Department of Justice and every official under its direction. This nefarious business is to be stopped if it is in the power of the Administration to stop it.

"Another direction in which kindred effort has been made to enforce the law and prevent the abuse of monopoly deserves a word of comment. The cotton interests of the South—growers, buyers, and shippers—complained of the hardships and injury suffered by them from the methods of the railroads in that section in handling and transporting the cotton output. These carriers, by combined action, denied the right of routing to the shippers—that is to say, the right of the shipper to prescribe over what route his goods should pass, and by agreement with each other determined the lines which should move this important product and the percentage of total shipments which each line should transport. In other words, there was a pooling arrangement between the railroads in respect of this traffic in distinct violation of the Federal statute.

"As the result of information, secured with much difficulty, respecting this forbidden practice a number of indictments were obtained against the offending roads and their principal traffic officers. At first the indicted carriers showed an intention to continue their unlawful combination, and steps were taken by the department to institute similar prosecutions against the same and other carriers for like misconduct at other points in the cotton section. Since that time, however, the roads have receded from their position. They now accord to shippers the right to route their traffic, and avow their purpose strictly to observe the law.

"The remarkable advance in the price of meats, coupled with the disclosures elicited by the Commission respecting secret rebates enjoyed by the great packing houses, and other information obtained by the Department of Justice, induced it to direct an investigation into the methods of the so-called 'beef trust,' as a result of which bills were filed under the Sherman anti-trust law and injunctions issued restraining each of the 6 defendant concerns from combining or agreeing upon the prices at which they would sell their products in States other than those where it is prepared for market, and likewise restraining them from combining and agreeing upon cartage charges for delivering their shipments at destination.

QUESTION OF CONTROL RAISED.

"Under the rules of the Federal courts, after the writs of injunction were issued the defendants had until midsummer to answer or demur to the Government's bill of complaint. They chose to demur to the bill, which raises the question whether, on the facts stated, and under the Constitution and existing law, they are amenable to the control of the Federal Government.

"The Northern Pacific and Great Northern railroads, having their eastern termini at the head of Lake Superior, and extending westwardly via Minneapolis and St. Paul to the Pacific Ocean, occasionally intersecting and again separating, and generally no farther distant from each other than 100 miles, and being in 1901 practically the only competitors in the transportation of traffic to and from most of the States traversed by them, combined together and purchased the capital stock of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad system. Thus those two transcontinental lines became the joint owners of another great system which was gradually pushing its rails northwesterly into the territory occupied by the purchasers and westwardly to the Pacific Ocean.

"To effect this purchase the Northern Pacific and Great Northern companies issued joint bonds for $200,000,000. Shortly after the purchase of the Burlington road the principal owners of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern roads caused to be organized under the laws of New Jersey the Northern Securities Company, with a nominal capital of $400,000,000, of which $30,000 was paid in. That company was organized to become the owner of the capital stock of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern railroad companies, and this was accomplished by an exchange of the stock of the New Jersey corporation for the stock of the two railroad companies at such a price that if the securities company got all of the stock of both roads its entire $400,000,000 of capital would be absorbed in the exchange.

"At the time of the purchase of the Burlington road the capital stock of the three railroad systems was about $390,000,000. That was the capital upon which the combined traffic carried by those roads might, after paying expenses of operation, reasonably be expected to provide dividends. By the bond issue to secure the Burlington and the inflation of the 'securities' capital that same traffic is now expected to provide dividends upon more than two hundred millions of stock in addition to the original $390,000,000.

DEPARTMENT BROUGHT SUIT.

"When the Department came into possession of these facts a suit in equity was at once begun to restrain the operation of the proposed merger and to restore the independence of these transcontinental railroads as competing lines, which suit is now pending.

"Here, then, are four phases of the attack on combinations in restraint of trade and commerce—the railroad injunction suits, the cotton pool cases, the 'beef trust' cases, and the Northern Securities case. The first relates to the monopoly produced by secret and preferential rates for railroad transportation, the second to railroad traffic pooling, the third to a combination of independent corporations to fix and maintain extortionate prices for meats, and the fourth to a corporation organized to merge into itself the control of parallel and competing lines of railroad and eliminate competition in their rates of transportation.

"There appears to be no doubt of the facts as set out in the bills filed in these various cases. The combinations proceeded against are in some respects different from those considered in cases that have been decided by the Supreme Court, and it is said by their organizers that they have avoided the prohibitions of the anti-trust law. The Department of Justice, being of opinion that they are each in violation of that law, found it to be its manifest duty to so advise the President, with the result which is known to all.

"My whole purpose in what I have said is to challenge the proposition that we are hopelessly helpless under our system of government to deal with serious problems which confront us in respect to our greatest interests. Since the radical questions of human rights and human governments have been settled, the production, preservation, and distribution of wealth receive the chief attention of civilized peoples.

"The extent to which legislative control over commercial activities should be exercised is, of course, a question for legislative wisdom. We have the experience of the other nations to guide us in determining how far the delicate and mysterious rules of trade can be interfered with by positive statutes without injury. That experience teaches us that the least interference consistent with the preservation of essential rights should exist. Arbitrary regulations that restrain free intercourse are usually found to be unwise.

CRIMES AGAINST COMMON LAW.

"Primarily it is for the Congress to decide whether it has the power and whether and to what extent it will execute it; what character of restraints, whether all or those only which are unreasonable and injurious, shall fall under the ban; whether legislation in the first instance should extend to all commerce or only to commerce in articles of vital importance to the people. The time never was when the English-speaking people permitted the articles necessary for their existence to be monopolized or controlled, and all devices to that end found condemnation in the body of their laws. The great English judges pronounced that such manifestations of human avarice required no statute to declare their unlawfulness; that they were crimes against common law—that is, against common right.

"It is difficult to improve upon the great unwritten code known as the common law. Under its salutary guaranties and restraints the English-speaking people have attained their wealth and power. It condemns monopoly, and contracts in restraint of trade as well. The distinction, however, between restraints that are reasonable in view of all the circumstances and those which are unreasonable is recognized and has been followed in this country by the courts.

"This distinction makes a rule that may be practically applied, and preserves the rational mean between unrestrained commerce and the absolute freedom of contract.

"A law regulating interstate commerce for its protection against restraint, so broad as to cover all persons whose business is conducted under agreements which are in any way or to any extent in restraint of trade, might exclude thousands of small concerns conducting industries in one State from marketing their products in others; but a law which only covers contracts and combinations in restraint of trade as defined by the common law would exclude all hurtful combinations and conspiracies. Congress can, if it sees fit, adopt the scheme of that law. In the enforcement of such law each case as it arose would be considered upon its own facts, and the rule of guidance would be as laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States—that is, 'public welfare is first considered, and if it be not involved and the restraint upon one party is not greater than protection to the other party requires, the contract may be sustained. The question is whether, under the particular circumstances of the case and the nature of the particular contract involved in it, the contract is or is not reasonable.'

FREEDOM OF CONTRACTS.

"Let me give you an illustration showing the difference between a reasonable and unreasonable arrangement or contract at common law. First, as to a reasonable one:

"The case of a sale of a business and its good will is a good illustration. Here a restricted covenant upon the part of the vender not to engage in competition in a similar business is often the main consideration for the transaction. This covenant is, of course, in restraint of trade and interferes with competition. But to make a contract such as this illegal is not only restrictive of the liberty of contract, but it is depriving one of his property without due process of law. Good will is property capable of being appraised, bought, and sold. In many cases it is the main ingredient of value. It represents all the struggle, industry, tact, and judgment that makes success. In estimating the worth of a business it is not infrequently reckoned more valuable than the buildings and machinery that make up the physical plant. Such a contract has been held reasonable and valid.

"Now as to an unreasonable agreement, let me quote an illustration from the pen of a justice of the supreme court:

"In Morris Run Coal Company v. Barclay Coal Company (in the supreme court of Pennsylvania) the principal question was as to the validity of a contract made between five coal corporations of Pennsylvania, by which they divided between themselves two coal regions of which they had the control. The referee in the case found that these companies acquired under their arrangement the power to control the entire market for bituminous coal in the northern part of the State, and their combination was, therefore, a restraint upon trade and against public policy. In response to the suggestion that the real purpose of the combination was to lessen expenses, to advance the quality of coal, and to deliver it in the markets intended to be supplied in the best order to the consumer, the supreme court of Pennsylvania said:

"'This is denied by the defendants, but it seems to us it is immaterial whether these positions are sustained or not. Admitting their correctness, it does not follow that these advantages redeem the contract from the obnoxious effects so strikingly presented by the referee. The important fact is that these companies control this immense coal field; that it is the great source of supply of bituminous coal to the State of New York and large territories westward; that by this contract they control the price of coal in this extensive market, and make it bring sums it would not command if left to the natural laws of trade; that it concerns an article of prime necessity for many uses; that its operation is general in this large region, and affects all who use coal as a fuel, and this is accomplished by a combination of all the companies engaged in this branch of business in the large region where they operate. The combination is wide in scope, general in its influence, and injurious in effects. These being its features, the contract is against public policy, illegal, and, therefore, void.'

FOR COURTS TO DETERMINE.

"The question of reasonableness is thus one for the courts to determine, and it is manifest that this doctrine gives play to just considerations of the freedom and inviolability of contracts with proper judicial safeguards against unconscionable arrangements rightly void as contrary to public policy. The Sherman Act is entitled 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints,' etc., and the able dissenting opinion in one of the leading cases in the Supreme Court argues from this indication and other considerations that the restraints intended to be stricken off were only those unreasonable restraints as defined at common law. But the law was authoritatively decided to include all restraints, whether reasonable or unreasonable.

"Nevertheless, in extending the law it might be deemed wise by Congress now to import and impose this distinction clearly for the following reasons among others: Because the hard and fast extreme rule may work injustice in various instances where a moderate restraint is either not harmful at all to the general interests or only slightly so in comparison with the importance of the freedom and sacredness of many contracts which public policy does not manifestly condemn; because the question of reasonableness, as in the common law, should be for the courts—surely the safest arbiter and reliance in human disputes—and because, from the economic standpoint, freer play would thus be given, and perhaps 'a way out' indicated, in the conflict between the important principles of free competition and combination.

"We have no certain knowledge of the nature and effect of the natural laws which are carrying forward evolution in economic and social phenomena as in all other branches of biology, but we may be confident that in some sort and with whatever perversions, public policies, constitutional charters of government, and municipal laws roughly manifest these natural laws and reflect their main tendencies. Proper free play of forces might be maintained by importing into the situation the idea of 'reasonableness' and judicial determination thereof for the control of unnecessarily destructive competition, and for preventing the opposite danger by devising a system of regulation which would strike the evils of combination at the heart and aid in the great object of restraining hurtful restraints and monopolies, especially as to the prime necessities of life.

"The conditions of our commercial life are, as I have said, the result in part of an evolution of forces of world-wide operation. They have developed gradually and are not, perhaps, fully understood. Laws regulating and controlling their operation, before they ripen into a complete system of wise jurisprudence, will be of gradual growth."

Mr. COCHRAN. I concur in some degree with the views of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], but dissent from his contention that the Sherman law has remained on the statute books for fifteen years a dead letter, solely because the Attorney-General has had no funds at his disposal with which to prosecute offenders. Although the great monopolies, commonly called trusts, are unlawful, neither their formation nor their lawless conduct has been shielded by secrecy, or even attempt at secrecy.

The Attorney-General has needed no detectives to ferret out the facts. The newspapers have chronicled every step by which these monopolies have been created. The public prosecutors and judges of courts have known when and where they were formed, the methods used in their formation, and the purposes for which they have been formed. They, in common with the rest of us, have read at the breakfast table in the morning papers detailed accounts of the proceedings by which each of the great monopolies was established. Gentlemen representing rival railroads have met in the public parlors of hotels and there agreed that upon a certain day an increased rate should be enforced by what has been called at one time a "pooling arrangement," at another a "traffic arrangement," and at another a "gentlemen's agreement." The proceedings have appeared next morning in the newspapers. These unlawful combinations have had different names, but always the same effect—the suppression of competition contrary to law. I reiterate the statement that all this has been publicly done. The same is true of other unlawful combinations.

Mr. Chairman, in common with private citizens, who bear the burdens inflicted by this infamous system, Attorneys-General, Federal court judges, United States district attorneys, and United States marshals have known all these facts. The Attorneys-General have not caused the indictment of the offenders, the district attorneys have confined their attention to petty offenders, and the marshals and their deputies have confined their attention to violators of the revenue laws.

Had the courts exhibited the same disposition to punish the general manager of the railroad that they have on occasions shown to punish the baggage master and the brakeman for violating laws and injunctions, there would have been found means ample for the purpose of enforcing this statute.

If what I have said be true, we must look a little further than was indicated by the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to ascertain why the Sherman law has not been enforced. Presidents, Cabinets, courts, and prosecutors have deliberately ignored it and allowed it to remain a dead letter.

I recall the fact that when recently the President indicated a disposition to enforce this statute, the great bankers and financial potentates, who in recent years have figured as the chief advisers of Presidents and Cabinets, said in the public prints, in interviews, that they were astounded that the President should now resurrect a law that from the start had been treated as a dead letter. These captains of industry and masters of finance declared in these interviews that any attempt to enforce the law was a menace to the general welfare, an assault upon "business interests," and because heretofore the public authorities have refrained from its enforcement, denounced any effort to enforce it as anarchistic and revolutionary.

Here we have the truth. The public authorities have permitted the formation of these combinations by proceedings as deliberate, as orderly, and as public as this session of the House of Representatives, with no effort to prevent their formation or punish the guilty parties. At last, when, under a pressure of public sentiment, to meet the exigencies of a political campaign, the President intimated that prosecutions would be entered upon, the offenders pleaded prolonged immunity and the flagrancy of their lawlessness as a reasonable bar to the proceedings. Some of them arraigned the President as a disturber of the business of the country, and all of them insisted that the proposal to curb the monopolies was a menace to "business interests."

Mr. Chairman, the Sherman law has not been enforced because those charged with the duty have not desired its enforcement. The individual who has been injured by monopoly is loth to enter a civil action, because the tedious and expensive remedy thus sought would cost more than could be recovered. Meantime the criminal statutes have been held applicable to the petty offender, to the violator of the excise laws, to the smuggler of a few dollars' worth of dutiable goods. The public prosecutors and judges who direct the movements of grand juries are responsible for the fact that this law has remained so long a dead letter upon the statute books.

Mr. Chairman, the immunity of the trust managers from punishment is easily explained. Federal judges, Attorneys-General, and public prosecutors in the Federal courts have not been drawn from circles interested in the enforcement of this law. The discussion of the subject shows two schools of thought, widely divergent, and the disputants are equally honest. On one side are arrayed those who believe that it is in the very philosophy of things unescapable that consolidation and concentration shall go on and on, until the reign of the monopolist is universal.

The time of Mr. COCHRAN having expired, by unanimous consent, on his request, it was extended five minutes, and he proceeded with his remarks, as follows:

Mr. COCHRAN. Advocates of this view tell us that modern inventions and modern methods are the forces at work, and that trusts and monopolies are the unescapable consequence. Predicating all their arguments in defense of this system upon this contention, they insist that to attempt to prevent the reign of monopoly is futile resistance of the inevitable. I believe that as to many, if not all, who urge this view, it is plain that they do not regard the prevention of monopoly as desirable.

Is it saying too much to assert that from classes entertaining this view and some entertaining even more extreme views of the same kind, without a single exception during all the period in which these wrongs have been practiced, the Federal judiciary and the prosecutors of the Federal courts have been drawn? I declare that, in my opinion, to this fact alone—the selection of all court officers, judges, and prosecutors, from circles bitterly opposed to anticorporation legislation—are attributable, first, the utter failure to enforce the Sherman law and other similar legislation, and, second, the growing conviction that if we are to get rid of trusts and monopolies we must first get rid of corporation counsel in high places in the judiciary and law department of the Government.

Opposed to the theory which teaches that the modern monopoly is the creature of evolution and unescapable is the belief that licensed avarice and uncurbed lawlessness are the progenitors of monopoly. Mr. Chairman, I believe the masses are of this opinion. Furthermore, the people can no longer be deluded as to who is responsible for the failure to enforce the law. The remedies placed within reach of individuals will never be resorted to, if for no other reason, because generally no aggrieved individual could bear the expense of their enforcement. These remedies will never be invoked for the purpose of suppressing monopoly. What is everbody's business is nobody's business. Therefore we must look to the courts, to grand juries, and to the public prosecutors for relief. And what is the outlook?

It is with reluctance that I declare that it is no longer possible to secure the appointment of an old-fashioned lawyer to the Federal bench. It is an ungrateful thing to say, but it is true that Federal judges in recent years have come from circles in sympathy with the existing system. It is an ungrateful thing to say, but it is true that no representation of the people's side of this question is found in any branch of the Federal Government. The fact that this statute has remained a dead letter for over fifteen years shows conclusively that neither in the White House, nor upon the bench, nor in the prosecutor's office have the people had a representative of their views.

Mr. Chairman, if it be true that from the Chief Magistrate down to the district attorney the Federal officiary charged with the execution of the laws have so long looked with indifference upon the fact that all restraining statutes have been a dead letter, let this one fact be my warrant for this wholesale arraignment. Surely it is sufficient.

And, Mr. Chairman, the Congress is not less fairly subject to similar criticism. When the interstate-commerce bill was passed, the intention of its author and of the Legislature was to provide a tribunal of extensive and salutary powers. The intention of the Legislature and the belief of the people was that we had conferred upon that tribunal plenary powers as to the control of rates, as to the prevention of discriminations, and as to the various evils in railroad traffic which admittedly needed correction.

Soon after its passage a decision was rendered by the Federal courts which fairly annihilated the usefulness of the Commission, and since then it has continued to exist, shorn of its essential powers by this decision, a mere bureau of statistics. In every report of the Commission from that day until this it has asked Congress for such amendment as would give it the powers which it was supposed had been conferred upon it at the time of its creation. Why has this law been allowed to remain unamended, and therefore a dead letter, for so many years?

I venture the assertion that in this House, and at the other end of the Capitol, at every session throughout this long period the individual members, if questioned, would have said the interstate-commerce law should be amended, yet, collectively, the lawmakers have not amended it.

Can any one tell me why?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COCHRAN. I ask that I may be permitted to proceed for two minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio. The gentleman from Missouri desires to proceed for two minutes further.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then, summarized, here is the situation: At last a public sentiment has been aroused which demands that something shall be done. Will this demand be persistent and inexorable, or will it be pacified by a brief halt in the process of consolidation and the remission of some of the exactions of the monopolies? Will the persons engaged in this unlawful pursuit be enabled to tide over another Presidential election? The ultimate object of the trusts is to secure definite recognition as legal organizations. In this connection I call attention to the fact that, notwithstanding the recent attempts of the majority in this House to simulate hostility to trusts, no one in high official circles is demanding anything but the regulation of the trusts. Regulation of the trusts, not their elimination, not the prohibition of trusts, not the prevention of monopoly, is the remedy proposed. To regulate the monopolies would be to recognize them as being lawful. They will exist until repressive legislation accomplishes their extinction.

One remedy is to wipe them out; but they say that they shall be "regulated." The leaders of the Republican party, including the President of the United States, have said there are good trusts and bad trusts. What will we do with the "good trusts?" Nothing, I suppose, for we would not harm that which is "good." What is to be done with the "bad trusts?" The President says we will regulate them. What trusts are good—what bad? Nobody has undertaken to list them.

Plainly, gentlemen, the question to be determined is whether the system shall be recognized and legalized by statutes regulating them or proceed on lines aiming at their elimination. The Republican leaders have abandoned the position which both parties have heretofore taken—that all combinations in restraint of trade are against public policy, injurious to the people, and should not exist in any part of the country. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to discuss the general question of trusts. The Democratic party in the early months of the recent campaign presented two propositions to the country about which they proposed to electrify the people. And they proposed to sweep away the Republican majority of the House, and pave the way to the immediate reorganization of the Democratic army, thus to get ready for the grand march of 1904 and the subjugation of the places of power now occupied by the Republican party. One of these propositions was the cruelty to the Filipinos as practiced by the American Army. Several tons of this literature were produced in this Capitol. A second one was to be the question of trusts. The question of imperialism faded away and the question of the overdoses of water administered to the Filipinos evaporated and there was nothing left but the trusts, and when the election was over there was nothing left of the Democratic party. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

We had carried the country in 1900 with a majority for the reelection of McKinley, and had the election at the end of all this trust trouble taken place in November last, we should have added about 39 majority to the electoral vote in favor of the Republican candidate. We swept every State except a part of Rhode Island and a little bit of the exceedingly small State of Nevada, from the Atlantic Ocean on the northeast to the Pacific Ocean on the west, excepting the solid South. That section stands firmly for free trade, restricted suffrage, and all sorts of Populistic isms.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman forgets that there was a section of New York. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Which section was that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That section from which comes the intelligence of the State, Greater New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suppose the gentleman does not reside in that section. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me say to the gentleman that I am one of those Representatives, and I am proud of the fact.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no doubt the State of New York is proud of its Representative who has just spoken, and so am I.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman overwhelms me with flattery.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But the State of New York has greater pride, in my judgment, in that distinguished gentleman who was elected governor of New York for the first time in which a Republican governor has been elected to succeed himself since the war of the rebellion. [Applause on the Republican side.] I refer to Governor Odell.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the first time the Republican organization has dared to give a Republican governor a chance to succeed himself. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then it shows that we are improving and that the people are ratifying what we do, and approving Republican progress. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I arose especially to call attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] to an error in his introductory statement in his long speech. He says the Sherman antitrust law stood until very recently a dormant law. Or perhaps he said "a dead-letter" act. I understood he used the word "dormant." I assume by that he meant that it was not active, that it was not put into operation, that no effort was made to accomplish the purposes for which it was ostensibly passed, and it simply was allowed to lie on the statute books dormant.

The law was passed near the close of the Administration of Benjamin Harrison. It was passed by a Republican House and Senate, and signed by a Republican President, and was passed in obedience to a suggestion of the President. It was introduced into Congress by a Republican Senator and was supported almost entirely and exclusively by Republicans in both Houses of Congress. Unfortunately the smiles of the Almighty about that time were withdrawn from the people of the United States for some reason I never could explain. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And the gentleman who to-day is the incipient but assuredly the forthcoming architect of the reorganization of the Democratic party for 1904, Grover Cleveland, became President of the United States. One of the earliest acts of his Administration was a pronunciamento sent forth by his Attorney-General that the Sherman law was of doubtful constitutionality and was absolutely inefficient to cure any of the evils against which it was ostensibly aimed, and for four long years, as I recollect the history, the law did "lie dormant" and no action was brought under it while trusts, real trusts, were in actual existence. The Standard Oil trust at that time was a trust to all intents and purposes, the interested members pooling the product and their industries into the hands of trustees, who held certificates and in all respects carried on during the entire Administration the business of a great trust.

When Mr. McKinley came into office, one of the earliest movements of his Administration was to test the declaration of a Democratic Attorney-General, Mr. Olney, and the attack was first made by the Attorney-General's Department against the Eastern Traffic Association, or the Trans-Missouri Traffic Association. Both of them were injurious combinations of railroad management in the form of trusts. Both of them were assailed in the Supreme Court of the United States. The cases were argued by Mr. Richards, the Solicitor-General, a lawyer from Ohio, who had been the attorney-general of that State during two terms of William McKinley as governor, and who was brought here for the express purpose of carrying on those prosecutions; and he destroyed both of those great combinations by the ultimate judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Then, in order to test a further development of that law, an attack was made upon a manufacturing trust in the city of Cincinnati, known as the Addyston Pipe Company, and at the end of the litigation that was broken up. And from that day to this insistent and persistent prosecutions of trusts have been carried on by the Republican Administration. I could attach to my remarks, if necessary, the names of more than 25, more than 50, organizations that have been broken up by virtue and in pursuance of this legislation, and kindred legislation in the States, which the gentleman says has been "dormant"——

A MEMBER. The whisky trust.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The whisky trust, perhaps, being one of them. The Standard Oil Company abandoned its trust character in the State of Ohio and reorganized itself upon the basis of a simple corporation, which probably is not obnoxious to the Sherman Act or any reasonable and constitutional legislation.

Now let me go on.

Mr. COCHRAN. Do you say that the whisky trust was broken up by a proceeding under the Sherman law?

Mr. GROSVENOR. In one phase, certainly.

Mr. COCHRAN. By a proceeding under the Sherman law?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir; probably under a proceeding of a State court; I do not know which.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then, when you said it was broken up under the Sherman law you did not know that that was the case?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did not; and the gentleman did not seem to know anything when he was talking. [Laughter.] I know a little. The gentleman said that the Sherman trust law lay "dormant" until recently. I was pointing out to him that he did not understand the history of his country.

Mr. COCHRAN. Why did you mention the whisky ring?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Because somebody at my right did so as I was enumerating these trusts.

Mr. COCHRAN. Can you name one trust that has been broken up under this law?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have already done that. I am not to be taken off my feet to answer the gentleman's question. I did not interrupt him when he had fifteen minutes.

I cite to the gentleman the case of The United States v. The Joint Traffic Association, reported in 107 U. S. Reports, 505, where the gentleman will find the opinion of the court that broke up and destroyed that organization. I know some of the gentlemen of it. I know the gentleman who was at the head of it. I know that he was living in New York, and I know that he at once abandoned the office there which he occupied and retired from business.

Mr. COCHRAN. Do you not know also——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I decline to be interrupted any further.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not blame you.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, then, coming on down, we had what was supposed to be a beef trust. The present Attorney-General took it into the courts of the country. I do not undertake to stand here and say whether that meat trust was obnoxious to the law or not; but it was assailed by the Attorney-General under this so-called dormant statute, and it at once dissolved itself rather than meet the prosecution in the courts. Is it a dormant statute that is now being invoked against the merger in the Northwest? Is it a dormant statute that is being invoked in New Jersey in a proceeding in which the chancellor has just delivered an opinion upholding the law? Is that a dormant statute? It is a statute, Mr. Chairman—and when I have said this I have said all I desire to say—it is a statute which, in my opinion, contains all that it is possible to put in English that shall inveigh against illegal combinations for any purpose in this country in the form of a trust. And I do not believe that the gentleman from Missouri, while he stands here and scolds everybody because he says something has not been done, can add to our statutes stronger language than the antitrust Sherman law of 1890 now contains.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman concedes the existence of trusts, and concedes that they were unlawful combinations under the statutes of this Government. Will he point out a single instance in which the Attorney-General or any other Federal officer attempted to prosecute in the criminal courts of the United States any one concerned in the trusts, which the gentleman himself assumes and has conceded to be illegal?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not sure—my information is not perfect—but were not the members of the ice trust in New York prosecuted? [Laughter on the Republican side.] It may not have been done by indictment of the grand jury, but it was done by virtue of the verdict of the people of the State of New York. I have some recollection on that subject.

But I did not get up here to cover the whole field of discussion. We shall have more time in the future when the Republican committees of this House shall have perfected the legislation which we propose to offer to the country. But in the meantime I desire that my friend from Missouri shall not be unmindful of the earnest efforts that have been made by the Republican Administrations at every step of the way to enforce a law that was originally discredited and denounced by the only Democratic Administration that we have had since the war of the rebellion, and I pray the last one we may ever have. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the remarks of my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], and I am glad to see that he has made a confession that we have been anxious to have made by the Republican party for some years—that is, that the laws now on the statute books known as the antitrust laws are not mere idle statutes, but that they are effective; that they can stop the trust evil if they are enforced. I understand the gentleman from Ohio states that that is the case. Well, the people have complained greatly in the last twelve years, since the enactment of what is known as the Sherman law, that the trusts were destroying individual enterprise and individual business in this country. The Republican party has repeatedly repudiated the idea that they were responsible for that condition of affairs.

Yet since the enactment of the Sherman law, the act of 1890, we know that the trusts in this country have developed and grown and taken possession and control of the business of the country more than has ever been known in the history of this country before. Now, the gentleman from Ohio says, and correctly says, in my judgment, that the law has been on the statute books all the time by which these trusts could have been driven out of business. In fact, he points with pride to one or two cases where the Republican party has actually used the law on the statute books to suppress certain trusts that it was not in partnership with, but I want to ask him if the law that he takes so much pride in, the law that he says is effective and can suppress trusts, is on the statute books, why has not the Republican party, which has been in power in this country since 1896 and which has had absolute control of the legislative and executive branches of this Government since 1896, suppressed the trusts? I would ask him why, since the Republican party has had complete control of the executive—the President, the Attorney-General, and Congress, with the power to provide money—it has not suppressed the trusts?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to interrupt the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that the Supreme Court in the sugar trust case held that a manufacturing corporation manufacturing in a single State could not thus be controlled?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, in some cases of course the trust law does not apply; but the gentleman from Ohio, one of the leaders of the Republican party on the floor of this House, has just said in the presence of this House that the law was ample and that the Republican party took pride in the fact that the law was enacted under the Administration of President Harrison, by a Republican House and by a Republican Congress. He has pointed out that it could be enforced, and was enforced in several instances, but I ask you to look at the trusts that exist to-day. Enumerate in your own mind and before the people the trusts that are a living menace to the people to-day, and yet, according to the confessions of your own leader, you have had the law in your hands and have had the power and the ability to suppress those trusts since 1896, and have not done it.

Now, I congratulate the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that when this side of the House offers an amendment to this bill to aid the Attorney-General and the Executive of this great Government to enforce the law against the trusts they had the manhood to stand up for the masses of the common people of this country; that they have had the manhood and the courage, notwithstanding the political line, to come across and accept the proposition we made and aid us in the enactment of this legislation, which will do something toward suppressing the evils that the people are crying against.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rejoice that we have an opportunity to pass this resolution putting this amount of money in the hands of the Attorney-General to vigorously enforce our antitrust laws. I regret that it has not been done before.

The resolution which is now pending, introduced, as it shows on its face, by my distinguished friend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], on "December 1, 1902," was not reported to this House nor brought into this House until the Republicans were pricked into action to-day by the movement of the Democrats on this side, led by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. Chairman, it has been stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] that the antitrust act of 1890, known as the Sherman law, is a product of the Republican party. I deny the proposition.

I go back farther, Mr. Chairman, to the time when Mr. Cleveland was a candidate for President, and recall the fact that he, with the Democrats, denounced trusts, while the "Plumed Knight from Maine," Mr. Blaine, his competitor, said that trusts were "private affairs with which the people had no concern."

The Democratic party in 1884 put into its platform a plank denouncing "trusts," and the Democrats scored a victory on that platform.

In 1888 we again denounced "trusts," and when the time came in 1890 to pass judgment upon what is now known as the Sherman antitrust law the Democrats and Republicans united in the Senate and in the House in its enactment, and when that measure passed this House and when it passed the Senate there was not a single solitary dissenting vote. Yet we hear it stated in this House and upon the stump that that law is a Republican measure.

The first bill introduced on "trusts" was by Mr. Sherman, undertaking, it is said, to kill the "Diamond Match trust" that had its head in the State of Michigan, from which State hails the president and founder of that "trust," a recently appointed United States Senator from that State.

Mr. Chairman, when, in 1890, this measure came up in Congress its constitutionality was doubted by leading members of both parties; but it soon got into the courts and all doubt has been removed, while the law has been vigorously enforced when the Democrats were in power.

I regret that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is absent, for I wish to say that his claim that the Addyston pipe trust case—the leading case on that subject—was begun by a Republican Administration is not correct. That suit was filed on "December 10, 1896," by order of Attorney-General Garland, a Democrat, who instructed Mr. Bible, a Democrat, the United States district attorney at Chattanooga, in my State, to file that suit, and in addition to filing an injunctive process by which that great trust was ultimately crushed, he instituted criminal proceedings under this antitrust law and secured the conviction of the parties interested in the trust. They were found guilty under the law and were fined $5,000 each.

The criminal sections of this great and drastic law that crushes when it is enforced, that is innocent when it is not enforced, are now ignored in the great "beef-trust case." The authorities have simply gone to Chicago—I have it from the officer in charge—and filed an injunction suit against this trust. They have not followed the example of General Garland and of Mr. Bible and a Democratic Administration and indicted the trust agents and those interested in it. The United States district attorney at Chicago said to me that if they disobeyed the injunction they would be brought up for contempt and put in jail in that way.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by way of substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], which was accepted by the gentleman from Georgia.

The substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the original amendment as amended by the substitute.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, and in so doing to include portions of the speech delivered by the Attorney-General at Pittsburg.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the gentleman intend to put it all in?

Mr. BARTLETT. I will; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD, and to include certain printed matter in them. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia used by the Department of Justice, $20,100.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, when the trust question came up I was about to ask the chairman of the committee reporting this bill how much money does this and other appropriation bills carry for hack hire, carriage hire, horse hire, livery bills, and so forth, for various Federal officers here in the city of Washington.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman that by a rough calculation the amount carried by this bill for that purpose is about $12,000. I would further state to the gentleman that under the statute the contingent funds of all the departments must be set out in an official document annually, giving every detail of the expenditure.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand that.

Mr. BINGHAM. And that document is available.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I wanted to find out how much hack hire, etc., the Government was paying for these officials.

Mr. BINGHAM. Twelve thousand dollars in this bill, and the details of the expenditure of the contingent fund can be found in the printed document annually sent to Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Where can that document be found?

Mr. BINGHAM. In the document room.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I wanted to find out how much hack hire, livery bills, etc., the Government paid for these gentlemen. I understand that has been the law for a long time, and I wished merely to find out how much we were spending to meet such very necessary and imperative obligations.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

To defray the cost of the employment of auditors and additional stenographers, when deemed necessary, in the Court of Claims, to be disbursed under the direction of the court, $8,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have here two letters addressed to Attorney-General Griggs, and his reply, dated May 31, 1900, showing the number of trust suits instituted since the passage of that act down to that date. I will ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting these two letters.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CANNON. Upon what subject, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is a letter addressed to Attorney-General Griggs asking him the date and name of the cases that had been filed under the antitrust act, known as the Sherman law, from the enactment of that law down to that date—May 31, 1900. It is an official letter.

Mr. CANNON. It has been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It has. I want to correct a statement made by the gentleman from Ohio to-day.

Mr. CANNON. Now, having been printed in the RECORD once, I shall object to it being printed again. If it had not been printed I would not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons permanently incapacitated for performing such service.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to propose an amendment to line 22. Strike out the word "permanently" and insert "incompetent or," so as to read, the compensation of the employees provided for shall not be given to "persons incompetent or incapacitated" from the performance of such service. I think the committee will have no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. We have no objection here.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 22, page 141, strike out the word "permanently" and insert in lieu thereof the words "incompetent or."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to turn back to page 14, line 19, and offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, line 19, after the word "dollars," insert "and $1,000 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will state that I have not a copy of the bill before me.

Mr. CANNON. I will state to the gentleman what the amendment is.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I would be glad to have the gentleman make an explanation.

Mr. CANNON. I think the committee ought to understand the amendment before giving its consent.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What page is the proposed amendment on?

Mr. CANNON. Page 14, line 19. The matter I seek to amend reads as follows: "Clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, $3,000." The Clerk will now please read the amendment.

On page 14, line 19: "and $1,000 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent."

Mr. CANNON. I offer that amendment because I believe it ought to be adopted. A single word and I am ready for a vote. If there is any objection, as I hope there will not be, the present——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. So far as I am concerned, I am prepared to say there is no objection. I do not make that statement because the gentleman affected by it happened to live in my State a great many years ago, but because I know he deserves it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Just a single word in justification of this amendment. This is not an ordinary amendment. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations now receives $3,000. He has been clerk to that committee for a quarter of a century. He is now 48 or 49 years of age. We have had genuine civil service in the Committee on Appropriations in the selection and retention of its clerk ever since its organization. Most committee clerks change as the House changes. This one has not changed. Under all organizations of the House he has remained. I have no hesitation in saying, from the standpoint of integrity, intelligence, and usefulness to the House, that while the present incumbent holds that place a thousand dollars additional is under rather than over compensation. But gentlemen understand the work of this committee and the efficiency of its clerk. He is here substantially all the year long, in vacation as well as during the session, and perhaps more nearly an encyclopedia touching the public service than any man in my acquaintance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk continued and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I now move that the bill and amendments be reported to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MONDELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 16021, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any of the amendments? If not, they will be submitted in gross by the Chair.

The question was taken on the amendments in gross; and they were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVES TO WITHDRAW PAPERS FROM THE FILES.

By unanimous consent, Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Lucetta Fix in the Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. IRWIN was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of John W. Neville, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the following changes of reference were made:

The bill (H. R. 16126) for the relief of pensioners of the Metropolitan Police relief fund, from the Committee on the District of Columbia to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. 15343) further regulating the class of matter denied admission to the mails, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. This brings us to the special and continuing order.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, with reference to that I desire to say to the House that the gentleman from Ohio who made the report upon the bill 1309 has been called away from the city and is necessarily detained on a very important matter. I know that it is his desire to open this discussion, and I believe it would be for the benefit of the House that he should have this privilege. If there is some other matter that may occupy the attention of the House, I would be glad if it could be called up now without prejudice to that order.

The SPEAKER. On the motion of the gentleman from Iowa this was made the regular and continuing order. The Chair can direct a call of the committees if the gentleman is not ready.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, before that call begins, I want to say that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, whom I do not see present just now, has a bill which he proposes to call up at this time. It is a bill of considerable importance, and the committee desires to pass it this afternoon. I have sent for him and hope he will be here in a few moments.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I want to say to the gentleman that the bill was reported from the committee, but I do not think the committee voted to press it this afternoon or at any stated time.

The SPEAKER. The House can not postpone its business to oblige absentees. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

EMPLOYMENT OF ENLISTED MEN IN COMPETITION WITH CIVILIANS.

The Clerk called the Committee on Labor.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, there is some unfinished business from the Committee on Labor. A bill was discussed and put on its final passage, and on that vote the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH] made a point of no quorum, and therefore, I believe, this is the business now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the previous question was not ordered on the bill which the gentleman refers to, and I do not think it can be privileged. The House had reached the point where it proposed to vote, and the House adjourned at that time. The previous question was not ordered. It seems to me that if the bill is now in order it can only be in order on the call of committees.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is what I claim; that it is an order under the call of committees, and the Committee on Labor has been called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama overlooks the fact that this committee is now on call.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not understand it so. I did not hear the Clerk call that committee.

The SPEAKER. It is clearly in order now as unfinished business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the previous question has not been ordered, and it is open for debate.

The SPEAKER. That is not the question. The matter is before the House. The Clerk will report the resolution by title.

The Clerk read:

House joint resolution 9, in reference to the employment of enlisted men in competition with local civilians.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair is advised of the status of this bill, the House, when it adjourned, was dividing on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, so that the bill had reached that stage for consideration, and at that stage it must resume it as unfinished business. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, on a division there were—ayes 30, noes 43.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question on ordering the yeas and nays was taken.

The SPEAKER. Thirteen gentlemen rising; not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused, and the House refuses to order the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees, and when the Committee on Ways and Means was reached:

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Ways and Means on House bill 15702, to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 8, 1902. I gave notice to the minority of the committee that I would call up the bill to-morrow, but I understand they are willing that it should be called up at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will understand that we are now on the call of committees, and the bill which he brings in is not on the House Calendar.

Mr. PAYNE. But it is a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER. Not on this call.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the Chair hold that I can not make a privileged report at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that when we are on this call we can not be interrupted even with a privileged report.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees, and when the Committee on Railways and Canals was reached:

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I understand the chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals has a bill on the Calendar which he would like to call up. He is absent to-day, but in his absence I ask that bills of that committee be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that the bills from the Committee on Railways and Canals be passed without prejudice. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, when the Committee on Census was called I was out of the Chamber. I was not aware that the Speaker was to call the committees, and I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may go back to the Census Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the Clerk recur to the Census Committee. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to inquire, Mr. Speaker, what bill it is that the gentleman wants to take up?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is Senate bill 1833, to transfer the records of various censuses to the Census Office. It is a bill favored by the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Was this bill unanimously reported by the Senate committee?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KLUTTZ. It was unanimously reported by the Senate committee and also by the House committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] that the Committee on the Census be recurred to?

There was no objection.

TRANSFER OF CENSUS RECORDS.

The bill (S. 1833) providing for the transfer of census records and volumes to the Census Office, and for other purposes, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to transfer to the Census Office all of the schedules, records, and volumes of reports of the 11 decennial enumerations from 1790 to 1890, inclusive, that may be in the possession of the Department of the Interior, which transfer shall not change the allotment of such reports heretofore made to Senators and Representatives; and the Director of the Census is hereby authorized, upon the request of a governor of any State or Territory, or the chief officer of any municipal government, to furnish such governor or municipal officer with copies of so much of said files or records as may be requested, at the discretion of the Director of the Census, upon payment of the actual cost of making such copies; and the amounts so received shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, to be placed to the credit of and in addition to the appropriation made for the taking of the census.

Mr. HOPKINS. This bill, I think, explains itself. I will not take up time in discussing it, but will ask for a vote.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOPKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MILITARY BADGES.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs be recurred to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We should like to know what bill the gentleman desires to call up.

Mr. MONDELL. Senate joint resolution No. 57.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Let the resolution be reported, reserving the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the joint resolution will be reported.

The joint resolution (S. R. 57) relating to military badges was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the distinctive badges adopted by military societies of men who served in the armies and navies of the United States during the Chinese relief expedition of 1900 may be worn upon all occasions of ceremony by officers and men of the Army and Navy of the United States who are members of said organization in their own right.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, still reserving the right to object, I should like the gentleman to explain the effect of this joint resolution.

Mr. MONDELL. It is similar to a number of resolutions which have been adopted. It authorizes the officers and men of the Army and Navy of the United States who participated in the expedition which relieved the legations at Pekin to wear the distinctive badges which have been adopted by the society which those men have organized.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now proceed with the call.

The call of committees was resumed and concluded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], if he so desires, upon the privileged matter referred to some time ago.

Mr. PAYNE. If I am in order now, I would like to have the bill read.

The bill (H. R. 15702) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 8, 1902, was read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. In reply to the statement made a few moments ago by the gentleman from New York, I will say that what he stated is true. When this bill was reported this morning some members of the minority did say that if the bill was to be taken up to-morrow it might just as well be taken up to-day, because they would not have any more opportunity to-morrow to examine the report and make answer to it than they would have to-day. But the gentleman from New York stated that the bill would not be called up until to-morrow; and I know that some members of the minority, especially one member of the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means, have left the House with the understanding that the bill would not be called up until to-morrow.

Mr. PAYNE. All right. Then I give notice that I will endeavor to call it up to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is understood that I have the right to file the views of the minority before adjournment to-day?

Mr. PAYNE. There is no objection to that.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inviting attention to the claim of Jean Florentine Poiret—to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the annual inspection of the several Branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Assistant Clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases, relating to the ship Briseis, James Breath, master, against The United States—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 18, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Clerk, who read the following communication:

DECEMBER 18, 1902.

I hereby designate Hon. JOHN DALZELL, of Pennsylvania, to perform the duties of the Chair this day.

D. B. HENDERSON, Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore having taken the chair, prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

VENEZUELA.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I submit a privileged report, two resolutions of inquiry, Nos. 352 and 363. The committee instructs me to recommend the adoption of No. 363, and that No. 352 lie on the table. I will send them to the desk, and ask that resolution No. 352 be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the honorable Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House, at the earliest date practicable, and so far as he may be able to do, of the nature and extent of the claims of Great Britain and Germany, respectively, against Venezuela; whether the correctness or rightfulness of said claims, in whole or in part, is disputed by Venezuela; what effort, if any, and by whom, if anybody, has been made to settle peaceably, by arbitration or otherwise, the matters, or any of the matters, the subject of controversy between Venezuela upon the one side and Great Britain or Germany upon the other, and with what result, if any, with full particulars; what, if any, part the United States have taken or are taking in the controversy aforesaid; whom, if any, of the officers of the United States have been consulted by any of the parties to the said controversy, and in regard to what matter or matters, and with what result; what, if anything, has been said or done by the United States with relation to the Monroe doctrine and its due and respectful observance in the transactions with reference to the British and German claims against Venezuela, or any of them; to what extent, if any, the United States have been consulted or conferred with as to the substance, or application, or applicability of the Monroe doctrine to the Venezuela question aforesaid, and with what result; what, if anything, the United States have done, or are doing, to insure, or toward insuring, respect for the Monroe doctrine in and concerning Venezuela, and the result of such efforts, if any; and whether, in his judgment, the United States can, by a firm assertion of the Monroe doctrine, bring about, or aid in bringing about, a peaceful and fair adjustment of the disputes between the nations aforesaid, so as to have fully respected the principles of the Monroe doctrine and to preserve the governmental and territorial integrity and independence of Venezuela.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, for the better understanding of the action proposed, I ask for the reading of No. 363.

Resolution No. 363 was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform the House of Representatives touching any understanding or agreement between the Governments of Great Britain and Germany on the one hand and the diplomatic officers of the United States on the other, or any assurances by the said Governments to the diplomatic officers of the United States, as to the nature, extent, and purpose of the joint demonstration of said Governments against Venezuela, and particularly with reference to the occupation of the territory of Venezuela, and to transmit to the House of Representatives the correspondence, if any, upon the subject between the diplomatic officers of the United States and the said Governments, or either of them.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if this last resolution, 363, is to lie on the table?

Mr. HITT. I will state that the committee recommends the adoption of the last resolution, No. 363, as it calls for the whole correspondence on this subject, and I believe that correspondence will be transmitted to the House.

Mr. PAYNE. I notice that the first resolution is very broad and seems to include matters that ought not to be in the State Department.

Mr. HITT. The first resolution is included, substantially, in the second, except in one point, that which asks for opinions; that the committee thought was not in accordance with usage, and that part of the resolution was not approved. This does not imply that the committee disagreed to the inquiry being made, but it adopted the form of that general resolution, No. 363. Therefore I ask the House to act first upon resolution No. 363.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman if the inquiry or correspondence called for relates alone to the controversy between Venezuela on the one side and Germany and Great Britain on the other, and if so, why is the correspondence with respect to Italy omitted? I understand that Italy is figuring in the matter quite extensively, as well as other countries in Europe. Why not include all the correspondence?

Mr. HITT. I am advised, and I think I am certain, that the correspondence is the same that would be sent for one or the other resolution and covers the whole subject. It calls for what the Department has, and that is all we want.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then there was no object in the committee omitting Italy?

Mr. HITT. No; this resolution was chosen because the phraseology seemed preferable, and it had in it the usual provision "not being incompatible with the public interests."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand the minority of the committee joined in the report.

Mr. HITT. This is the unanimous report of the committee, with the recommendation that the resolution referred to be adopted.

Mr. DINSMORE. The two resolutions are practically the same, the committee accepting No. 363.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution 352 will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

UNION STATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with House amendments disagreed to by the Senate.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The following were announced as conferees on the part of the House: Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. MUDD, and Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 2492. An act to reimburse the Mellert Foundry and Machine Company for money retained by the United States for failure to complete a contract within a specified time;

H. R. 4471. An act for the relief of James M. Chisham;

H. R. 11893. An act granting an increase of pension to Cornelia A. Dennis;

H. R. 13449. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary A. E. Scott;

H. R. 14801. An act to make Wilmington, N. C., a port through which merchandise may be imported for transportation without appraisement; and

H. R. 15593. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 6502. An act relating to ceded lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2296) to amend an act approved March 2, 1895, relating to public printing.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 16057. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4617) to authorize a resurvey of certain lands in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That it is with deep regret and profound sorrow that the Senate hears the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM J. SEWELL, late a Senator from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That the Senate extends to his family and to the people of the State of New Jersey sincere condolence in their bereavement.

Resolved, That, as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay fitting tribute to his high character and distinguished services.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit to the family of the deceased and to the governor of the State of New Jersey a copy of these resolutions, with the action of the Senate thereon.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect, at the conclusion of these exercises the Senate do adjourn.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS REVENUE ACT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15702) to amend the Philippine Islands revenue act.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. PALMER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15702, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15702) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 8, 1902.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. About a year ago, Mr. Chairman, the House passed a bill providing revenue for the government of the Philippine Islands. Among other things embraced in that bill was section 2, which provided that upon all merchandise coming from the Philippine Islands to the United States a duty equal to 75 per cent of the duties under the Dingley Act be imposed and collected. In addition to that there were some export duties, and also some import duties on goods coming from other countries and from the United States to the Philippine Islands. Those latter duties were imposed by the Philippine Commission or Philippine government. We ratified and confirmed the tariff rate made by this Philippine Commission as to these duties, both export and import, however taking off finally the export duties on goods coming to the United States from those islands. Section 2, as I said, of that bill provided for the imposition of 75 per cent of the Dingley rates upon goods coming from the islands to the United States.

This bill simply amends section 2. It reenacts the section as amended, and the only change in the entire section made by this bill is on page 2—I think line 3—where we strike out 75 per cent and insert 25 per cent, so that, after the passage of this bill, there will be levied on goods coming from the Philippine Islands duties at the rate of 25 per cent of the Dingley rate. That is the only change we are making to the entire act.

The committee will remember that another section, section 4 of that act, provided that all the duties imposed by the act, all the revenues arising under the act, should not be covered into the Treasury of the United States, but should be turned over to the Philippine government for the support of that government.

This legislation is directly in line with the Porto Rican tariff act, a bill which originated in the House of Representatives, and which provided that 15 per cent of the duties under the Dingley Act should be imposed upon goods coming from Porto Rico to the United States. Although that bill was denounced in various quarters, and in many quarters, at the time of its passage as unconstitutional, as poor policy, as unjust to the people of the island of Porto Rico, and as a measure likely to bring upon them poverty and distress, yet, after two years under that bill, at the end of which time free trade was inaugurated between the United States and that island, after two years of the beneficent influences of that bill, the island of Porto Rico and its people found themselves enjoying a greater state of prosperity in every direction than they had ever enjoyed before, save, perhaps, in the one item of coffee, upon which there was absolutely free trade between Porto Rico and the United States under that act.

Mr. McCALL. May I ask the gentleman if Porto Rico has languished any since free trade went into effect?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, certainly not.

We provided, further, in that bill that after a suitable provision had been made to pay all running expenses of the government there should be free trade between Porto Rico and the United States. The bill was purely a revenue measure as well as a measure to give relief to the people of Porto Rico who were then paying 100 per cent of the Dingley rates. It was put on the ground of raising revenue to support that government; it was put on the ground of raising revenue because there was no other way in the disorganized condition of the people of the island to raise revenue, as the House will remember, because of the storm which had swept the island and the destruction of its industries.

Now, Mr. Chairman, under the present laws, since the 8th of March the revenues under section 2 of the Philippine Islands act have been small. They amount, up to the 30th of September, to the sum of $15,183.07, a very small sum compared with the $12,000,000 of revenue which have come from other sources in the islands. It is the opinion of the Commission, and the opinion of the Secretary of War, that if we reduce the rate of duty there will be so much greater amount of imports that the revenue will be much larger than it has been under the present act, and they ask that this 25 per cent of duties be retained simply as a revenue measure.

The report of the Secretary of War shows an apparent surplus of revenue over expenditures of about $2,000,000, as gentlemen will find in Appendix Q attached to that report, but this is only an apparent surplus. As I am informed, the amount has already been appropriated by the Philippine government for the necessary expenses of the islands.

One reason which is urged for the lowering of these duties is that which gentlemen will find in the report, or extracts of the report of the Secretary of War, which is published with the report of the committee. The Philippine Islands have been afflicted during the past year by the rinderpest, which has destroyed, they say, 90 per cent of the only beasts of burden known in these islands up to the time of the American occupation—the carabao. Of course this has worked great harm and disaster, especially to the agricultural portion of the people of those islands. Think of blotting out 90 per cent of the beasts of burden in any community, and the results which will follow that, Mr. Chairman, show that there must be a great disturbance of economical conditions and a great blow to the agriculture and commerce of the country.

Not only that, but a disease called the "surra" has also afflicted the horses and mules, those which the United States has taken over into these islands, as well as the native horses already there. So about 10,000 of these beasts of burden have been destroyed. The islands are in a bad condition financially. Added to this has been the cholera, which has swept away a great many human lives and has extended throughout a large portion of the islands and interfered greatly with the commerce and trade of the islands and with the people of other countries.

In addition to this it is reported by the Commission that about 75 per cent of the rice crop was destroyed by the storms—by hail, I believe. And then added to this there was a plague of locusts, which came in upon the islands and destroyed much of the remaining 25 per cent of the rice crop. So that the people need relief.

It may occur to some gentlemen that they should have more relief than is carried in this bill; that we should take off the 25 per cent. If they did not need this revenue, Mr. Chairman, I should be in favor of taking off the 25 per cent, but they demand the revenue, as they did in the island of Porto Rico, and which was found so beneficial in Porto Rico. We reduced the duties to 15 per cent of the Dingley rates and added greatly to the commerce of that country, restored prosperity to that country, and gave them better prices for their sugar and tobacco that came into the United States.

Now, of course, any importations which will come directly under this bill in the next few years from the Philippine Islands will not at all affect the price of sugar and tobacco in the United States. They will get just as much here for their sugar and tobacco, and they will save upon the price which they get 50 per cent of the Dingley rates. So that in that way it will help out and promote the agricultural and commercial interests of the islands of the Philippines to pass this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have been anxious to urge this bill before the House before the holiday recess so that it might get to the Senate as soon as possible, and thus relief might be heralded to the islands. A year ago I asked the House to pass the Philippine tariff bill, and urged it through the House. An attempt was made to pass it in another body, and it did not succeed until about the 8th day of March. Unless greater progress is made with this bill in the coordinate branch it will not get through there until after the 4th day of March. So I felt it my duty to urge upon the House the consideration of this bill at the earliest practicable moment that it might get over to the Senate for consideration and might speedily become a law in order to give relief to these people of the Philippine Islands. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, might I ask the gentleman his opinion in regard to the industries of rice and sugar that he speaks of in the Philippine Islands and the effect that this legislation will have upon those industries here? I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the report to the Secretary of War, and according to the interests of the Philippine Islands, they are asking as a necessity the importation of Chinese laborers to work and exploit those industries in the Philippines. What will be the effect upon the industries of rice and tobacco here?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this bill has nothing to do with the importation of Chinese into the Philippine Islands. I am opposed to the importation of Chinese into those islands. It is now prohibited by law. I do not know whether it is proposed to change it here anywhere in the United States.

Now, as to rice; they never have been able to produce anywhere near the quantity of rice they consume, and of course they can not export it to the United States. So far as sugar is concerned, I have already explained that the little which would come from the Philippine Islands to the United States will not affect the price here, and therefore can not injuriously affect our people, but it will be of great aid to the raisers of sugar in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose to occupy the floor but a few moments with the discussion of the measure before us. The bill before us is designed to amend the second section of the act passed by Congress during the long session of this Congress to provide revenue temporarily for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, passed, I think, on the 8th of March, this year.

As has been stated by the gentleman from New York, this bill deals alone with the second section of that act. That section imposed a tax at a rate equal to 75 per cent of the rates fixed in the present tariff law—the law known as the Dingley tariff law—upon all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States. The rate of duty charged by section 2 of that act upon all articles imported from foreign countries is found in the clause which I will read. After the passage of that act, as section 2 provides—

> There shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries.

But the proviso in the second section is to this effect:

> That upon all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Islands there shall be charged 75 per cent of the present rates of duty—

That is, the duty prescribed in the Dingley Act.

Now, this bill provides simply for striking out "seventy-five" and inserting "twenty-five" as the rate per cent to be charged; so that if this bill should become a law the rate of duty charged upon articles and commodities the growth and product of the Philippine Islands coming into the United States will be 25 per cent of the present tariff rates. This, of course, is a reduction from the 75 per cent prescribed in the act of March 8, to which I have just referred. This bill, providing a reduction such as I have described, we felt in the Ways and Means Committee—that is, the minority of that committee—that however radically wrong the principle was upon which the bill proceeds, we were not in a position to vote against the final passage of the measure. In other words, we believed that if 75 per cent was wrong the 25 per cent would also be wrong in principle, but it would be less injurious, as we believed, and therefore we felt that in the final analysis we would support the bill; but we did not come to that conclusion without an earnest effort in the committee to amend the bill. Those amendments I shall not discuss; indeed, I shall not discuss the principle involved in this measure. I want to refer, however, to the amendments we will offer, and state their purport.

I say I will not discuss the principle involved in the bill. It involves, as stated by the gentleman from New York, substantially the same question that arose when Congress came to provide the tariff or tax law for Porto Rico. We believed then that the principle upon which Congress, under the direction of the dominant party, proceeded to deal with the taxation of the people of Porto Rico, and as they now propose to deal and have dealt with the people of the Philippines, was radically wrong. We believed and contended that it was unconstitutional. Some gentlemen may surrender this view of the case in consideration of events and history subsequent to the discussion on the Porto

Rican bill; but I believed then, I believe now, that such legislation is unconstitutional; and I know it is unjust and un-American. [Applause.]

But, as I have said, I shall not to-day undertake to thrash old straw and go over the former argument to the House of Representatives. I feel that it is useless to do so. The minority of the Committee on Ways and Means felt that while this measure in itself would be productive of some good, it ought to be amended. We proposed two or three amendments. The first of those was that—

No duty shall be charged upon articles, goods, and commodities imported into the Philippine Islands from the United States; and upon articles, goods, and commodities the growth and product of the Philippine Islands coming into the United States from those islands no duty shall be charged.

We felt that the people of this country—the producers, the manufacturers, the business people, who have goods, wares, and merchandise for sale—ought to have the right, if they can find a market in the Philippines, to send their articles and commodities to the people there. Therefore we undertook to provide free trade between the United States and the people of those islands, as contemplated by the amendment I have read. It is needless to say that that amendment was defeated in the committee. We next proposed another amendment, as follows:

That the rates of duty charged upon all articles, goods, and commodities exported from the United States into the Philippine Islands shall be 25 per cent of the present rates.

Now, we did not, by offering that amendment, purpose to bind ourselves to the principle involved in it. We did not mean to say that the principle involved was right; but we did undertake to say, "If you intend to charge the 25 per cent rate of duty upon articles the growth and product of the Philippine Islands coming into the United States, you should indorse a like levy and collect a like charge upon goods going from the United States into the Philippines, the object being to make the rate uniform." First, we proposed that nothing be charged. Second, that if you insisted on charging 25 per cent in the one case, you should charge 25 per cent in the other.

These two amendments being rejected, we made no further opposition to the reporting of the bill as it has been presented by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take further time. I have explained the object and purpose of the measure. I have shown what we sought to do, and what we shall continue to seek to do, in the House of Representatives. Failing, if we do fail, to amend the measure so as to make it better, I have felt and have no hesitation in saying that I shall vote for the bill. Other gentlemen can do as they see fit. I shall, however, offer a motion to recommit the bill. I give notice now to gentlemen on this side of the House and the other that we shall offer a motion to recommit the bill in order to provide that there may be uniform free trade between the Philippine Islands and the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I will not take further time.

Mr. SNOOK and Mr. MADDOX rose.

Mr. MADDOX. Before you sit down, I want to ask you a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will yield first to the gentleman from Ohio, as he rose first.

Mr. SNOOK. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means gives as the principal reason why a duty of 25 per cent of the present rate is retained on all the goods from the Philippine Islands to this country is that it will raise a large revenue for the support of the Philippine Government. Can the gentleman give any idea as to how much revenue will be raised by that means?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, sir; I think it would be a mere guess. We had the vice-governor of the Philippine Islands, General Wright, before us, and, as I remember, he was unable to give the amount. I could not answer the question.

Mr. SNOOK. I notice by the report of the minority——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to add also that we have had no statement. We do not know what revenues it will bring. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of War have not furnished us with any estimates or tables showing what that revenue would probably be.

Mr. SNOOK. I notice by the report of the minority this statement: "The majority claim that the imposition of 25 per cent of the Dingley rate is essential to the purpose of the Philippine revenues, and yet, under 75 per cent of the Dingley rate, the total revenues collected since June last is only about $15,000."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is correct.

Mr. SNOOK. Would not that give a pretty good idea and show that under this bill there would not be any very considerable sum for that purpose?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Unquestionably. I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX], who desires to ask me a question.

Mr. MADDOX. For information, I notice in the latter part of this bill the following:

But all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Islands admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty under the provisions of this act and coming directly from said islands to the United States for use and consumption therein, shall be hereafter exempt from any export duties imposed in the Philippine Islands.

Have there been any export duties?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is in the Philippine tariff, which has been reenacted.

Mr. MADDOX. Have they an export tariff?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I so understand it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They must pay to get the goods out of the Philippine Islands under the present law.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] desires fifteen minutes, and I ask that he have it.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, the remarkable haste with which this bill was reported from the Committee on Ways and Means and the unseemly eagerness with which it is being forced through this House impel me to believe that there is some motive behind the action of my colleague, the chairman of the committee [Mr. PAYNE], that does not appear in his report.

My colleague states as an excuse for his extraordinary precipitancy that the recommendation of the Secretary of War permits of no delay. The Secretary wishes immediate action upon this bill; accordingly we are to act immediately. I have too much respect and too much affection for my colleague to assume that that is the real motive that has caused him to force this bill through the House with indecent hurry. The time has not yet come and, God willing, never will come when an officer of the Government, in a sense a servant of the Congress, can send to this House an order, with the certainty that that order will be obeyed unquestioningly and unquestioned. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The real motive behind the action of my colleague is not obscure to those who understand the circumstances under which this bill was reported.

A year ago my colleague urged the same hasty action in reference to the act to which this is an amendment. That act passed the House on the 18th of December, but did not become a law until the 8th of March following, nearly three months after we sent it to the Senate. My colleague knows as well as I know that if this bill passes to-day it can not receive consideration by the Senate until after the Christmas recess. My colleague knows as well as I know that if he delays action upon this bill until we meet again in January he will not delay its enactment twenty-four hours.

Some days ago there appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means the vice-governor of the Philippine Islands, the Hon. Luke E. Wright. Mr. Wright, in answer to a question asked by me, stated that in his opinion were Philippine products to be admitted into the United States free of duty the interests of the Filipinos would be better served than by the enactment of this bill.

That hearing has not yet been printed. The copy has not even been corrected by Mr. Wright. Members of the House do not even know that the hearing took place, and members of the Committee on Ways and Means who were not present at the meeting are ignorant of its contents. The gentleman has none but himself to thank if there is a suspicion on this side of the House that, chastened in spirit and humbled in heart by the disastrous result of his efforts in leadership while the Cuban reciprocity bill was under consideration, he fears that if the majority is permitted to study this question and to read Mr. Wright's statement conscientious Republicans will join with us in granting commercial justice to the Philippines. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But the gentleman says that this is a mere question of revenue. Oh, how have the mighty fallen, and how has the strong man changed! [Laughter.] A year ago to-day my friend and committee colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], in one of those brilliant speeches with which he so often delights the House, in a burst of fervid eloquence, stated that free trade with the Philippines would imperil the interests of American industries. And now we are told that this is a mere question of revenue. [Laughter.] Let it be a question of revenue, what then? It is true that Vice-Governor Wright stated before the Committee on Ways and Means that while there has been a surplus during every year of American rule in the Philippines, the Commission could usefully employ a larger revenue.

Mr. Chairman, I have never known of a government instituted by man that could not usefully employ a larger revenue than that which it obtained. [Laughter.] In the report of the chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, accompanying the report of the Secretray of War, for the fiscal year just ended—that report which my colleague would have us consider as a general order to the House of Representatives—I find that the total revenue collected since the beginning of the fiscal year on goods coming from the Philippine Islands into the United States amounts to the princely sum of $15,000—an amount that would put to shame the net profits of a reasonably successful peanut stand. [Laughter.] The Secretary of War assumes, presumably under the doctrine of "the maximum revenue-raising point," that if the rate of duty is lowered the revenues will increase by leaps and bounds. The Secretary is possessed of a cheerful, even though speculative nature. The Secretary, either through inadvertence, or Heaven knows what, has omitted to give us any evidence in favor of his contention. There is not a word of proof, not a word of argument. We are asked to accept his statement, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] accepts it, as gospel written by an evangelist of the Administration. It is as safe to assume that if the rate of duty is lowered the revenues will fall as it is safe to assume that if the rate of duty is lowered the revenues will increase.

Let me quote again from that memorable speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]:

> Sir, I decline to regard the question of values as any factor in the decision of this question. * * * This issue is upon a higher plane than that of dollars and cents.

Truer and more eloquent words were never spoken upon the floor of this House. It makes us almost rub our eyes and wonder whether we are awake to hear such patriotism, such nobility of sentiment from a Republican, and from a high protectionist. [Laughter and applause.] We stand to-day upon the principle enunciated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]. This question is upon a higher plane than that of dollars and cents. We stand in the same position where stood Abraham Lincoln and Charles Sumner. Let me quote the words of Lincoln upon an exactly similar question as that which now confronts us:

> I have expressed hithertofore and I now repeat my opposition to the Dred Scott decision, but I should be allowed to state the nature of that opposition, and I ask your indulgence while I do so. What is fairly implied by the term Judge Douglas has used, "resistance to the decision?" I do not resist it. If I wanted to take Dred Scott from his master, I would be interfering with property. But I am doing no such thing as that. All that I am doing is refusing to obey it as a political rule. If I were in Congress and a vote should come up on the question whether slavery should be prohibited in a new Territory, in spite of the Dred Scott decision I should vote that it should.

In a speech on the floor of the Senate Charles Sumner said:

> The Senator from Maryland invoked the Dred Scott decision as a reason why Congress should not recognize colored persons as citizens. In reply I simply asserted the right of Congress to interpret the Constitution without constraint from the Supreme Court, and this I now repeat. Each branch of the Government must interpret the Constitution according to its own sense of obligation they have all taken. And God forbid that Congress should consent to wear the strait-jacket of the Dred Scott case.

We believe that "each branch of the Government must interpret the Constitution according to its own sense of the obligations we have all taken." We believe on this side that the whole scheme of revenue legislation imposed upon the Philippine Islands is unconstitutional. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We shall try, if an opportunity is afforded us, to amend this bill or to recommit it with instructions to the Committee on Ways and Means to report it back so drawn as to grant absolute free trade between the Philippines and the United States. It requires but little of the gift of prophecy, however, to foresee the result of such an amendment. [Laughter.] Under existing conditions on the other side, with the impossibility of careful examination or of study of the subject, with Mr. Wright's hearing unobtainable, with the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] urging his authority and cracking the party whip, with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] using his persuasive eloquence and invoking party discipline, it is safe to assume that the majority will flock down the center aisle after their shepherds like sheep to the shearing. If our motion to recommit is defeated, we will then be confronted with an alternative.

On the final passage of this bill we must vote either aye or no. If my vote against the bill would place me on record as favoring free trade with the Philippines—as favoring a return to constitutional methods—if my vote against this bill would help to grant free trade with the Philippines, I should vote against the bill. But a vote against the bill is a vote in favor of retaining the present rates of duty now upon the statute books. On the other hand, a vote for the bill does not alter the principles of existing law, but does reduce the rate of duty now imposed. I am confronted with a choice of evils, and, speaking for myself alone, if our motion to recommit is defeated I shall choose the lesser of the evils and vote for the bill. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, this is a fair illustration of the method of legislation in this House. Not until the day before yesterday was it announced that this bill was to be considered by the Ways and Means Committee. About 4 o'clock of the evening before this vote was taken we received notice that the Ways and Means Committee would have a meeting to consider the Philippine reduction tariff bill. We had had one hearing before, at which it had been impossible for me to be present. The evidence of General Wright, at one time acting governor and second in power in the Philippine Islands, has been given but never printed. I asked that committee to furnish me a statement, if it had been prepared, and if not to give time for me to prepare it, to ascertain whether, under this bill, goods would come from the Philippine Islands to the United States cheaper than our goods would go into the Philippine Islands. I was anxious to know what would be the relative tariff rates between the two countries under the provisions of this bill.

The chairman of this committee at that time and now can not determine as to whether the people of the United States have less or better privileges in selling their goods in the Philippine Islands or whether the Filipinos have greater privileges here. No comparison is afforded. No effort is made to look at what was the trade between these two countries for the last two years. But the bill must be reported without discussion, without consideration, without an opportunity even to get from the Department a comparative statement. Mr. Chairman, I want to say for myself that I still adhere to the principle which I held both in the Philippine and Porto Rican questions. I believe it is law and I believe it is right that there should be free trade between this country and these so-called colonies.

I believe it is not only constitutional law, but I believe it is the best policy, in material results and in justice for the United States, to pursue that course. I believe that we will have friends in the Philippine Islands, if we are determined to hold them, if we will eliminate all tariffs between the two countries and have absolute free trade. This bill presents what kind of a spectacle? Here is one colony, Porto Rico, which has absolute free trade between it and the United States. Here is another colony, the Philippine Islands, upon which it is proposed by this bill to impose a duty of 25 per cent on all goods coming here. Yet with this inequality between these two colonies, giving benefits and blessings to one and not to the other, we expect the people in the Philippine Islands to acquiesce and thank God that they have such a beneficent and generous Government as this.

I want to say, in addition, that it is strange that twelve months ago there could be no reduction, that this committee wanted to have the entire Dingley rate on goods imported from the Philippine Islands here. It will soon be free trade. As soon as the large corporate interests and syndicates acquire a good foothold in the Philippine Islands; as soon as they get up a great land scheme, a great lumber interest, great tobacco interest, a great sugar interest; when all the syndicates have taken possession of all the interests of the islands and need the United States markets to unload their products upon, you will see a bill here giving free trade to goods coming from there.

I have an amendment to which I desire to call the attention of the House, and I especially desire members on the other side of the aisle to listen to it. It is impossible to determine as to whether we pay higher rates of duty on our goods going into the Philippine Islands than we charge them on their goods coming here. Now, I believe there should be an equality of tariff duties between the Philippine Islands and the United States. I believe the right way to act is to provide free trade, but in that amendment it provides that in no case shall the duty on goods imported from this country into the Philippine Islands be greater than the duty imposed on the goods coming from the Philippine Islands here. Now, why? I stand here representing a district in the United States. I think my constituents, my people, who are taxed to keep the government up in the Philippine Islands, who pay thousands and thousands of dollars of taxes each year to keep up the Government and administer the government of the Philippine Islands, ought to have privileges in their trade equal to the privileges given to the Filipinos who will send their goods here.

Under this bill we reduce greatly the duties on goods coming from the Philippine Islands into the United States, but this bill makes no reduction on goods going from the United States into the Philippine Islands. What is curious, our Republican friends have always told us we are to stand these taxes, we are to stand the expense of the army in the Philippine Islands on account of the great trade and benefit that is going to come to us. They have appealed to the greed of the American people for commerce and trade to sustain and fortify this colonial policy, yet when it comes to making it practicable, when it comes to bringing benefit in trade and commerce, they strenuously refuse to give a chance to American manufacturers, to the American farmers, to the American people to have any trade. Now, the excuse given is that the same privilege will have to be extended to Spain under the treaty of peace that was signed at Paris.

Mr. Chairman, under this treaty Spain has no privilege over the United States. Spain is not like the United States, one of the great exporting nations of the world. Spain is a nation which has no commercial activities. It is not raising wheat, corn, oats, and cotton, and all those products for export, like the United States. So that so far as Spain is concerned, if this tariff were reduced we would really have no competition. It has been rumored that there are great syndicates formed in the Philippine Islands under the bill that recently passed this House, and others are in process of formation. Now, if there are syndicates, and I do not know whether it is true or not, this bill gives them an absolute monopoly of all the trade and commerce of those islands, and it opens our market to them and refuses to open their markets to us. That is a fair sample of the Republican colonial policy with respect to commerce and the business enterprises of the United States.

I want to represent America and American constituencies in this House. I think that the same privileges that are extended to the Philippine exporters ought to be extended to the American exporters, and where we have a reduction of duties on our goods going there, in the same proportion we can extend this privilege and right to them. I have an amendment to that effect. I want to appeal to this House, and I want to appeal to the members on the other side to stand by American constituencies, by American interests, American traders, American shippers, and American farmers. If we intend to hold the Philippine Islands; if we are going to the immense expense of having an army there, and administering the affairs of those islands; if we intend to have low tariff duties there, so that they can have the benefit of it, we should have low tariff duties, so that we can get the benefit of it.

So that the only excuse calling for this vast expenditure of money is the possible future trade, the possible future market, the possible future chance to the American farmer and the manufacturer; but not a particle of benefit in trade comes to those that pay these taxes by this bill. I want to have my amendment pending, Mr. Chairman, and I want to let the American people know whether the Republican party intends to benefit commerce and trade and export business by its colonial policy or not. [Applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL].

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in giving my support to this bill I desire to have it understood that I do not concede the right of Congress to lay and collect taxes upon commerce coming to us from any territory belonging to the United States. I believe that when the treaty of peace with Spain was signed the Philippine Archipelago became American territory, belonging to the United States, and the Filipinos became American citizens, and that under the Constitution of the United States we are entitled to have free trade and free commercial intercourse wherever the flag of the United States floats with authority. Anxious as I am to rid our country of the burden cast upon us by that treaty and give the Filipinos their land and liberty, so long as we have them I shall hold to that doctrine.

But, Mr. Chairman, the Supreme Court of the United States—and I speak with all due deference to that great body—by a shifting majority of one decided that it was lawful to lay and collect a tax upon importations from territory belonging to the United States. For the purposes of legislation, it is useless to question that decision. I shall therefore vote for this bill because it charges those who are entitled to free trade with the United States a 25 per cent tax instead of a 75 per cent tax, and to that extent is more just to the Filipinos and our people than the present law.

One would think, Mr. Chairman, that the report made by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee was a Democratic document in all respects save in its claim of right to levy any tax at all and in advocating a law discriminating against our own people. When those who are wedded to the idol of protection can consent to give to Congress and to the American people reasons such as are contained in the report of the majority, there is some hope yet that Ephraim may be dissevered from his idols. Just listen, it sounds like a Democratic message and not an epistle from the high priests of protection. What does it say?

It is believed by the Secretary of War and also by the Commission that more revenue will be received from a duty of 25 per cent, as proposed, than under the present rate of 75 per cent of the Dingley rates.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the enunciation of the old Democratic doctrine—that a moderate tariff will relieve the producers and consumers of our country from unjust exactions and afford greater revenue to the Government to meet its expenses than will a protective tariff. That is good Democracy, and the trouble is when these gentlemen come to do even measurable justice to our Filipino citizens, now subjects of the Republican party and the Republican Administration, they can not do it without in a measure falling into Democratic thought and Democratic theories of government. But there is another proposition advanced in the remarkable document submitted by the Republican majority of the Ways and Means Committee.

In addition to raising revenue—

So says the report of the majority—

the passage of the bill will doubtless have an important effect in encouraging the industries of the islands.

Now, Mr. Chairman, how is this beneficial effect to be had; how is it to come to the Filipinos under this bill? Simply by admitting their goods into the markets of the United States upon more reasonable terms than they now receive. If that proposition be true, is it not equally true that if this bill contained a provision admitting our goods from the United States into the Philippine Islands at a duty rate of 25 per cent instead of 75 per cent, as at present, that such reduction would in like manner stimulate and benefit American products, American industries, and American manufactures? Carry that argument, gentlemen on the Republican side, to its logical conclusion and you reach what? That when the goods of any country are admitted upon more favorable terms where they seek a market, that such concessions stimulate the manufacturing and the productive enterprise of such country.

Now, then, when this Philippine policy was entered upon we were told that we were going to get a great volume of increasing business, and men who sheltered themselves under the doctrine of Providence and "Rally round the flag, boys," at heart were looking with longing eyes and stretching out the bony fingers of greed and avarice toward these islands and their products and the possibilities therein.

You told the American people that the Orient was the proper outlet for American trade, and yet to-day you refuse to admit American goods into the Philippine Islands, either upon the basis of free trade or to reduce the tariff upon American goods exported to the Philippine Islands to 25 per cent of the present Dingley rate, the basis upon which you propose to admit here goods from the Philippines. If it is a good thing for the Filipinos to get their goods in here at one-third of the present rates, why is it not a good thing for the manufacturers and producers of the United States to get their goods into the Philippine Islands at one-third of the present rate, even if we can not have free commercial intercourse with them?

Now, then, if you propose to keep up this tariff wall, admitting Philippine goods here at 25 per cent of the rate at which goods from foreign countries are admitted, and denying the people of the United States access to the markets of these conquered provinces upon like terms, how do you expect to get this boasted advantage to American trade and American business?

We are told that under the treaty with Spain, if we reduce the duty on goods going there from this country to 25 per cent, we shall be compelled to give the same terms to Spain. Even if that be true, what disadvantage can it be to us to get into that country upon an equality with Spain, and at an advantage of 75 per cent in tariff duties over any other country seeking the Philippine trade? Spain now enjoys equality with us; then what harm can come to the Philippine islanders or to the producers and manufacturers of the United States by breaking down the tariff wall that exists between this country and an American possession, no matter where it exists? The logical effect of the argument submitted here by the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means—the protection Republican members of that committee—is that by reducing the tariff into this country you increase the revenues and reduce the tax upon the consumer; not only that, but by reducing the duty in foreign countries and securing more favorable trade relations with them you stimulate at home the productive energies of American enterprises and the great business interests seeking a market for our surplus products and our surplus of manufactured goods.

Shun it as you may, the Republican party will be compelled to yield to the growing sentiment in this country for free-trade relations not only with our island possessions, but with the world.

I do not wonder that the devotees of the high protective principle shrink from disturbing the citadel in which tariff beneficiaries are intrenched, but unless they do abate their rapacity the country will destroy their special privileges, root and branch. [Applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, when a measure involving practically the same issue now presented was before this House the question whether there was any constitutional power to pass a law like this was somewhat discussed. The practical, economical question involved was also considered to some extent, so far as there was opportunity. This side of the House considered it a disregard and abuse of constitutional power to impose upon the people of the Philippine Islands and upon those of the United States such legislation as was embodied in the bill then passed. It was regarded also as bad policy (the constitutional question aside) to impose so high a rate of duty. I suppose upon the other side considerations of the Constitution have as little influence now as they had then. The bringing forward of this bill, however, is a concession that as to the practical question involved, as to the effect and operation of the law itself (constitutional considerations aside), the enormously high duty imposed has been productive of evil instead of good.

The gentlemen now propose to reduce the duty two-thirds. Upon this side we should be glad to have it removed entirely, both because the legislation is bad in effect and because it is unwarranted in principle. It is, however, too much to hope that in this House, constituted as it is, legislation within the grooves and boundaries of the Constitution may be secured. It is somewhat gratifying, however, that gentlemen upon the other side, so full of wisdom and so abundant in their rosy predictions but a few months ago, are now here themselves asking for legislation which then they rejected, because not only was the question whether there should be such legislation at all, whether there was any authority or could be any authority for it at all raised and discussed, but the proposition to make the duty lower, if there should be a duty at all, was made and voted upon, and with almost, if not quite, the solid opposition of the other side, the proposition for lower rates of duties was rejected. Gentlemen are now testifying by what they are doing to the correctness of our conclusions as to the economic question involved. But it is almost too much to hope that the time may not be far distant when they will concede also the correctness of our views on the constitutional question. That is quite too much to hope from that side.

The Constitution has very little to do with the deliberations of the gentlemen, and very much less to do with their actions. But they do concede, and they do now themselves proclaim, not that they disregarded the Constitution (because they care nothing about that), but that they blundered egregiously in their rate of duty, that their attempted legislation has been a ghastly failure, that it is an abortion from which they themselves are glad to flee.

The bringing forward of this bill for 25 per cent of the Dingley duties as the rate to be fixed instead of 75 per cent is a concession by them that upon the economic question involved they were wrong two-thirds, and even from their own standpoint right but one-third. Let us hope the time is not far distant when a further demonstration will satisfy even those gentlemen that they are wrong as to the remaining third, and that, not out of regard for the Constitution, which will not influence them, but from a demonstration of another failure, they will remove the duty entirely.

We have gone into a fine performance over in the Philippine Islands. The beauty of it in some respects is illustrated by what is taking place down in Venezuela now. The time was when this country was thrilled by a Presidential message upon the Venezuelan situation, when it was declared to the world that the American Republic had regard, if others had not, for the Monroe doctrine. Now we are treading tenderly. Having done ourselves what is a complete abandonment and violation in spirit of the Monroe doctrine, in projecting ourselves into the politics and into land grabbing in the Old World, we are moving slowly and tenderly and gingerly, afraid of our shadows, afraid to disclose anything, afraid to discuss anything in relation to the Monroe doctrine, because we know not at what point or in what way or with what effect the assertion of it now may make us ridiculous in regard to some of our own performances which are coincident in point of time. If only we could let the Filipinos have the measure of independence which we boast is the right of all people, if only we could free our own people from the exactions which come from spoliation in the Old World and the New, if only we could swing back to the sound doctrines of the past, the Monroe doctrine included, how well it would be for us, and how well it would be for all the wide world with whom we may have any concern or dealings. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, when the Porto Rican tariff bill was before the House for consideration, I found myself by force of circumstances in company with the opposition against the passage of the bill. I believed I was right in opposing that bill. I doubted the constitutionality of the measure and was much opposed to the policy of the bill as applied to the island of Porto Rico. The Supreme Court of the United States afterwards decided that the bill was constitutional, and whatever may be thought of the course of logic that brought about that conclusion, the judgment of that court has finally settled the question, and the power of Congress to enact this kind of legislation is no longer a proposition open to debate. In relation to the matter of policy, the situation presented by the Philippine Archipelago is materially different from that presented by the island of Porto Rico. When the Porto Rican tariff bill was enacted, no civil government had been established for the island of Porto Rico with authority to impose in behalf of its people a tax upon the commerce of the United States going to the island.

Something less than a year ago Congress passed the Philippine government bill, a bill broad, liberal, and humane in its provisions, conferring upon the civil government almost unlimited power to impose all kinds of customs and internal taxations upon the commerce of the world, including the United States. I believe that ultimately there ought to be free trade between this Government and all of its possessions, but I am willing to accept the judgment of the Committee on Ways and Means that the time has not yet come to establish free trade between this country and the Philippine Archipelago. I believe this measure is one of great importance. I know it is one that will do incalculable good to the trade of the Philippine Archipelago, and the reduction of the customs charges to 25 per cent of the Dingley rates is not only justified, but, perhaps, required by existing conditions. This measure is simply an amplification of the liberal and humane policy outlined by the Congress in the Philippine government bill passed last summer, a continuation of the humane and liberal policy uniformly embodied in our acts of administration of the Philippine Archipelago ever since that archipelago fell within the sovereignty of the United States.

I do not believe that in all history such liberal and humane laws have been enacted toward colonies or dependencies or possessions or territories, or whatever you may style them, or such a generous policy of administration as has characterized the relations of this Government toward that archipelago. I am somewhat familiar with the conditions in the Philippine Islands, and know of the imperative need of legislation of this character. Trade is languishing, a general condition of depression exists, and the reduction in customs rates that we made about a year ago afforded but little relief. If we are to enjoy the benefits of the trade with the Philippine Archipelago, we must establish a more liberal trade policy with it, and I believe the reduction provided by this bill will encourage trade and be a stimulus to production, and that it will result in great benefit both to the islands and to the United States. Therefore I am heartily in favor of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this bill is not a surprise to me. The reason for its introduction is that more revenue is needed in the Philippine Islands. The 75 per cent tariff which you levied upon goods coming into this country, and which you agreed to pay back to the servants of the American people who run the Philippine Islands, has not yielded much revenue. When the Philippine Islands have had anything to export they have sent it to England and her colonies and to Spain, and precious little of it to this adopted mother of theirs.

Now, the result is that the President and the administration in the Philippine Islands find that they have not much revenue with which to run the islands, and that this source of revenue which they told you would be so large if you put 75 per cent tariff on goods brought into this country has not had that effect. Now they come to you and say if you will lower this revenue to 25 per cent the net amount of it will be much greater, and you will begin to get some goods into this country from the Philippine Islands. I do not doubt that that is a fact, and I do believe that we should give every advantage to the Philippine Islands. Under these restrictive tariff laws no country and no management could ever bring anything like prosperity to those islands. I will mention one fact. Take the tobacco interests in the Philippine Islands. It will not pay them to grow and send their tobacco to any country that levies a duty against it. It will not pay the grower and shipper to do that; and tobacco is one of the few great products which she must depend upon in her export trade.

Now, this bill shows to you that the prediction of a lot of rainbow chasers who have absolutely disregarded cause and effect have not come true, and in the future, unless based upon better grounds than in the past, I say to you I do not believe they will ever come true.

What were the conditions in the Philippine Islands in 1901? The chief product was rice. In a speech I made in the last session of this Congress I said that there would be a deficiency in rice, because a large amount of territory which was accustomed to grow rice had been withdrawn from rice cultivation; that the men who worked that land had been lured into the city because better wages were given them by the United States commissary and quartermaster departments, and the result was that they left their land lying idle, and there was just that much less rice grown in the country. Was not that true? What do you find this year? You find $2,000,000 raised for the purpose of going to Siam and buying rice to feed a starving population.

Now, I say this was the natural result, which you will always find running from cause to effect. I intimated that this condition of affairs would exist, that it will exist in the near future more than it does now for another cause, and that is that the rinderpest has killed off about nine-tenths of the carabao of those islands, the only animal with which the rice fields could be plowed. The result has been that instead of having rice to export, they have not enough rice with which to feed themselves. Yet these men who predicted such prosperity for the Philippine Islands wanted to tell you that they based their prediction upon a large amount of rice for export.

Then they told you that there would be a large amount of sugar for export. The same conditions have followed with reference to sugar. There has been less sugar land under cultivation and less ability to cultivate it. The consequence was there was less revenue derived from sugar and very little of it was shipped out of the country, and certainly it could not be shipped to a country that charged 75 per cent of the Dingley rates.

But beyond that you heard them talk of coal. Have you ever heard from that day on to this of any coal being found or developed or shipped abroad? How was it as to copper? Have you heard of any great copper mine being put into operation? A full year has elapsed since that time. How about iron, and how about the great production of gold that was to be produced in such enormous quantities? Have you heard anything of it? Oh, no. And you have not even heard anything about timber.

I can simply say to you, gentlemen, that all these things that were talked about by these optimists have been rainbows. They have been chasing them and making you believe that those islands are going to be very productive and very interesting to us because of what we were going to get from them. But as we go along from year to year we will find the condition now presented will not improve to any great extent, because they have based their predictions upon just what I have pointed out existed in the city of Manila in 1901. There was at that time an artificial stimulus to business. The city was busy because America was paying her soldiers there. America had a lot of men who went there for the purpose of selling to our soldiers articles we imported into that country.

In other words, as long as American money was poured into that country of course its trade was stimulated. But just as soon as you withdrew your troops and withdrew this large amount of money which we spent there—money of the American taxpayers, not money earned or made in the Philippine Islands—you began to have this condition of affairs which demanded greater revenues for those who are making appropriations and spending the money there. The gentlemen told us they would be pleased to have free trade with those islands, but free trade is not what they want. They want more money to pay their salaries with, they want money to pay the expenditures with. They have told you that these islands would amply pay their way, and now they want money taken at our ports, money paid in this country in duty, turned back into their treasury.

I am sorry to say that I see nothing very bright in the future of those islands. I see very little of the results of the boasted American management there. It is true they have peace; but peace does not seem to bring plenty or prosperity. It does not seem to bring development. I was in hopes that I was wrong and they were right. I have watched daily the news from the Philippine Islands, and we have found what? We have found plague, famine, and increased taxation. That is about all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand there is no other gentleman on that side who desires to speak.

Mr. Chairman, I have but few words to say in conclusion. The question has been raised by gentlemen on the other side, Why not take off the duties on goods coming from the Philippine Islands? For this reason: Under the treaty of Paris, whatever concession we make on goods coming from the United States to the Philippine Islands must be made on goods coming from Spain to the Philippine Islands. Now, the United States and Spain together send into the Philippine Islands a little more than one-fifth of the importations received there from the whole world, so that taking off the duties takes off one-fifth of the revenue from the customs duty.

The revenue from customs duties in the Philippine Islands amounts to nearly $9,000,000 a year; so that that proposition would take off from one million and three-quarters to two millions of dollars of revenue by having absolute free trade from the United States to the Philippine Islands and between Spain and the Philippine Islands on goods exported from Spain to the Philippine Islands. Of course we can not have that, because the Philippine expenditures are running up to the revenue from year to year. When the time comes, perhaps after the treaty with Spain, which is to extend for ten years, shall have expired, and we can then leave Spain on an even keel with the rest of the world, the time will come for free trade. It may come sooner than that; it may come then. We can not do it now; and that is the reason the committee have reported the bill in this way.

It is true that General Wright did say that it would be better to have free trade than to have 25 per cent. He did say so, and anybody can see it would be better for the people of the Philippine Islands and the farmers of the Philippine Islands to have free trade; but he did also say in that connection that they needed this revenue—they needed what revenue they could get from this duty—and he thought the revenues would be increased from the reduction to 25 per cent instead of 75 per cent, because of an increased importation of goods from the Philippine Islands into the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am ready for the bill to be read for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second section of the act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 8, 1902, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That on and after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries: Provided, That upon all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago there shall be levied, collected, and paid only 25 per cent of the rates of duty aforesaid: And provided further, That the rates of duty which are required hereby to be levied, collected, and paid upon products of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States shall be less any duty or taxes levied, collected, and paid thereon upon the shipment thereof from the Philippine Archipelago, as provided by the act of the United States Philippine Commission referred to in section 1 of this act, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, but all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Islands admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty under the provisions of this act and coming directly from said islands to the United States for use and consumption therein shall be hereafter exempt from any export duties imposed in the Philippine Islands."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

That no duty shall be charged upon articles, goods, or commodities imported into the Philippine Islands from the United States, and upon articles, goods, and commodities the growth and product of the Philippine Islands coming into the United States from those islands no duty shall be charged.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order on that amendment, that it is not germane to the section or to the bill. The section provides for duties on goods coming from the Philippine Islands to the United States. The amendment of the gentleman amends the law so as to apply to goods going into the Philippine Islands from the United States, which is entirely another subject-matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. In reply to the gentleman, I only want to say that it is impossible to separate the questions on a point of order. The gentleman by his statement conceded that one part of the proposition would be in order. We are dealing with the importation of the goods into the Philippine Islands. Now, I think it would be monstrous to say that while dealing with importation into, we can not deal with exportation from, the islands. No such narrow construction as that was ever placed on any tariff bill by the Committee of the Whole, by any committee of the House, or by the House of Representatives. I venture to say on a duty the whole question of taxes or revenue is raised, and whether it is revenue derived from goods coming from the Philippine Islands or revenue on goods going there, it is in order. As to the amendment not being germane to the section, there is but one section; and if it is germane to any part of the bill, it is germane to that section. So I think there is no question but that the amendment is in order. This is the same amendment voted on in the Committee on Ways and Means without objection. The same rule which applied there applies here. There was no offer to make it out of order or have it ruled out of order in the Ways and Means Committee, and surely the same rules apply there as here.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the duties imposed upon goods coming from the Philippine Archipelago into the United States are regulated by an act of Congress to which this is an amendment, while the rates of duty imposed upon articles going into the Philippines are regulated by the Philippine Commission in accordance with the tariff schedule prepared by that Commission and ratified by Congress.

Mr. SWANSON. That was by an act of Congress, and the Commission have no power to regulate it now.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. One act has just as much force as another. In other words, that act of Congress is no more solemn than this act would be. It would be unheard of to say that we could not modify a former act.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not mean to say that. I am arguing the question of germaneness. I say it is not germane to the pending bill to modify the tariff rates imposed by the Philippine Commission, although it is, of course, within the power of Congress, in a proper way, to modify the rates. I am directing myself simply to the question of germaneness.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Let me suggest to the gentleman that the last two lines of the paragraph under discussion in this bill exempt such goods from export duty in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. DALZELL. I understand, but that provision is also original in the act that we are now proposing to amend, and has nothing to do with the rates of duty imposed by the Philippine Commission.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The whole question is open, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me. We have a perfect right by this independent act now to modify the rate of duty on goods going into the Philippines and on goods coming here. The whole question is open, and it can not be limited, as suggested by the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, on page 721 of the Manual the Chair will find a ruling that will perhaps aid the Chair in the decision of this question. I will read: "A bill raising revenue means a bill repealing a revenue law as well as one enacting such law." We are now "repealing" and "enacting" a "revenue law." We are repealing the law down to 25 per cent, and certainly the rule ought to work as far down as repealing a part of the existing law entirely. This amendment proposes to repeal the law in part by putting some articles on the free list.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the point is not well taken. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, just a moment. I discussed this amendment briefly in general debate, and I only want to say further that it seems to me that if we are going to treat these people in these colonies right we ought to give them the benefit of our trade. We ought to have an opportunity to trade with them and they should have the same opportunity to trade with us. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee) there were—49 ayes, 64 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the rate of duty charged on all articles, goods, and commodities exported from the United States into the Philippine Islands shall be 25 per cent of the present rate.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order that I made against the other. This does not have the same excuse that the other had—that it relates to goods coming into this country from the Philippine Islands.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I presume the ruling will be the same, and therefore I do not desire to be heard. The same principle applies.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment was argued by me in general debate. As I stated, I do not desire to take the time of the committee further than to say that this bill provides that upon all articles, goods, and products of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States from that archipelago there shall be collected, levied, and paid only 25 per cent. Now, this amendment, if adopted, simply reverses it and places the rate at 25 per cent on exports from the United States into the Philippine Islands. Now, if we are going to reduce from 75 to 25 per cent the duties upon goods brought here from those islands, is it not manifestly just that we should make the same reduction upon the articles our own people send to the Philippine Islands? If I were to argue the matter a week, I could not make the point stronger than I have done. If we want to do justice to our own people—to treat them as well as we treat the Filipinos—let us adopt this amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. This amendment would simply reduce the revenues of the Philippine government a million and a half dollars annually. We can not afford to do it. Let us have a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, there were on a division (called for by Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee)—ayes 50, noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 by adding after "islands," line 17, page 2, these words: "And provided further, That all coals mined and shipped from the Philippines to the United States shall be placed on the free list, and that there shall not be levied and collected any duty on such coal."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Would it be in order to amend the amendment by inserting after "coal" the words "and ice?" [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the Republicans wish to continue to give the cold shoulder to the Filipinos, that amendment may be all right. [Laughter.]

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. GAINES of Tennessee was rejected.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment:

That no duty shall be charged upon articles, goods, or commodities imported into the Philippine Islands from the United States in excess of the duty upon like articles, goods, or commodities imported from the Philippine Islands into the United States.

Mr. Chairman, we have no schedule prepared showing—the chairman of the committee can not inform us, nobody knows—what will be the comparative rates of duty when this bill is passed upon articles or goods coming from the Philippine Islands into the United States and similar goods going from the United States into the Philippine Islands. No opportunity was given to ascertain that matter before this bill was considered and passed in the committee. It was railroaded through without any certain information being possessed by a single member of the committee which was intrusted with the preparation of legislation on this subject. I think that a citizen of the United States engaged in trade or commerce or business or farming—any citizen who has something to sell—ought to have extended to him with reference to such articles the same privileges or opportunities of trade with reference to rates that are extended to other persons similarly situated.

Mr. Chairman, when this bill passes and becomes a law, as seems to be the purpose of those in power, it will be impossible to determine to what extent American enterprise, American industry, including the farming industry of this country, is discriminated against in these foreign markets. The effect of this amendment which I have offered will be that a higher rate of duty can not be charged upon goods shipped from the United States to the Philippine Islands than is charged on similar goods coming here. The amendment simply means that there shall be equality of duty, equality of trade, equality of right—that the American citizen engaged in trade or commerce shall have the same rights and privileges as the citizen of the Philippine Islands.

To vote against this amendment is to say that you are not willing to give to the American farmer the same privilege to sell his farm products in the Philippine Islands that you are willing to give to farmers of the Philippine Islands to sell their products in the American market. It is to say that you are not willing to give to the American manufacturer the same chance to sell his goods in the Philippine Islands that you are willing to give to the Filipino merchant to sell his goods here. The operation of this amendment will be that our farmers and manufacturers can not be charged in the Philippines a duty in excess of what we charge them when they send their goods here.

The only excuse that has been urged or intimated against a proposition of this kind has been made by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, who has said that if we allow this privilege to our farmers, to our laborers, to our merchants, the same privilege would have to be extended to Spain under the treaty of peace. Mr. Chairman, we need apprehend no danger from Spain. She is not a manufacturing nation; she is not a trading nation; she makes nothing of any consequence to be exported. The simple effect is to give the American farmer and the American manufacturer in the Philippine Islands certain advantages not possessed there by those of other nations; and I insist that we, as representatives of the American people, their commerce and their aspirations, should insist upon the enjoyment of these privileges by our own citizens.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does my friend from Virginia think that when the Filipinos have been for years and years, and are now, the victims by the thousands and thousands of disease, pestilence, and horrible wars, and with famine now staring them in the face, bankrupt in spirit, bankrupt as a people, with a bankrupt treasury, that we, who make the laws which control them, should force them in such condition to pay the same duty on goods they send to the United States that we pay when we send our goods to the Philippines, when we are free of disease, pestilence, famine, and wars, a rich, strong, and happy nation, with an overflowing Treasury?

Does the gentleman contend that such a law under such circumstances would be just?

Mr. SWANSON. I think it would be just in this way: This bill proposes to give to the people of the Philippine Islands a reduction of duty—allowing them to pay on their imports to the United States 25 per cent of the duties imposed upon imports from other countries. I think that while this may be a benefit to the Filipinos they would be still further benefited if they were enabled by the free importation of our goods into that country to buy them cheaper. I am not a protectionist holding the theory that a high tariff imposed upon goods and products entering the Philippine Islands would be a benefit to the Filipinos. I have not yet learned to think that a high protective wall erected around those islands—that a law prohibiting them from buying American goods cheaply—would be an injury to them. If the gentleman belongs to that school of philosophy his views are distinctly different from mine. I say that it would benefit the Filipinos to give them American goods cheaply—to permit the importation of American goods into their markets at a low rate of duty. In view of the large sums of money that this Government has been and is obliged to spend in the Philippines, it seems to me it would only be just to American merchants, American farmers, and American manufacturers to extend to them the privileges which my amendment proposes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SWANSON) there were—ayes 58, noes 84.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk began the reading of section 2.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, before section 2 is read, I wish to offer one more amendment to the first section. I move to amend by striking out, in lines 3 and 4 of page 2, the words "only 25 per cent of the rates of duties aforesaid" and insert the following: "no rates of duty."

I do not believe that we ought to charge any rate of duty upon those goods. We have not yet voted upon a separate amendment to that effect, and I therefore move that amendment. The effect of it will be simply to admit the goods and commodities of the Philippine Archipelago the products of those islands free of duty into the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. PALMER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15702) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit to the Ways and Means Committee with instructions to report a bill providing that no duty shall be charged upon articles, goods, and commodities imported into the Philippine Islands from the United States; and further, that upon articles, goods, and commodities, the growth and product of the Philippine Islands, coming into the United States from those islands, no duty shall be charged.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee) there were—ayes 56, noes 79.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Pending the ordering of tellers, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, nays 122, answering "present" 5, not voting 133; as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PURE FOOD.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the bill H. R. 3109 is the special and continuing order for this hour. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3109) for preventing the adulteration, misbranding, and imitation of foods, beverages, candies, drugs, and condiments in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and for regulating interstate traffic therein, and for other purposes, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time may be equally divided, that in favor of the bill to be controlled by myself, and in opposition by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the time may be equally divided and controlled by himself and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I now yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio who reported this bill.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, very few subjects have attracted more general and deep interest than the consideration of ways and means by which the people of the country may obtain pure food and unadulterated drugs. Nearly fourteen years ago the subject was first introduced into Congress by a Senator from Nebraska, and since then it has continually engrossed the attention of this body. Various societies throughout the country have taken action upon the question and made certain and emphatic recommendations. A large congress has been organized, known as the pure-food congress, and at its last meeting in this city there were present more than 400 delegates representing all classes, occupations, and all branches of industry and human pursuits. As a result of the deliberations of the convention last mentioned, there was practically a unanimous recommendation to Congress that such a measure as the one now pending be enacted into a statute.

The purpose of this bill is not to prohibit the manufacture or sale of anything that is not deleterious, but it is to prohibit the manufacture of any sort of food that is deleterious, and to provide that any food or drug which is adulterated shall bear upon its face the badge of what it is, so that the purchaser may know what he is to get and he will secure that for which he pays. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has spent more than three weeks in listening to the testimony of experts and laymen, the testimony of manufacturers and merchants, in its almost daily sessions through that period, and while there were three bills relating to the same subject, in addition to this one, pending before the committee, it was the conclusion of the majority of the committee that the bill 3109 best represents the wishes of the people upon the subject and will be most practicable in its operations.

The bill provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall, from the chemical branch or bureau of the Department, create a special bureau of chemists who shall examine food products and drugs which are placed upon the market. The authority of this bureau when constituted will not be permitted to go into any State and interfere with any such product manufactured within that State, but it shall have supervision over such products which are shipped from one State into another, into the Territories, or into the District of Columbia, and it will forbid the manufacture of any deleterious food product and sale of any adulterated product under false representation.

Now, this bureau of chemistry shall have authority to prescribe certain standards of excellence in food and of purity in drugs. When anyone ships an article from one State to another which is forbidden by this statute, or any impure drug, upon information delivered by an agent of this bureau upon inspection of any suspected article, the district attorney for the district in which the offending article is found shall institute proceedings in the proper court to inflict the prescribed punishment. When a test is being made of a certain food product or drug, not only will the statute provide that the inspecting agent on the part of the Government, but the person against whom complaint is lodged shall have the right to be present and have his chemist there.

The bill defines what a "drug" is, and includes all medicines and preparations recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia for internal and external use. Defining the word "food:" It includes all articles used for food, drink, confectionery, or condiment by man or domestic animals, whether simple, mixed, or compound. The term "misbranded" shall apply to all drugs or articles of food, or articles which enter into the composition of food, the package or label of which shall bear any statement regarding the ingredients or substances contained in such article, which statement shall be false or misleading in any particular, and to any food or drug product which is falsely branded as to the State, Territory, or country in which it is manufactured or produced.

The definition of "adulteration" is:

For the purposes of this bill an article shall be deemed adulterated, in case of drugs, if when sold under a name recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia it differs from the standard of strength, quality, or purity as determined by the test laid down in such Pharmacopœia, official at the time of the investigation, and if its strength or purity fall below the professed standard under which it is sold; if it be an imitation of or offered for sale under the name of another article, and, in the case of a confectionery, if it contain terra alba, barytes, talc, chrome yellow, or other mineral substances, or poisonous colors or flavors, or other ingredients deleterious or detrimental to health.

In the case of food, any substance mixed with it so as to lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength, so that such product when offered for sale shall tend to deceive the purchaser.

If any substance or substances has or have been substituted wholly or in part for the article, so that the product when sold shall tend to deceive the purchaser.

If any valuable constituent of an article has been wholly or in part abstracted, so that the product when sold shall deceive the purchaser.

If it be an imitation of or offered for sale under the distinctive name of another article. If it be mixed, colored, powdered, or stained in a manner whereby damage or inferiority is concealed so that said product when sold shall tend to deceive the purchaser.

If it contain any added or poisonous ingredient which may render such article injurious to health.

If it is falsely labeled as a foreign product, or is in imitation of another substance of a previously established name, or which has been trade-marked or patented.

If it consists in whole or in part of a filthy, decomposed, or putrid animal or vegetable substance, or any portion of an animal unfit for food, or if it is the product of a diseased animal or one that has died otherwise than by slaughter.

But food shall not be deemed adulterated in certain cases:

Where compounds are known under their own distinctive names.

Where articles are labeled, branded, or tagged so as to plainly indicate that they are mixtures, compounds, combinations, imitations, or blends.

Where the same is labeled, branded, or tagged so as to show the character and constituents thereof. Where substances which enter into the preparation or preservation of food and which change their chemical nature in the preparation of food are branded at the time of manufacture with the names of the resulting substances which are left in the food when ready for consumption, together with the name and address of the manufacturer.

And as a protection to proprietors or manufacturers of proprietary food which contains no unwholesome added ingredient he shall not be compelled to disclose trade formulas, except so far as to secure freedom from adulteration or imitation.

As to the dealer, he is absolved from all liability if he receives from the manufacturer, resident of a State of this country, a written guaranty that the article sold to the dealer and offered by him to the public is exactly what it purports to be.

The bill provides, in that feature which looks to its execution, that any dealer offering for sale a suspected article shall be compelled to give to the Government inspector a sample of the article complained of, and at the instance of the person against whom the complaint is alleged the sample shall be divided into three parts, one to be kept by him, one to be kept by the Government, and one to be kept by the United States district attorney. And these formulas of which I spoke a moment ago, when they have been established by this bureau of chemistry, may be offered in evidence in the courts in any proceeding under this proposed act. But this formula shall not be taken as prima facie evidence of the guilt of the accused, but its effect will be merely to serve as the opinion of that bureau upon these given substances; and the weight of it, whatever weight it may have, may be overthrown by testimony called by the defendant in the case.

The bill, before it was amended by the committee, contained these words:

Such standards and determinations, when so fixed * * * may be read in evidence in the United States courts, but shall not be considered as determining the adulteration of any articles under * * * this act until such standards and determinations are approved in the courts.

Your committee struck out the words "until such standards and determinations are approved in the courts," because it was not deemed to be within the power of Congress to fix the quality and conclusiveness of evidence in any proceeding at law, nor in a court in one case to approve of a standard in evidence which shall be binding and conclusive in another case. That is to say, your committee is of the opinion that while such standards and determinations may be offered in evidence, they are to be received for what they are worth intrinsically and may be overthrown by other evidence.

Section 10 of the bill excludes its provisions from commerce wholly internal in any State, and from interfering with the exercise of their police powers by the several States, and forbids their interference with laws enacted for the District of Columbia or by the Territorial legislatures for the several Territories regulating commerce in adulterated foods within such District and Territory.

There is no disposition on the part of the advocates of this bill to invade any State and undertaking to usurp the police powers of that State or to substitute its courts for the State courts in reference to any manufacture or any dealing in articles of commerce that are found wholly within that State, but recognizing, as has been demonstrated, the ineffectiveness of the miscellaneous sorts of legislation upon this subject by the various States, recognizing how inoperative have been statutes looking to the control of commerce passing out of one State into another, there has been, as I said in the beginning, a universal demand for the interposition of Congress, with the power which is vested in it by the Constitution, not only to regulate commerce between the States in the sense of controlling common carriers, but to go further and exercise such police power in connection with this commerce that nothing which is deleterious or deceptive or is a fraud or an imposition upon the people shall pass from one State to another.

Instead of being an interference with the administration of justice and the execution of the food laws of the various States, it is intended to be an auxiliary to those laws, and to help preserve to the people of the respective States pure food, pure drugs, saving them from fraud and deceit.

That there is an interest on the part of the people in this subject and that there is a demand on their part that Congress shall do something upon this important matter is evidenced by the fact that in nearly all the States of the Union pure-food laws are in existence and are being enforced with more or less success. I am informed that the legislature of the State from which my friend who represents the minority in the discussion of this matter comes—the State of Georgia—I understand that within the last few weeks, by a unanimous vote of the senate and house of representatives of that State, a pure-food law has been enacted.

I do not understand that there is any organized opposition to this measure, except possibly as to the method of executing its provisions. Upon the sentiment that the people should be protected against fraud and deception, upon the proposition that health should be preserved by withholding from market impure food, there can be no dissension in the opinion of our people. Congress, by interfering so far as the scope of interstate commerce extends with the manufacture of impure drugs and adulterated food, seeks simply to throw around the purchaser and the consumer the protection of giving notice to him of what he is buying and what he is consuming.

Your committee, Mr. Chairman, are of the opinion that while a man has the right per se to manufacture a substance which looks like strawberry jam, he has no right to manufacture that substance and inject into it timothy seed and brand the vessel containing this fabrication with the name "strawberry jam." Your committee feel that the manufacturer or the dealer who sells this product should sell it for what it actually is, and should say: "While this looks like strawberry jam, while the timothy seed which it contains looks like strawberry seed, neither is genuine." And when a man puts an article upon the market which he calls coffee we want it to be coffee, not stuff compounded from tree bark and soil, which, by an ingenious process of compression and drying, is made to resemble the coffee berry, when there is no coffee at all in it.

Now, it is well known that among condiments which we daily use it is almost impossible to get pure pepper, pure cinnamon, or any of those things which go to give flavor to the food which we consume, it being universally recognized that nearly every one of these articles is adulterated; so that the consumer considers himself fortunate if he does buy something which is absolutely pure.

These adulterations are the outgrowth of the abnormal conditions which existed during the civil war. Army contractors, when they furnished to our soldiers shoddy clothing, when they furnished to them foods which were compounded of inferior substances—when we had so little time to investigate and protect ourselves against these conditions, rude as the fabrications were and easily detected as they might have been—the success met with in those times by those manufacturers of adulterated and counterfeit articles has led to an active industry, so that there are all over this country manufacturers engaged in the adulteration and debasement of food and drugs, until, as I said a moment ago, we feel like congratulating ourselves when we know that we have bought a pure article of food or an absolutely pure drug.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. McDERMOTT. As this bill applies to the District of Columbia, and under certain conditions to every State, it provides that if a dealer shall offer for sale or shall sell an adulterated article he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. With reference to the District of Columbia, it is provided that of every article that he has for sale he must furnish, at the request of the Government, a sample which may be analyzed. That sample is to be analyzed by Government officials on the one part, and, if the seller so desires, by some chemist selected by him; and if these two chemists differ, there shall be what you might call a chemist referee, who shall decide the dispute. So that you have an analysis on the part of the Government and an analysis on the part of the dealer, with the recognized proposition that those two chemists may disagree and that a third analysis may be furnished.

Yet you provide in this bill that without any scienter being established on the part of the dealer as to the fact that the article is adulterated he shall be held guilty of a crime. How could a grocer in the District of Columbia be protected in selling the kind of coffee or pepper that the gentleman has described, although he may have had no knowledge that the article was not perfectly pure? In other words, is it the intention of this bill that without any knowledge on the part of the dealer that there is an adulteration—that being a question that may be decided by three different forms of analysis, by three different chemists—the dealer shall be deemed guilty of a crime? Is there to be no question under this bill as to the intention or knowledge of the dealer in respect to the adulteration of the article? Is that the idea?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. I will answer the gentleman by saying that the bill provides that the dealer can protect himself by a certificate from the manufacturer that the article is genuine and that it is just what it purports to be. That is all the protection he needs and he is acquitted of all blame. If it is an adulteration the punishment should fall upon the manufacturer and not upon the dealer. Does that meet the gentleman's question?

Mr. McDERMOTT. In what section is that?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. I will answer in a moment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. In a minute.

Mr. MANN. I will state for the information of the gentleman from Ohio that what he refers to is in section 6 of the bill.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. For the information of the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. Chairman, I will read from the bill, in answer to his inquiry—on page 8 of the bill:

Provided further, That no dealer shall be convicted under the provisions of this act when he is able to prove a written guaranty of purity, in a form approved by the Secretary of Agriculture as published in his rules and regulations, signed by the manufacturer, or the party or parties from whom he purchased said articles: Provided also, That said guarantor or guarantors reside in the United States. Said guaranty shall contain the full name and address of the party or parties making the sale to the dealer, and said party or parties shall be amenable to the prosecutions, fines, and other penalties which would attach in due course to the dealer under the provisions of this act.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I will study that section for a moment.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. I will be glad now to answer any questions of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. PADGETT. The question I wanted to call attention to was the second proviso on page 8, which limits or qualifies that the guarantor or guarantors reside in the United States. Now, suppose that a dealer is unknowingly selling an adulterated foreign article, in the absence of any knowledge or information that it is defective?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. The answer to that is this: Of course, if the manufacturer lives beyond the seas, he is beyond the jurisdiction of our courts. We can not punish him. If he lives here, we think that the punishment should fall upon the manufacturer, and not upon the dealer; but if the manufacturer is foreign, then the local dealer should protect himself against prosecution by making sure that he is not selling an imitation or debased or impure article.

Mr. PADGETT. Ought not there to be a qualification that the dealer should knowingly violate the law?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. Well, the difficulty is in proving the knowledge in matters of that kind. In most cases you can prove intention where fraud is charged, but you can not in cases of this kind. A dealer would say that he had obtained the goods under such conditions that led him to believe they were genuine and pure; that he paid a fair price for them, and he thought they were all right. Now, how are you going to prove to the contrary?

Mr. PADGETT. Is it wise legislation to provide for the punishment of a man unless that man is guilty intentionally of some wrong?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. Of course the innocent ought not to be punished; but there are two forms of offenses.

Mr. PADGETT. Does not this bill provide for the punishment of the innocent and comprehend them within the scope of its enactment?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. In one sense, yes; but there are two ways in which offenses may be committed. One is by actually committing an offense, by knowingly and willfully doing that which is known to be wrong. The other is by being so willfully ignorant, so lacking in investigation and research and information, that it amounts to an offense.

Mr. PADGETT. Would it not be necessary that the dealer should analyze all of his articles. Suppose he analyzes one sample and that was all right, but that the sample that was analyzed by the chemist was wrong. Would he not be convicted under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. The bill provides that the dealer may call his own chemist and they may investigate the matter. If there be a disagreement it shall be submitted to court, and the amendment suggested by the committee to the bill shows that the purpose of the legislation is not to have anything absolutely prima facie against the accused, but it all must be judicially determined whether or not he is committing an offense under this act.

Mr. PADGETT. That is, as to the specific sample that is there provided for?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. Suppose the dealer has a sample analyzed and the report of the analysis is good?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. And then the chemist provided by the Department of Agriculture analyzes another sample, and that is found to be bad?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. Well, then, I suppose the dealer is guilty.

Mr. PADGETT. Then he would be guilty, and yet he would be acting in good faith and without any intentional wrong.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. You speak of two different samples.

Mr. PADGETT. I am speaking of two different samples of the same quality or product.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. They can not be of the same quality or product when one is pure and the other is impure.

Mr. PADGETT. Suppose, for instance, it should be canned goods, and one can was examined by one chemist and another can by a different chemist, and one should be reported pure and the other impure?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. The bill provides that before there can be any prosecution under it the Secretary of Agriculture, through his agent, shall obtain a sample of the goods which are being sold, and the prosecution is predicated upon that particular sample and none other.

Mr. PADGETT. That is just the very question I am talking about.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. And if that sample is impure, then he is guilty, unless he has taken that protecting guaranty of which I spoke a moment ago.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but you deprive him of a guaranty from any foreign dealer, and you throw him upon his own investigation. Now, he investigates, and the investigation that he made was in good faith and satisfied him as far as it went that the goods were pure. But the investigation and analysis of another sample showed that that part of it was impure. You say that he shall be convicted upon the analysis that was found impure, and that the analysis which he made in good faith and which showed the sample to be pure shall avail him nothing, and that he shall be convicted regardless of his good faith and the sincerity of his purpose, and in the absence of any knowledge or purpose to violate the law.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. I do not know about that.

Mr. SCHIRM. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether this bill would not work a hardship upon the retail dealer, since there is a provision in this bill whereby the wholesale dealer can protect himself by securing from the manufacturer a certificate as to the character of the drug or food that he buys from him, and whether the result of this will not be to organize a band of detectives to go about from one small dealer to another, and put each dealer in the position of expending large sums of money to make this expert analysis, and also put him in the position of not being able to prove that the goods he has sold are sold under the very certificate that the wholesale dealer retains, and from whom he himself has bought or purchased?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. The retail dealer can protect himself with the same certificate, under this act.

Mr. SCHIRM. Then I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio further whether it would not be a difficult thing to identify just exactly what passed under that certificate, or whether there is any provision available for stamping packages, barrels, and boxes, and the prevention of the removal of the goods sold under certificate, so that they can always be identified by that certificate.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. That matter was discussed at considerable length in the committee. It is to be expected in the preparation of all statutes for the protection of society that complications will arise, and there are times when the innocent may suffer along with the guilty. But, as to this particular point, it was suggested that if a bill was made out showing so much merchandise of a certain kind sold, so many barrels of flour, for instance, so many bags of coffee in a certain bill, and the guaranty of the wholesaler in the last instance and of the miller in the first instance is on that bill, that that is a protection to the dealer in the articles contained therein.

Mr. SCHIRM. Do I understand the gentleman from Ohio to mean that if a retail dealer is indicted under this act it is necessary for him to go back to the wholesale dealer and find which certificate covered the goods he bought from him in order to protect himself against prosecution?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. I do not say that conviction is inevitable. I say that the analysis of this sample would be prima facie evidence of guilt, but he could show his innocence by other means if he were not guilty.

Mr. SCHIRM. But in your reply to the gentleman from New Jersey, in order to obviate this obligation of establishing his innocence, you say it is overcome by the fact that he covers himself with a certificate from the manufacturer.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. I stated to the gentleman from New Jersey that that was one of the ways in which he could protect himself. He could have this guaranty from the wholesale dealer or manufacturer.

Mr. SCHIRM. Now, let me ask the gentleman this: No doubt he will admit that the wholesale dealer, buying from the manufacturer, buys in large quantities, often in bulk. The stuff that he buys is distributed among many retail dealers. Now, if a retail dealer is indicted it will be a difficult matter for the wholesale dealer to protect his customer by the certificate that he holds, for the reason that he may not be able to identify that stuff that he sold as the stuff for the sale of which the retail dealer is indicted.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. Maybe that is all right. Upon every statute book of every State in this Union where laws have been enacted on this subject there are objections to be found; but we must do the best we can to throw around the dealer all the environment of protection we can under this act, and give him all the show we possibly can give him. But because some one will be put to some inconvenience and some expense to clear his skirts, is that sufficient reason why we should be without any protection to the people at all in the way of pure-food legislation?

Mr. SCHIRM. I am as much in favor of pure food as the gentleman is, but these laws work a hardship upon people who are the least able to bear it. It is well known that a great part of the retail grocers in the cities are foreigners, men who by their thrift have saved a few hundred dollars and have put them into a corner grocery store. They are not acquainted with the laws; and of course I know that ignorance of the law is no excuse; but it works a hardship upon John Schmidt to go and tell him he must have an analysis made of the pepper sold to another John Schmidt to see whether it is pure food. That will throw them into such a state of confusion that you might as well just set them out of business at once.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. I thought the gentleman from Maryland was asking me a question.

Mr. SCHIRM. I was trying to show you the effect of this.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. I will give you some time if you desire.

Mr. SCHIRM. I was trying to show you how burdensome it was, and that the burden is being put upon those who are the least able to bear it.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I think that idea of making the wholesaler finally responsible is a very happy one, but what I am troubled about is that when we read the section you have not made him responsible. You have relieved the retailer. He may show that the formula adopted by the Government as to the degree of purity has been complied with. You say that it shall relieve the retail dealer. You then provide that—

Said guaranty shall contain the full name and address of the party or parties making the sale to the dealer and said party or parties shall be amenable to the prosecutions, fines, and other penalties which would attach in due course to the dealer under the provisions of this act.

Now, then, it is not provided in any case that the party who has given the guaranty is merely responsible for his guaranty. He has not done anything that the retail dealer is responsible for under this act at all. He has sold the goods in Philadelphia with a certificate which he believes to correspond with the requirements of this act, and that certificate is that the goods are salable under the provisions of this act, and you say that the party giving that guaranty shall be liable to the prosecution, fines, and other penalties. What does that mean?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. It means that he shall be prosecuted for selling a false and spurious article.

Mr. McDERMOTT. It does not say so.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. That is what it means.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Oh, but it does not; it means what it says, and my suggestion is in the line of an amendment to make it say something that means something. In other words, you are about to make the wholesale dealer liable, and yet you have not provided any offense whatever. You have made the fact of his giving a certificate there, with or without knowledge of its falsity, an avenue of escape for the retail dealer. Then you provide that the giving of that certificate shall make the wholesale dealer responsible. Your certificate may be signed by the manufacturer or by the wholesale vendor, and then you provide for what? That it shall contain the full name and address of the party making the sale, not the full name and address of the manufacturer, and the said party shall be amenable to prosecution, fines, etc., that can be visited upon the retail vendor when he is guilty of doing certain acts which are made the basis of the crime, and which the wholesale vendor can not possiby do.

My objection, therefore, is that you do not provide anything whatever except this: That the manufacturer may, and most manufacturers will, if we take their advertisements in the daily papers as indications of what they think of the purity of their goods, give a certificate that it has all the things required by the Secretary of Agriculture. That protects the retail dealer whether the certificate is false or not. You have not any provision, whether the goods are sold in Pennsylvania or elsewhere—you have not any provision which applies to the wholesale dealer. It is a certificate or demonstration of the fact of the purity of the goods which is to be demonstrated subsequently by the chemical analysis, and of the belief of the man who sold them to him. For the truth or untruth of that certificate you have provided no penalty in the act whatever.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. That is covered by the sweeping provision that anybody who manufactures or sells any adulterated article of food or drug shall be punished under the penalties provided for in this act. The certificate is for the sole purpose of protecting the retail dealer or the middleman between the retail dealer and the manufacturer. You can not go back of the manufacturer; you can not give him a certificate for the article, because if it is impure nobody knows it better than he does. Of course, the manufacturer knows if the article he manufactures is impure, but the one to whom he sells the goods in good faith, the person who buys them from him in good faith, stands on the certificate that he gives him, and he will say to the Government, when complaint is made that he is selling impure goods, "I stand on the certificate from a reputable manufacturer." It protects the wholesale dealer, who, on the basis of a certificate, will say, "I thought I was selling pure goods;" but when you come to the manufacturer he stands alone, without any protection thrown around him at all, except his ability to prove that the article sold was pure.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I beg to suggest to the gentleman that under section 6 he does not stand in any such position.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. The certificate is to protect the innocent retail dealer——

Mr. McDERMOTT. Why not protect the wholesale dealer?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. It will. It says the dealer; it does not say wholesale or retail.

Mr. McDERMOTT. You provide that a certificate of guaranty shall be an absolute plea in bar. Now, you attempt under this act to provide that one who furnishes the plea shall be punished if it is shown the plea is false. That is the idea of the act, but the words do not accomplish that purpose.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. The gentleman misconceives that provision of the act.

Mr. McDERMOTT. If the gentleman can show me how under that wording——

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. That simply protects the innocent dealer, the vendor, whether he be a wholesaler or a retailer. That is all it is for.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield any further, for I have given all the time I care to the colloquy.

Mr. Chairman, there can be no question here, it seems to me, as to the power of Congress to legislate on this subject and in this manner; that it has a right to regulate by police power the kind and quality of goods that shall be transported from State to State, and that there is a real necessity for such legislation, as this has been made manifest by the almost universal demand of the citizens of our country for this bill.

A number of gentlemen appeared before the committee during the hearings in organized opposition to the bill. The wholesale manufacturers and distributers of the West and of the East were before the committee in amiable opposition to the bill—some as to the underlying principle of it and some to the proposed manner of execution. But I am informed that since the adjournment of the first session of this Congress all this opposition has subsided, and that practically there is not among the manufacturers and the wholesalers any objection to this legislation.

We have the power to so legislate, as established by repeated precedent. We created an Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate freight rates. It has been declared a constitutional body. We have required railroads engaged in interstate commerce to use safety appliances in the operation of their trains. It stands. We have levied tribute upon the manufacturers of oleomargarine because it imitates butter, and the law will stand. We quarantine against diseased cattle being transported from one State to another, and we isolate and hold fast upon the islands or our seas travelers visiting or returning to our shores who are suspected of having infectious or contagious disease. If we can do these why may we not protect our people against debased and fraudulent food and impure drugs? If we can, and we can, I think we should.

Mr. HEPBURN. I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] is recognized.

Mr. ADAMSON. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] expressed to me a few moments ago a desire that we should go back into the House for a few minutes in order that some measure in which he is interested might be called up.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move, then, that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3109) for preventing the adulteration, misbranding, and imitation of foods, beverages, candies, drugs, and condiments in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and for regulating interstate traffic therein, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to call up from the Speaker's table the urgent deficiency bill. The Senate has put on that bill two amendments—one appropriating $8,000 for the completion of the Sherman statue; the other making an appropriation of $3,400 for miscellaneous items covered by the contingent fund of the Senate. I should be glad to have the House concur in those two amendments.

The amendments were read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House concur in these two amendments of the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the order just made was laid on the table.

PURE FOOD.

On motion of Mr. HEPBURN, the House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair), and resumed the consideration of House bill 3109.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, in the protracted hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I discovered to my own satisfaction, after giving sufficient reading to the bill and its terms, that there was not only no necessity for its enactment, but that such legislation would be fraught with pernicious and dangerous consequences. I then gave my attention not so much to the details of the bill itself as to bringing out in the way of question and answer from those who appeared before the committee whether the States and local communities could not determine for themselves what their people should eat and drink and wear, and where they should buy such articles, instead of requiring that the burden should be put upon the Government of the United States of doing that in which it was never designed to have any concern.

Of course I regard many of the features of this bill as themselves objectionable; but on the whole, I think, and others before the committee and on the committee concurred, I believe, in this opinion, that the bill drawn and introduced by the distinguished chairman of the committee was the best of its kind if such legislation must be resorted to.

Mr. Chairman, I know that there is great interest in the question of food. So there is in a great many other questions. I heard and saw demonstrations by chemists and scientists before the committee, and heard appalling descriptions of germs and bacteria, and of the filth and worthlessness and deleterious and poisonous character of all there is to eat and drink, especially in this community, until it was almost enough to destroy one's appetite and prepare a man to declare that he would never eat or drink again.

Experiments are now going on in this city under the direction of one of the scientists who has appeared not only before our committee, but before a great many communities throughout the United States, to the pleasure of those communities, I am glad to say, because he is an excellent and amiable gentleman and an able scientist. He is now carrying on in this city experiments with a dozen young men of perfect physique and health, and they are going through the experiment of trying the effect upon their health of the various substances resulting from the efforts to compound and cheapen food. I do not mean to say that he is using what he denounces as deleterious and poisonous foods, but he is trying everything against which one element appearing before the committee inveighs so vigorously—those combinations which people manage to discover and use by which they may blend, as they claim, purely harmless substances, thereby furnishing to the people food products just as pure, just as wholesome, as those not thus compounded and yet cheaper.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the result of those experiments will be. They are going to try all kinds of combinations and so-called adulterations, except those recognized to be poisonous. If those who eat the mixed foods become lean and those who eat only the pure food become fat, of course the argument will be against such mixtures. But if some of those who eat the pure and unadulterated foods and drink the pure and unadulterated drinks grow lean or die, or if those who confine themselves alone to the other character of meat and drink should grow fatter and live longer, what would become of science?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to discount the importance of purity and, above all, honesty in all sorts of commercial dealings. I have gone so far, after listening to the hearings of the committee, as to suggest to my conferees that the laboratory proposed could be a great and useful institution as a gatherer of information and a disseminator of education among the people of the country. I have even gone farther and suggested as a safe ground upon which we could all compromise and stand that, if desirable, this central establishment, with greater facilities, with more powers to gather information, with more ability to arrive at the truth of these things, could publish the results of the information obtained. I have gone even farther and proposed to agree that every man shipping from one State into another should be required, if the product be a compound, to label upon the package the exact ingredients which make the compound. Farther than those things, Mr. Chairman, I am not willing to go.

Now, I do not wish our friends or the people to understand that this is a bill confined in its operations to the District of Columbia and the territory subject solely to the jurisdiction of the United States. The bill proposes to extend its provisions to all our domain and govern all interstate business. I do not desire my friend from Ohio to understand, as he intimated, that I am stickling here about the question of States' rights. I believe if he would consider the question he would decide that he is as proud of his State as I am of mine and as jealous of her rights and sovereignty. I desire to say to him that all that subject was thrashed over by the ablest and greatest statesmen the world ever saw. I desire to state that long since that, and long since some people fondly imagined that States' rights had been stamped out and it was all right to invade local authorities and local communities, there has appeared in every State in this Union which ever seemingly denied it as lively a recognition of the doctrine and as keen a demand for it as rests in my breast whenever interest awakened their conscience on the subject.

The statesmen who prepared and builded the great edifice of this Government designed it to discuss and deal with great questions involving the liberties, the independence, and the welfare of this growing Republic, the greatest the world ever saw, and make its success and glory a shining light to all mankind. They never expected, when placing in the great bulwark of our liberties the commerce clause, thereby to monopolize all the functions and attention of the Federal Government and prostitute and use all the efforts and abilities of its statesmen in talking about matters of trade which were never intended to attract their attention except for one purpose. That purpose was solely and purely to prevent one State from discriminating against and injuring the interests of the people of another State in commerce—that, and no more. The doctrine has been evolutionary. Many things have been done under it that ought not to have been done, and I regret to say that in the fight before our committee, the hearings on the bill, between the classes of people who appeared before the committee, it was evident that all were willing to use the functions of the Government if they could be used for their own purpose.

Mr. Chairman, I think that my State can punish every solitary act, every fraud, every crime that has been described in any of these hearings, and any other State in this Union can do the same if it will. I contend that it is utterly unnecessary to burden this Government with little police matters that all the local communities can better attend to, and I know that after science has done its best or its worst, after all the laboratories have exhausted themselves, when all has been done and said that can be done and said, in the last analysis it will be proved that the old ladies in the home, the housewives, the old cook who used the elbow grease to mix the dough to make the bread—not last year's wasp nests which we have now and which is called bread—knew more about the subject than all science and all scientists.

Mr. Chairman, there are two or three insuperable objections to the framework of this bill. There is in it the provision talked about by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCDERMOTT] in his questions to the gentleman from Ohio. One of them provides that a person pretending to represent the Government may force a dealer, under penalty of prosecution for refusal to sell or deliver a sample, which shall be divided into three parts, which are subjected to a sort of toss-up arbitration arrangement, the result of which shall be submitted to a court on a prosecution, to the exclusion of all evidence about other goods, even those coming in the same case or package.

I think when you say to a man, "I do not know whether you will ever commit a crime or not; but under the authority of the Government of the United States I come here and demand that you commit one right now, in order that I may make a case against you and get per diem and mileage; and if you sell to me I will convict you, provided this chemical arbitration furnishes the evidence, and if you refuse me I will convict you anyhow," that fellow is certainly between his santanic majesty and the deep blue sea.

Now, it is quite as much as we can expect of human infirmity if, when you are really swindled, you take upon yourself the burden of your own grievance and place in operation the machinery for the obtaining of justice that the law furnishes and go ahead and punish the man who has already defrauded you. But to provide for the encouragement, not only of violations of the law, but to aid and extend the operation of a pestilential lot of spies, meddlers, and informers, who work for per diem and mileage, and sometimes other rewards incident to informing, would make a system a great deal more impure than any food or drink any people ever consumed and less to be desired.

Mr. Chairman, there is another objection to the bill, and not only that, but a thing that in my mind exhibits the great demand in some quarters for the bill. That is the provision that exempts a citizen from the expense of remedying his wrongs in the courts and puts upon the Department first the duty of getting up the evidence and then calling upon the Federal officers whose duties would be to proceed with the prosecution. In the State courts where there is an act of cheating and swindling the injured man must simply, as the negro says, "tote his own skillet" and take up his own burden and attend to his own business.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe in pure food, pure coffee, pure everything that we eat and drink; but I believe in pure government. I believe in domestic and local government. I believe in the government of the home circle primarily and originally. I believe in the government furnished by the States and municipalities, which for domestic and police purposes were recognized by the founders of this great Government as the best and most perfect system of government. Not that anybody is jealous of local rights and afraid of the central authority; but the business can be better transacted, and crime can be more surely and speedily punished, and justice can be more certainly reached, and the central Government will not be overloaded.

I believe in the Federal Government as firmly, as strongly, and as proudly as any man who ever lived. In its proper channels, devoted to its proper purposes, it may be the greatest, most powerful, most glorious Government the world ever saw. Out of its channels, condescending to functions it has no business with, it becomes contemptible and ridiculous, frittering away its time and the interests of the people who made it and endowed it with its powers and constituted it for better purposes. Long may the emblem of our power and glory wave far and wide; and around the world may our Government's influence increase for our uplifting and the good of mankind. But, Mr. Chairman, when it leaves its glorious purposes and condescends to things too small and too unnecessary for its attention it is not strengthened, but weakened.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have consumed more time than I intended.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will my friend allow me a moment?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. If I understand your opposition to this bill, it is that you are opposed to it because the States ought to be allowed to carry out the provisions of it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am opposed to it because it is perfectly unnecessary, and the States in this Union can take care of every question which is looked after in this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Do you not recall the fact that in the hearings before the committee it was developed that there were a number of States that had pure-food statutes?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think so.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. More than twenty in number.

Mr. ADAMSON. A great many of them.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. And that with the exception of one or two States the statute regulating the matter of pure food in the different States was a dead letter on the statute books.

Mr. ADAMSON. I know some people said that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Absolutely a dead letter.

Mr. ADAMSON. I know some people said that. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that if you go to a State where the people do not want a law enforced, there is no use to enact it. It will be a dead letter; but where people desire a law enforced and enact a salutary law the State certainly has power under the constitution to enforce it, and my State can do it. My observation has been that State laws are as well and generally enforced as Federal statutes. The courts are more efficient and expeditious.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. But my friend from Georgia and colleague on the committee does not contend that this bill invades the rights of the States?

Mr. ADAMSON. Well, it says it does not. That is what it claims. I have not said that it did. I said I fought it because I deemed it absolutely unnecessary to put in operation a great deal of machinery for the pure-food interests. I said the States could do it better, and ought to be allowed to do it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. You will admit that as to the State pure-food laws which now exist, with the exception of two or three States, the law has been a dead letter.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understand that has been claimed, but also denied.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. And that there has been universal complaint about it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understand that some people charge that in some States; others deny it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit me to direct his attention to portions of the bill for two or three minutes and also allow me to ask him what he thinks in regard to them?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will, with great pleasure.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember the provision in the first section in reference to the employment of agents and other employees?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN (continuing). Which confers upon the Secretary of Agriculture authority to employ such chemists, inspectors, clerks, laborers, and other employees as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks under that provision there is a liability that some Secretary of Agriculture may employ people far beyond a reasonable limit?

Mr. ADAMSON. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MANN. And possibly even for partisan purposes.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is possible. I did not, if the gentleman will allow me, undertake in my remarks to go over in detail all the features in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand; the gentleman did not take time; but because the gentleman and I are rather in accord with reference to this bill, and I know he has given a great deal of study to this subject, I wanted to get his judgment in reference to this bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is not a solitary section in the bill that I would vote for, standing alone or taken together with any others.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Ohio called attention to the provision in the bill which excused the retail dealer or any other dealer where he possessed a guaranty given by the manufacturer in this country. I call the attention of the gentleman to the provision which says that no dealer shall be convicted, and ask him whether under this bill prosecutions are to be had in the United States courts or in the local courts?

Mr. ADAMSON. I just took it for granted it was understood that the Federal courts should have charge of these offenses.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, there is no jurisdiction conferred, if it is possible to confer it, upon any State court.

Mr. ADAMSON. So I understand.

Mr. MANN. So that the prosecutions would be in the United States courts.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is my understanding.

Mr. MANN. The guaranty would not be a guaranty against prosecution. The retail dealer might be called several hundred miles away from home to produce the guaranty in order to escape. I suppose it is a guaranty against conviction in a Federal court. I would like to ask the opinion of the gentleman upon another point. Section 8 of this bill provides that any party "must" sell any article which he exposes for sale to an agent of the Agricultural Department, and that if upon examination this article proves to be adulterated the dealer shall be convicted and fined. I would ask the gentleman whether that, in his opinion, is constitutional?

Mr. ADAMSON. Is that the provision which provides for arbitration for the three samples and three inspections, and then if they do not tally they can throw it all on the court and let the court try to scuffle as to what is in it and get the truth?

Mr. MANN. It is the provision that he "shall furnish."

Mr. ADAMSON. I understand.

Mr. MANN. Now, the other provision of the statute is if he does so furnish. Shall he be convicted on the article furnished?

Mr. ADAMSON. My understanding of the law has been that for generations you can not compel any man to convict himself if he does commit a crime, and you can not by law compel him to commit a crime so that he may be convicted.

Mr. MANN. The provision of the Constitution is: "No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will excuse me, this provision compels him to commit a crime that the Government may convict him.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is a fine constitutional lawyer, and I would like to have his judgment as to whether the Government of the United States can constitutionally not only require a man to sell a thing the selling of which is an offense, but compel him to sell it and then furnish the evidence to convict him.

Mr. ADAMSON. I said I thought the dealer could safely refuse to communicate with the person, or refuse to sell it.

Mr. MANN. This statute makes it an offense to refuse. So that if he does refuse he is damned and if he does not he is damned.

Mr. ADAMSON. How could he be convicted if he had the right to refuse? The statute could not change it.

Mr. MANN. The court might set aside the provision of the statute; but what I want the gentleman's opinion upon is whether it is constitutional. The gentleman knows that this side of the House always goes to that side of the House when they want a constitutional question decided. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMSON. If I was the dealer and knowing the purpose of the customer, I would take the chances of escaping conviction and refuse to sell it. Now, I want to say further about this matter: It seems to me a little hard that when the three chemists provided for have failed to agree about the results of the investigation, and the results of the investigation have been laid before the court, that the case may be tried alone on that sample, when there may be 143 other packages in the case, every one of which, upon inspection, might be proven pure, and according to whether the arbitration agreed or whether it did not, you convict him on one simply that may have been falsely packed, perhaps by accident or mistake or otherwise, and upon which he never ought to have been put upon trial.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to section 9 of the bill, which seems to me to answer a question which was asked a little while ago. It says:

SEC. 9. That any manufacturer, producer, or dealer who refuses to comply, upon demand, with the requirements of section 8 of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not exceeding $100, or imprisonment not exceeding one hundred days, or both. And any person found guilty of manufacturing or offering for sale, or selling, an adulterated, impure, or misbranded article of food or drug in violation of the provisions of this act shall be adjudged to pay, etc.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think anybody would ever be hurt by that.

Mr. MANN. Well, if he refuses to sell and give evidence to convict himself he shall be fined $100 for it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Oh, no. If the manufacturer sells or offers for sale that which is adulterated he becomes guilty, and the penalty of the statute operates upon him. You are bound to trust something to the common sense of the court and of the country.

Mr. MANN. I want to say to my genial and able friend from Alabama that he loses sight of the first part of the section.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Well, who is to decide? Why, the courts of the country.

Mr. MANN. The provision of the bill says:

Any manufacturer, producer, or dealer who refuses to comply, upon demand, with the requirements of section 8 of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction sha l be fined not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding 100 days, or both.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. But the gentleman does not read far enough.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it is not necessary to read about some other misdemeanor. The provision of section 8 is that he must sell to the agent of the Agricultural Department, and if he does not sell he is fined for not selling, and if he does sell, and it is proved that he is selling adulterated goods, he is fined because he does sell. You make him furnish evidence to convict himself if he sells, and if he does not sell you convict him and fine him.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. What court on earth would be guilty of such an absurdity——

Mr. MANN. What body of representatives would ever be guilty of enacting a law like that?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. What common sense person would ever expect any court to construe it as the gentleman interprets it?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman can put any other construction on it, I will be glad to have it done.

Mr. ADAMSON. My good friend in opening this debate had a good deal to say about the demand for the enactment of this legislation. I desire to say that I have been circulating about halfway across the continent and back for several years, and while this has been agitated if a solitary constituent of mine ever requested a support of this bill I have no recollection of it. If anybody in my part of the country ever took the trouble to talk about it, I do not remember it. There has been a good deal of interest and agitation representing different interests, as I said before, more as to the effects of the bill than the principle involved in its passage.

But such demand as comes appears to me to be very much like that which often comes to members of Congress. It is not a real and genuine upheaval originating with the people and demanding action from us; it is an artificial and supposed sentiment which reflects something called for in interested quarters. That is the only kind of demand that I have been able to discover for this bill.

One other word. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOMPKINS], in doing me the honor to mention my State in connection with this matter, reminds me that in the discussion of the bill which our legislature passed last week for the protection of Georgia sirup the distinguished chairman of the Board of Trade of Savannah, who is the president or the head of that Georgia sirup industry, presented a very able argument, which, enumerating the statutes of various States and Territories, demonstrated very clearly to my mind that the States are capable of taking care of the domestic concerns of their people; and bright and strong among all the citations were the references to the great State of Massachusetts, whose cause once was and still is "the cause of us all," reminding us of the time-honored and still honored custom in that old liberty-loving Commonwealth of having the strongest constitutional provisions for local State government, while placing the least reliance of all the States of the Union upon the Federal Government.

Mr. Chairman, I desire in concluding my remarks to ask the Clerk to read, as expressing as well and distinctly as I otherwise could do my views on this question, the minority report of the committee, in presenting which I played "a lone hand"—one to sixteen—reversing the old condition. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

VIEWS OF MR. ADAMSON.

I regret my inability to concur with the majority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in reporting with favorable recommendation House bill No. 3109, "for preventing the adulteration, misbranding, and imitation of foods, beverages," etc.

Aside from my partiality for the old-fashioned idea of leaving the greater part of government to be administered by local authorities, I object, as a member of Congress, to imposing on the Federal Government subjects of legislation and litigation wholly foreign to its purpose, and which, if at all effective, must prove burdensome, annoying, and expensive.

The founders of our Republic, fully appreciating the blessings of good government and the evils of bad government, though not as well up as we on amassing profits and figuring discriminating tariffs, had no thought that the Federal Government could possibly embark in the business of regulating the menu or the table etiquette of the citizens of the States. The line of argument that supports this bill would apply as well to any and all avenues of human business and conduct. It is insisted that this legislation is necessary to protect against frauds in interstate commerce, but I listened and cross-examined in vain during our long hearings to find a single situation which could not be reached more certainly and effectually by the State courts.

The fundamental mistake seems to be that people imagine the Federal Government may take their troubles off their hands and punish so-called violators anywhere, regardless of locality and without difficulty or expense to those invoking its aid, entirely losing sight of the elementary principles that the venue must be laid in the same way for trials in Federal and in State courts and proof must be forthcoming to convict in either. Whatever may be the privileges of shipping and selling in unbroken packages under the interstate-commerce law, it has never been pretended that a State can not punish common cheats and swindlers if they deceive as to the character of the article sold, or if they sell one thing and deliver another in its stead, no matter whence the package may have come.

Nor do I believe a single State in this Union capable of refusing to provide for such punishments. The hearings have disclosed some bad conduct in the food trade, as well as in some other departments of life and business, but it is all properly cognizable in State courts, and in my judgment not comparable with the possible evil resultant from the proposed legislation, which I would oppose as utterly unnecessary, if no other objection existed.

W. C. ADAMSON.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. As the gentleman has spoken of the indifference of his people to legislation on this subject, I wish to ask him whether their lack of interest in this bill may not be because they do not take interest to any large extent in any but indigenous food products?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think I have been pretty familiar with their views for a number of years. I believe they buy their articles of consumption wherever it seems best to buy them and that they are able to protect themselves against anybody who tries to cheat them.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Did I understand the gentleman from Georgia to say that this measure was not pressed at all by the people of the several States?

Mr. ADAMSON. I said that the only popular excitement seemed to be in response to appeals made to them; that there seems to be two classes appealing to the people to get up an interest in this matter. It seemed that there was one class of business men trying to crush out another.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I wish to say that the State of Pennsylvania some time ago passed a pure-food bill, and many of the legislators who favored that measure were severely criticised for the position which they took, but since the bill has gone into operation the result has been such as is evidenced in the following communication which has been sent to me by the Retail Grocers' Association of my city:

ORGANIZED TO PROTECT THE INTERESTS OF RETAIL GROCERS.

OFFICE OF THE RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION,
No. 309 SOUTH SIXTH STREET,
Reading, Pa., June 20, 1902.

Hon. H. D. GREEN.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association of Berks County held recently resolutions were unanimously adopted indorsing the pure-food bill now before Congress, known as the Hepburn bill, and requesting you to support the same by using your influence in its passage. By complying with the above request you will greatly oblige the members of the aforesaid association.

Yours, very truly, E. J. MORRIS, Secretary.

This paper comes from people who opposed legislation of this character when it was passed by the State, but who have since realized how useful and beneficial it is to the people, so that now they almost command me to support this bill. This seems to me pretty good proof of the popular demand for such legislation.

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course, neither the gentleman nor myself can be held responsible for the government or administration of the State of Pennsylvania. In this matter there may be a choice of two evils on the part of the Democrats of good old Berks County. The question may be whether they would rather fly for relief to a Republican Congress than trust the Republicans in control of the State of Pennsylvania.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have read very carefully the report of the majority of the committee on this bill, and I have read the bill itself. I find that the bill has three branches. It prohibits misrepresentation in the sale of goods, and to this extent it has my sympathy, if the State courts and State legislatures can not deal with the trouble; but first let us be sure of that fact. Another part of the bill requires the labeling of adulterated drugs, and that provision also has my sympathy, provided, as I have said, that the matter can not be better dealt with by the local authorities. But in the matter of adulterated articles of food, the bill absolutely prohibits the sale of such articles, even when labeled. The definition of adulterated food is given in section 6. By that section it appears that—

Any food is adulterated which contains any ingredient that may render such article injurious to the health of the person consuming it.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, it is made a criminal offense to sell, whether labeled or not, any article of food that contains an ingredient injurious to health. Injurious in whose opinion? In the estimation of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Who is to help that gentleman decide the question? A certain board, and the first man named on that board is the chief of the Division of Chemistry, no less a person than the learned Professor Wiley, the gentleman who to-day is carrying on pure and impure food experiments with 12 young men. I think it would be wiser to await the results of those experiments before any legislation is passed. That, however, does not seem to be possible.

Now, this provision forbidding the sale of adulterated food products, whether the members of the House know it or not, hits nearly every food industry in this country except such as pack for immediate sale or such as pack their product in hermetically sealed cans. It certainly injures in the most marked manner one of the greatest industries in my district. It practically destroys during the months of May, June, July, August, and the first half of September the boneless codfish industry in the city of Gloucester.

In that city alone there are 2,000 people employed in curing, packing, handling, and shipping this boneless codfish and this shredded codfish from which every fish ball eaten in the interior of this country is made. Nearly every one of those fish balls, nearly every bit of boneless codfish that the people of this country buy, comes from New England and is put up with boracic acid; and yet, if this bill is passed in its present form, undoubtedly the learned professor will say that boracic acid is harmful to human health.

I say that he will undoubtedly so decide, because I have heard of his statements on the question of boracic or boric acid. I have heard other learned professors before the committee on public health of the Massachusetts legislature argue on the iniquities of that preservative. I have no doubt what his decision would be, in spite of the fact that I am told that the best German authorities say that boracic acid in limited quantities is not harmful. Therefore, when the proper time comes, I propose to offer an amendment which, I am sorry to say, is not acceptable to the committee. It is on page 6, at line 20, and the amendment will be this:

Provided, That dried fish preserved by suitable preservative substances employed as a surface application shall not be deemed adulterated within the meaning of this act.

That almost exactly follows the wording of the Massachusetts statute. In dealing with this subject I may say that in the compendium recently prepared in Georgia with regard to pure-food legislation I find this statement:

Massachusetts may be said to have nearer a perfect code of pure-food laws than any other State or country which has given thought to the subject of preventing food adulteration under its myriad forms and disguises.

If the House accepts this amendment it will accept practically the wording of the Massachusetts law. As I say, if the law passes in the present form, there is very little question that the learned professor will decide that there is too much boracic acid in preserved codfish to be healthful, because I will admit at once that every bit of boneless codfish which he buys in the grocery store will, upon analysis, show four-tenths of 1 per cent of boracic acid.

He analyzes it, mind you, under this bill, as it comes from the grocery store. He does not analyze it as it comes on your table. Before it comes on your table, being salted codfish, it will be soaked for twenty-four hours and almost all of that boracic acid will be soaked out of it. Therefore I think the provision I am offering is a perfectly reasonable one. Let us grant that borax is injurious to health. Let us dissent from the German opinion and grant that for a moment. Why is it injurious to health? Because it is an antiseptic. So is salt an antiseptic, and common salt, if used in great quantities, is just as injurious to health as boracic acid.

Their action is precisely the same. The reason that this codfish can not be put up with common salt instead of borax is that it can not be kept long enough to ship all over this country to the tables of men of moderate means and kept until sold. Common salt will arrest the process of decay. It will kill the germs of decay in the earlier stages. It will also injure the healthy germs of the human body. Borax goes further than salt and kills the germs of decay in a still more advanced stage, and it has a still more advanced effect on the healthy germs of the human body.

That is the only difference in the world between the two. It is absolutely impossible to put up this product, the handling of which employs 2,000 people in the city of Gloucester alone, without using boracic acid or something still more deleterious to human health. Salt will not do it, because it will not preserve the fish long enough, except for local consumption. The fish can not be put up as canned salmon is, in hermetically sealed cans, because if you put it up in hermetically sealed cans it will be nearly as expensive as canned salmon, and it will be perfectly impossible for the man of small means to buy it.

I admit that it is a bad thing to have adulterated food; but there are a great many things more injurious to health than adulterated food, and one of them is hunger. The quickest road to hunger is expensive food for the poor.

Mr. DAHLE. I should like to be informed as to whether fish put up in the way you speak of is really cheaper than the common salted codfish? I have sold codfish for twenty-five years, I presume, but in order to get the cheap fish we have never had to resort to the kind the gentleman speaks of. Now, is that because we are ignorant, or is the kind you speak of the cheaper?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the honorable gentleman on my left, I will say that I am not personally in the fish business. I am aware of the fact that in seashore towns like Gloucester it is cheaper to buy the whole codfish right off the flakes than it is to buy that fish when it has gone through the process of manufacture and packing. I will also tell the gentleman that when that codfish is transported into the interior of the country, in portable form, in the form of shredded fish or boneless codfish, it is the manufacture and preparation, the extraction of those bones, which makes the fish so much more expensive. It must be treated with boracic acid, and the salted codfish, such as he speaks of, if it is to be transported in its original and cheaper form to Denver, or any place in the interior, must contain boracic acid.

But, after all, Mr. Chairman, is there not a great deal of humbug about all this agitation with regard to pure foods? Are we not perfectly willing to eat foods that we know are not entirely pure? Do we not know perfectly well that they are adulterated, and do we want them labeled on that account?

There is not a man within the hearing of my voice who will eat his fish balls next Sunday morning, or whatever day he devotes to that serious matter, with any less relish because of what is said here. Everybody knows now that what he is eating is poisonous. We shrewdly suspected it long ago, but we do not care. For years we have been eating poisonous food, yet here we are legislating about the sins of our constituents.

Mr. Chairman, you can not go down into that restaurant below here and eat a piece of bread which does not contain a poison injurious to human health. Every piece of bread you eat there contains alum or a salt of potash. I will venture to say that such is the case if they are prepared with any baking powder that has anything except the most limited sale. But we do not want to know it; we do not want to have these foods labeled. When I go downstairs and see a gentleman about to eat something that I know is adulterated, I do not go to him and say so. He does not want me to do so. When I go into a sleeping car, where I know the air is surcharged with the germs of consumption, or where I know that the curtains surrounding my berth conceal the tubercle bacillus, I do not want to see a large placard saying so, when I enter the car anticipating a pleasant night's sleep.

It is exercise and moderation that are the true preservatives of health. I believe we have gone altogether too far with our antispitting ordinances and our health ordinances, and the various other complicated methods by which we attempt to get the better of the germ that is universal. I believe that the germinal theory of disease is a perfectly sound one, but I do not believe that these finical, annoying, expensive restrictions abate by one jot or one tittle the danger incident to the ills to which human flesh is heir. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LOVERING having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 6492. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Starrat;

S. 6399. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902;

S. 6330. An act granting an increase of pension to Allen M. Ripley;

S. 6231. An act authorizing Robert A. Chapman, of Alabama, his associates and assigns, to use the waters of the Coosa River, in Alabama, for the purpose of generating electricity; and

S. 3708. An act granting an increase of pension to Nannie M. Kimberly.

PURE FOOD.

The committee resumed its session.

[Mr. DAHLE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I have any other gentleman ready to go on this evening or not. I ask that the gentleman from Iowa will consume the remainder of the time or move that the committee rise.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know any other gentleman who desires to address the committee at this time; so I will move that the committee rise.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 3109, and had come to no resolution thereon.

REFUND OF CERTAIN TONNAGE TAXES.

Reference of the bill (S. 6439) for the refund of certain tonnage taxes was changed from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 6492. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Starrat—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 6330. An act granting an increase of pension to Allen M. Ripley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 6231. An act authorizing Robert A. Chapman, of Alabama, his associates and assigns, to use the waters of the Coosa River, in Alabama, for the purpose of generating electricity—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 6502. An act relating to ceded lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MAYNARD obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Maj. A. S. Bloom, Forty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

By unanimous consent, Mr. GROW obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Samuel Tewksbury, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FINLEY, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MOODY of North Carolina, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MARSHALL, until after the holiday recess, on account of important business.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury and Commissioners of the District of Columbia recommending increase of limit of cost of proposed municipal building for the city of Washington—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office relating to surveying contracts on railroad land grants—to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, recommendation of a correction of estimate for improvement of Patapsco River and Baltimore Harbor—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statement of expenditures in the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey for the year ended June 30, 1902—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Oliver Peacher, administrator of estate of John Peacher, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for construction of a fence on Big Hole battle ground, Montana—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury submitting detailed report of the expenses of the Revenue-Cutter Service—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of John P. L. Hopkins, in his own right and as administrator of estate of William H. A. Hopkins, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of an agreement with Indians on the Fort Bertholdt Indian Reservation, N. Dak., and draft of a bill for ratification of the same—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for proving grounds, Sandy Hook, New Jersey—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed,

A letter from the Secretary of War, submitting a recommendation in relation to the acceptance of a cession of land from the State of South Carolina—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting papers relating to the pension claim of David L. McDermott—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and letter only ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MERCER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 108) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional ground for the post-office, court-house, and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2910); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4722) for the erection of a building for the use and accommodation of the Department of Agriculture, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2911); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15449) to increase the efficiency of the Army, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2912); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MOODY of North Carolina, from the Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5228) for the purchase of a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian Mountains, to be known as the "National Appalachian Forest Reserve," reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2913); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 19, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The following prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.:

O God, our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee from our heart of hearts that peace is stronger than war, that harmony is sweeter than discord, that mercy is more potent than hate or revenge, and good more enduring than evil, because back of all the profound mysteries which environ us is infinite and eternal love. Help us with such faith to live and work, with such hope to pass through the valley of the shadow of death in triumph, and Thine shall be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PORTAL, N. DAK., SUBPORT OF ENTRY, ETC.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15006) amending an act entitled "An act to amend the statute in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to amend the statute in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended by including therein the town of Portal, in the State of North Dakota, as a port for the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and that all the provisions of said act are hereby made applicable to said port.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That Portal, N. Dak., be, and is hereby, designated a subport of entry in the customs collection district of North and South Dakota, and that the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, entitled 'An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes,' be, and the same are hereby, extended to said subport."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. What will be the effect of this bill if it should become law?

Mr. TAWNEY. Simply allow immediate transportation of merchandise imported by American citizens at that port. An officer is stationed at that place now.

Mr. HEPBURN. Instead of having the duties assessed or ascertained at the port of entry and the entries made there, you send the merchandise out to this interior port?

Mr. TAWNEY. In bond.

Mr. HEPBURN. In bond, for examination. And you have got to have, then, at this little town or port all the officers and all the machinery that may be necessary for the port of New York in ascertaining the value of the duties in that investigation?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say the gentleman is mistaken in that. This bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, and before that report was made by the committee the bill was submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury, in returning the bill, says in his letter——

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TAWNEY. "For your information"——

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman will permit me. You answered my question in the first instance, and then you contradict yourself. What will be the effect, I want to know?

Mr. TAWNEY. "For your information," the Secretary states—

For your information it is stated that an officer is now stationed at Portal, and the proposed action will not, therefore, involve any increase in expenses.

It involves no increased expenditure whatever to the Treasury.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Will not there have to be done in regard to that invoice of merchandise at this port, to ascertain the duty and the amount of duty, all that would have to be done at the city of New York?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir; I do not so understand it from the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury himself.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why, you say it comes in in bond.

Mr. TAWNEY. It comes in in bond. For example, wheat is imported in bond. It is being ground into flour in the city of Minneapolis in bond. It is desirable that that importation should be given immediate transportation when it comes through that port, and should not be detained as it is now. It is simply an amendment of an existing statute. There are a number of ports of entry just like it, and this is to make it a port of entry.

Mr. HEPBURN. And every one that has been established has been established at the expense of the revenue.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know that that is a fact. I am relying upon the information furnished the committee by the Secretary of the Treasury, that there is no additional expense involved on the people by the passage of this measure.

Mr. HEPBURN. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Suppose that an invoice of silk or satin was shipped, they would have to be appraised, would they not? You would have to have all the machinery of the port of New York that would apply to a proper appraisement of that merchandise in order to ascertain whether the invoice was a correct one. Would you not have to do that?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know what the practice is at these ports of entry for immediate transportation of merchandise imported from foreign countries, and I am unable to answer the question.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman from Iowa could inform you upon that point, although he is not a member of the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. The statute regulates that method of doing the business for the immediate transportation of goods, and prescribes the method by which it shall be done. That is regulated by statute, and this adds one other port. This place is on the Canadian line in North Dakota, where there is a great deal of wheat and a great deal of lumber imported from British Columbia and from Canada into the United States, and the delay incident to the importation at the present time at that place is a great loss and inconvenience to the American importers of these products. This bill will afford them an opportunity to have their importations shipped immediately to the interior, under the statute which exists to-day for the regulation of that business.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from Minnesota to say that the bill was unanimously reported by the committee. I have the report here, and I understand the committee recommended the passage of the bill on the statement that there was already an officer there and that there would be no additional expense incurred by the bill. That is the statement that was made to the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, that is contained in the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAWNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MIAMI INDIANS OF INDIANA.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8130) for the relief of the Miami Indians of Indiana.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Miami Indians of Indiana, interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum upon the principal sum paid said Miami Indians by act of March 2, 1895, from the time said money, due them under treaty stipulations, was taken from their tribal funds and paid to other persons not entitled to it: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall identify the Indians to whom payments are made under this act, by correspondence or by data in his Department, and forward to said Indians the several amounts due them by checks or drafts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all that part after the word "that," in line 3, to and including the word "Indiana," in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"There be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, which shall be immediately available, a sum sufficient to pay to the Miami Indians of Indiana, residing in the State of Indiana or elsewhere."

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. ZENOR. I also offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "it," in line 11, the following:

"Which sum shall be computed and ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Speaker, I also offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all that part after the word "Provided," in line 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain and identify the Indians entitled to share in the distribution of said moneys, and the amount of pro rata payments to be made to each, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: And provided further, That said sum or sums shall be paid to the Indians who may have established his, her, or their identity and their right to receive the same, and shall be distributed to said Indians under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague on the committee, in this amendment, overlooks one of the purposes of this proviso, and the amendment offered by him ought to be amended. The proposition here was to pay to the Indians direct by check or draft so as to prevent this money from being tolled by any attorneys or agents. That was the object. By striking out this provision as to checks and drafts the money would be paid in such a way that some one might have an additional fee, possibly, on this claim, and that was sought to be avoided by the proviso in the original bill. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman is a good one, but the provision ought to be added to it that the payment shall be by checks and drafts to the parties entitled thereto.

Mr. ZENOR. I agree with the gentleman from Iowa as to the purpose of this bill, that it was to prevent the payment to any attorney or agent in the distribution.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Iowa repeat his amendment?

Mr. ZENOR. I have no objection to the amendment offered.

Mr. LACEY. At the end of the proviso, after the word "prescribe," insert "said amount to be paid by checks or drafts;" so as to require that the regulation to be adopted shall be to make the payment by checks or drafts.

Mr. ZENOR. I accept the amendment; but I thought that as no provision was made for a deduction for the purpose of paying this money to the parties interested through attorneys or agents, these payments would have to be made directly to the Indians. I will print as a part of my remarks the following:

[House Mis. Doc. No. 69, Fifty-third Congress, third session.]

COURT OF CLAIMS, CLERK'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 12, 1895.

SIR: Pursuant to the order of the court I transmit herewith a certified copy of the findings filed by the court in the aforesaid cause, which case was referred to this court by the Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives, under the act of March 3, 1883.

I am, very respectfully, yours, etc.,

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Hon. CHAS. F. CRISP,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

[Court of Claims. Congressional, No. 9255. The Indiana Miami Indians v. The United States.]

FINDINGS OF FACT.

[Filed February 11, 1895.]

This case having been heard by the court, the court, upon the evidence and after considering the briefs and arguments of counsel on both sides, finds the facts as follows:

I.

On the 6th day of November, 1838, by treaty of that date, the Miami tribe of Indians, then living in Indiana, ceded to the United States, for a money consideration, a portion of their lands in Indiana, looking to the eventual removal of the tribe to the country west of the Mississippi River.

II.

On the 28th day of November, 1840, the Miami tribe of Indians entered into another treaty, by which they ceded to the United States their remaining lands in Indiana, and the United States stipulated to assign them a large tract of country in the then Territory of Kansas, to which they agreed to remove within five years.

III.

In compliance with the treaty of 1840, most of the Miami tribe of Indians removed to Kansas in the year 1846, but a large number of the tribe had special permission, under the treaties of 1838 and 1840 and joint resolutions of Congress passed in March, 1845 (6 Stat., 942), and in May, 1850 (9 Stat., 806), to remain in Indiana. They did not, therefore, emigrate with the tribe, but remained in Indiana and adjacent States, and the annuities due the tribe were divided, one part being distributed among the Western Miamis, or those who resided in Kansas, and the other part distributed among the Miamis of Indiana.

IV.

On the 5th day of June, 1854, both branches of the Miami tribe of Indians entered into another treaty with the United States (10 Stat., 1093). In the same month and year the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in consultation with the head men of the Indiana portion of the tribe, revised and corrected the list of those remaining in Indiana, and who were entitled to a distribution of the fund to be paid to the Indiana Miamis, which constituted a list of three hundred and two (302) persons. At the time of the ratification of said treaty (August 4, 1854) an amendment of the treaty was made for the benefit alone of the Miamis of Indiana, which amendment, after reciting the disposition to be made of that portion of the money to be paid to them, provided:

"That no persons other than those embraced in the corrected list agreed upon by the Miamies of Indiana in the presence of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in June, 1854, comprising three hundred and two names as Miami Indians of Indiana, and the increase of the families of the persons embraced in said corrected list, shall be recipients of the payments, annuities, commutation monies, and interest hereby stipulated to be paid to the Miami Indians of Indiana, unless other persons shall be added to said list by the consent of the said Miami Indians of Indiana, obtained in council, according to the custom of Miami tribe of Indians."

V.

Under the provisions of the said treaty of 1854 payments were made annually to the Western Miamies and to the Miamies of Indiana until 1858, when, under an act of Congress passed on the 12th day of June of that year, the Secretary of the Interior took $15,629.27 from the funds set apart by treaty for the Indiana Miamies, without their consent and against their earnest protest, and paid the same to sixty-eight persons, none of whom were a part of the three hundred and two (302) Miamies named in the amendment to the treaty of 1854, or the descendants of any of said 302 persons.

VI.

These sixty-eight persons were then placed upon the pay roll of the Indiana Miamies (to which roll others were afterwards added), and they received additional annuities from the Indiana Miami funds amounting to $32,899.11, until their names were stricken from said roll under an opinion of the Attorney-General dated September 20, 1867.

VII.

These sixty-eight persons so placed upon the Indiana Miami roll in January, 1859, and the others afterwards added were not embraced in the corrected list of three hundred and two (302) persons agreed upon by the Miamies of Indiana and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in June, 1854, nor were they the descendants of any of the 302 persons who alone by the terms of said treaty were to share in the annuities and other moneys of the Indiana Miamies.

VIII.

The moneys so paid from 1859 to 1867 to said sixty-eight persons and the others afterwards added were taken from the funds then in the possession of the United States belonging to the Indiana Miamies, and were a part of their proportion of the installments due them under the treaties of November 28, 1840, and of June 5, 1854, and also interest at the rate of five (5) per cent per annum on the sum of $221,257.86 held in trust for the Miamies of Indiana under the amendment of the treaty of 1854.

IX.

The aggregate amount paid to the persons so added to the Indiana Miami roll to the period when their names were stricken from the roll under an opinion of the Attorney-General was $48,528.38 (forty-eight thousand five hundred and twenty-eight $\frac{38}{100}$ dollars).

[SEAL.] JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. LACEY. I move to amend the gentleman's amendment by adding at the end of it the following words: "Said amount to be paid by checks or drafts."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ZENOR].

Mr. MADDOX. I should like very much to hear this bill read as amended, since it has been so extensively amended.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. LACEY. The amendments are purely formal.

Mr. ZENOR. Altogether so.

The SPEAKER. There are two amendments pending which have not been adopted. Does the gentleman desire to have the bill read before the amendment and the amendment to the amendment have been acted on by the House?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes, sir; I should like to know exactly the effect of the bill.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the bill with pending amendments.

The bill as proposed to be amended was read.

The amendments of Mr. LACEY to the amendment of Mr. ZENOR were agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. ZENOR, as amended, was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ZENOR, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PATENT OF VALDEMAR POULSEN.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Patents was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That letters patent of the United States granted to Valdemar Poulsen, No. 661619, dated November 13, 1900, shall not be held invalid by reason of the lapse of more than seven months between the time of filing of his application for a patent in Denmark and the filing of his application for said United States patent; nor shall the lapse of said period of more than seven months debar him from the grant of a patent upon that portion of his invention which was divided out from his original application in this country under the rules of practice then prevailing in the Patent Office, but the patent which may be granted on said divisional application shall expire at the same time with the said letters patent No. 661619.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope we shall have an explanation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We should like to hear an explanation of the bill.

The SPEAKER. An explanation is asked by two members.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It was impossible to understand the bill as reported at the desk. We should be glad to have the gentleman from Maine tell us in detail what its effect is.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, this bill relates to a patent taken out by a resident of Denmark—an invention patented by him in Denmark. The statute requires that he should have his application filed here within seven months from the date of his application in that foreign country. His papers arrived here in time, properly framed, and would have been filed except for the neglect of a clerk in New York City. They really reached the office here seven days after the expiration of the limit. Notwithstanding the fact that the patent has already been granted, it will affect the validity of the patent. There are no conflicting claims, no interfering patents, and no intervening interests. The patented machine has never been produced in this country. It is a very complicated machine, and probably never would be unless it can get the advantage of the patent laws.

That is the substance of the proposition in the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand from members of the committee that the report upon the bill was unanimous.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; I can not state that.

Mr. CLARK. Well, I will state it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] filed minority views in this case, not because he had any special objection to this particular bill, but on principle he is opposed to such legislation. I have conferred with him, and he has said that he should make no further objection, but would content himself with placing on record his minority views.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from Maine state what this patent is for?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will read:

The application embraced a process and means for recording, storing up, and reproducing speech and signals by impressing upon an electric circuit containing an electric magnet, undulations of the current corresponding to the sound waves of the speech or signals, whereby, by the use of the ordinary telephone transmitting and receiving apparatus, messages may be sent, stored on the receiving wire, and at any subsequent time reproduced at the receiving station.

[Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is answered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is about as clear as mud to an ordinary mind. I suppose the gentleman from Maine can interpret it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. This further statement may perhaps cover the idea:

The invention removed the necessity of the presence at the same time, at the respective transmitting and receiving stations, of both the sender and the recipient.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What I want to ask the gentleman is this. Does this extend the patent on the telephone?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, no; it is not a patent on a telephone. It is a receiving instrument of very complicated character. It does not extend anything. It simply grants a patent on this very complicated and ingenious device.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is no effort to extend the present telephone patent?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Not the slightest in the world.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And does not extend the life of the particular patent longer than it would be under the general law?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; not at all. It simply removes that invalidity of the failure to file within the proper time. It does not extend the life of the patent at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LITTLEFIELD a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PURE FOOD.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3109—the pure-food bill.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] such time as he desires.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I had not expected to say anything in reference to this bill or to participate in this discussion until I heard the very able and forcible argument which was presented yesterday by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] in opposition to it. He having so forcibly called attention to certain objections to it, I desire by going into the details of the bill to emphasize and enforce, if possible, the reasons why it should not pass this House. It is my purpose to call attention specifically to some of the provisions of the bill which to me demonstrate that it is not such a measure as should become a law of the land.

Yesterday attention was called to the fact that there were already in a great number of States of this Union what are called pure-food laws, and that in other States there were none, and that in those States where these laws had been enacted in a great many instances they were dead letters upon the statute books. That of itself establishes to my satisfaction the fact that this law is entirely unnecessary and that it is simply placing in the hands of the National Government a function and a power which it should not exercise and for which there is no general demand. The fact that certain States have passed no such laws demonstrates that they do not care for such legislation. The fact that other States have passed and enacted and placed upon their statute books such laws and that they are to-day dead letters and are not enforced demonstrates the fact that those people even whose legislatures have enacted such laws do not desire the enforcement of laws of this kind.

All laws of this character depend largely upon public sentiment for their enforcement. If they be placed upon the statute books with no demand for them and no necessity for them, then there will come no demand for their enforcement and they become dead letters. That, to my mind, demonstrates fully the fact that this law is absolutely unnecessary and is not required by anything that is in the country to-day. I believe in that theory of government which leaves to the people the control of their own affairs as far as possible. I believe that the best government is that which gives to the people the least government, that government which gives them the largest liberty, especially in the management and control of their own affairs, their own households, and their own private business.

This bill proposes that we go into the general inspection business throughout the United States. It provides that the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he sees proper, may investigate these various food products in every part of the country and in whatsoever part of the country he may see fit. He may investigate in one section to the exclusion of others, or he may include the whole country, so far as that is concerned. It is left to him, and there is no limit placed upon his power of appointment of subagents, clerks, inspectors, laborers, and other employees who may go from one end of this country to the other looking into these matters and investigating the private affairs of the individual.

The demand for this law, if there is a demand for it, as was suggested by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] yesterday, will be found in the third and fourth sections of this act, wherein it is provided that the director of the Bureau of Chemistry shall make or cause to be made, under regulations and rules to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, examinations of specimens of foods offered for sale in the original and unbroken packages in the District of Columbia and in any State or Territory of this Union, and then, in case he finds to his satisfaction that there is anything impure, that there is adulteration, that he shall at once certify that fact to the district attorney of the United States, and then the law makes it the duty of that officer to at once commence proceedings in the Federal courts for the suppression of what he considers wrong.

Now, this demand comes from that class who desire to shift the burden of the expense and difficulties of prosecution to redress their wrongs from their own shoulders and place them upon the shoulders of the National Government, place them in the hands of the Federal court, place them under the direction of the Federal authorities, and require the Government of the United States to pay all the expenses to correct a private wrong from which they claim they are suffering; whereas they should be required to bear their own expense and go into their own courts to enforce the law and to right their own wrongs, if they are suffering from any, and to vindicate their own rights. In this, in my judgment, will be found the demand which is made for the passage of this bill. I do not believe that it is best to place matters of this character in the hands of the National Government, and exclusively under the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

The provision to which I referred a moment ago gives the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to appoint inspectors, which will be found in section 1 of this act, and it does not limit him as to number, but leaves it entirely to his judgment and to his discretion to send these inspectors wheresoever he may see proper, in any part of the country, to make such investigations as they see proper to make and to report thereunder. And this applies throughout this country, so as they may go from one section to another inquiring into the private business of the individual, going into his store, going into his place of business or into his manufactory, looking into his personal matters and demanding of him that he deliver the product which he possesses in order that he may make this inspection upon which he expects to make his report.

There are some people all over this country, so far as that is concerned, who are ready at any time to find some reason or cause to inspect somebody else's business, to investigate somebody else's affairs, and when they find such things as are contrary to their views, to seek to bring them into the Federal courts of the country in order that they may receive from the Federal Treasury pay for their per diem and mileage and their expenses in going to and returning from these courts. I know there are some few people in my section of the country, and I have no doubt they exist not only where I live, but at every other point in this country, who are willing to go to the Federal courts for what they may get out of it, and to prosecute and persecute their neighbors, and sometimes even their friends, in order that they may get the filthy lucre that they obtain in this way and put it into their own pockets. I have seen it done, and I have heard them laugh about it afterwards and tell how they had imposed upon the Federal court, as well as wreaked their private vengeance, and in addition to that received pay for so doing. I am glad to say, however, that in my section these "cheap John" characters only exist in limited numbers, but oftentimes in sufficient numbers to annoy and harass innocent citizens.

Now, as was suggested by the gentleman from Illinois yesterday, this might be used to some extent in a partisan way if the Secretary of Agriculture desired so to use it. I am glad we have a most excellent gentleman and a most efficient Secretary at the head of this Department now, and I am frank to say that I do not believe that he would use this power in any such way; but the fact that he would not is no guaranty that there never will be a Secretary of Agriculture who would not use it for partisan purposes, and seek investigations by this means into other matters while investigating this question in different parts of the country, in order that certain views might be promulgated and in order that certain policies might be made popular, and in order that certain information might be obtained which would be to advantage from a partisan and political standpoint.

Under this provision in this bill in section 1, these inspectors could be sent in every part of the country and into every neighborhood and into every county in every Commonwealth of the United States; and under the guise of inspecting food products they could collect such other information as they might desire to collect or be instructed to obtain, to be used for partisan and political purposes. Therefore I say that this provision in the bill which authorizes these inspectors simply legalizes the employment of spies to spy upon the private enterprises of individuals, upon the private business of the citizen, and to go into the manufactories of the country and see what they propose to make, and place them absolutely in the power of the Federal authorities, absolutely at the mercy of this inspector, who in all instances might not be a man of justice, integrity, and high character. Therefore, in my judgment, this one provision of the bill is sufficient reason to call for its defeat. [Applause.]

Another very strong reason why this bill should not become law is found in this provision of the bill which requires the dealer, merchant, manufacturer, or business man to furnish for analysis an article which he is exposing for sale and offering to the trade in his private business. This is the provision: If a man is selling any product or any goods, and within business hours, the inspector shall appear on the scene and offer to pay the value of that article that he is offering to sell to other people, that he shall be required to furnish it to him and it shall be divided into three parts, one part to be taken by the inspector, one part to be left with the manufacturer or dealer, and the other part left in the office of the United States district attorney; that the Agricultural Department shall analyze the part taken by the inspector; that the dealer may have an analysis made of that part which was left with him; and if they do not agree, they shall have an analysis, at the expense of the dealer, merchant, or business man, made of the part that is left in the hands of the United States district attorney, and if they should not agree, all three together, they shall cast it upon the court to determine what is the truth about it by further proof and testimony; and if it is demonstrated by the analysis that the product is impure, that it is adulterated, that then this man shall be taken into court, and that he shall have, as evidence against him, not as prima facie evidence, not as conclusive evidence, but as evidence against him, the analysis which is made of this product he is required himself to sell and he is required to furnish to be used as testimony against him.

Now, then, I do not believe this provision is in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, or any constitutional law of any State in this Union, for the reason that throughout all this land, a man can not be required to furnish testimony against himself or required to testify against himself in any criminal proceeding. The law presumes every man innocent until the contrary shall appear, and he may stand upon his innocence and demand that his actual guilt be established outside of any testimony he shall furnish himself, and that he shall not be required to testify himself, but that he shall have all the benefit of the presumption of innocence until his crime shall have been established by outside testimony furnished by other witnesses and furnished by other means.

But it is proposed in this bill to require that he himself shall furnish to the inspector, an officer of the United States Government, the most powerful Government in all this world, evidence to be used against himself in a court of justice upon a trial in order to determine whether or not he has committed a crime, and this might occur even though the merchant or dealer with the greatest degree of innocence, having received the article in his business with the absolute belief that it was pure and that it was not adulterated in any sense of the word, and having no information on that subject to the contrary, an inspector could come in and force him to sell him one of the products to be analyzed by the United States Government, and then after the analysis, if they find that it was impure, when he had no intention of committing a crime or violating any law, they could bring him into court and introduce this testimony against him which they require he shall furnish himself. I do not believe any law can be passed compelling a man to sell his property if he does not desire to sell it. I do not believe that you can compel a man to sell goods if he should decline to sell them, and I do not believe that any provision of this character should become a law, and I do not believe that any law can be enforced requiring a man to sell property if he does not want to sell it.

By individual and private rights he is given the liberty, in this country, of acquiring any and all the property that he can honestly acquire in due course of trade by honest methods, and he has the right to keep it as long as he sees proper to keep it, or sell it to whom he pleases, and there should be no law placed upon the statute books of this country requiring that he should be compelled to sell it when he prefers not to sell it; and much more so should he not be required by this law to sell it in order that it may furnish evidence to convict him of a crime. Not only does it go to this extent, but it makes it a crime if he shall refuse to sell. If the inspector comes into his place of manufacture or his place of business and demands that he shall sell, and he refuses to sell, then he has committed a crime. If he does sell and the article is shown to be adulterated or impure food, then he has committed a crime. Thus it catches him coming and going. If he refuses to sell, it is a crime; if he does sell and it is found to be impure, he has committed a crime, and take it either way you please, you put on him all the pains and penalties prescribed in this statute. [Applause.]

Not only does it inflict upon him a penalty in the nature of a fine or imprisonment, or both, but it requires him, in addition, to pay all the expenses and costs of this analysis which has been made by the Government in order to convict him of the crime with which he is charged under a violation of this statute.

Now, these two provisions, it seems to me, are very objectionable in that they go into the private affairs of the citizens of this country, and they use the arm and power of the Government in order to make investigations into the private business of the citizens.

Now, another provision. In section 7 of this act it provides that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to fix the standard of the food products and to determine the wholesomeness or unwholesomeness of preservatives or other substances which are or may be added to foods, and to aid him in reaching such decision he may call in the board of arbitration, and so forth.

Now, then, is the Secretary of Agriculture going to be given power in this country to fix the standard by which the people of this country shall eat? That is what it proposes to do—to fix the standard of food products, to fix the standards of the foods that go on your table and go into your homes without the citizen having any say so in any way whatever. If he is going to fix the standard of the food product, how long will it be before he will say what kind of clothing we shall wear in summer and in winter, what kind of a horse you shall drive, what kind of a vehicle you shall ride in, and what kind of business you shall engage in; how you shall run your farm, how long your laborers shall work, what you shall pay them, or what you shall not pay them? And if you propose to let the Government regulate the table, it can regulate the household, it can regulate the farm, and it can regulate the stores. It can regulate the manufacturer, and by and by we shall find that the Government has its hand in the private business of this country, through inspectors and agents, and is dictating to the citizens of this commonwealth how they shall transact their private business and how they shall carry on their domestic affairs. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Mississippi allow me a suggestion?

Mr. CANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In section 10 of this act it is provided:

SEC. 10. That this act shall not be construed to interfere with commerce wholly internal in any State, nor with the exercise of their police powers by the several States: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with legislation now in force, enacted either by Congress for the District of Columbia or by the Territorial legislatures for the several Territories, regulating commerce in adulterated foods within the District of Columbia and the several Territories.

So that this act eliminates or exempts all matters that pertain to the internal commerce, or the commerce done wholly within the limits of the States and the several Territories, and the police powers of the States are left intact.

Mr. CANDLER. Yes; I understand that. The State can regulate its own affairs as well as the United States, and better, because when any food product comes within the borders of the State, within the limits of the State, then it is subject to the jurisdiction of that State, and subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of that State, and the local courts are better qualified, more competent, and more efficient to look after the local affairs of its people than any Federal court in this country, I do not care where it is.

I have seen people in my district dragged away from their homes into the Federal courts, miles away, at great expense, on account of the little picayunish, contemptible prosecutions in those courts brought to wreak vengeance by somebody, or to put a few dollars of per diem and mileage into their pockets, relying upon some unscrupulous witness who is willing to swear away the liberty and inflict fines upon his fellow-citizens.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would suggest that in that case the Government has an excuse for the collection of revenue, but in this case there would be absolutely no excuse.

Mr. CANDLER. There is no justification and no excuse for interfering with these private affairs at all, and the result of this bill would be exactly what I pictured a moment ago. You would find that the citizens were being dragged away from home, miles away, only to answer to these various prosecutions that would arise under this bill, and oftentimes they would find themselves away from home faced by an unscrupulous witness to testify against them, and there would be no protection to them unless they paid out of their own pockets for witnesses to go there in their defense.

I have seen citizens in my community taken to the Federal court when, if they could have been prosecuted in their own courts at home, they would have had reliable witnesses to defend them, and where you could not get a corporal's guard of the county that would believe the witnesses for the Government under oath. But the citizen would be in a Federal court miles away, confronted by unscrupulous witnesses, and the only way the man could ever meet it would be to go into his pocket and bring his own witnesses there in order to protect himself against the unscrupulous and unreliable men that the Government was putting up as witnesses, thereby vouching for their truthfulness, when, if he was at home in his local court, he could, by a cloud of witnesses and without expense or trouble, demonstrate the utter unreliability and the total unworthiness of the witnesses against him. That same condition could arise under this bill; those same circumstances could be presented to any man and he be required to answer the charge. [Applause.]

It was said yesterday that the bill provides for a guaranty which will protect any man from all the troubles that I have described; that no dealer can be convicted under the provisions of this bill if he is able to produce a guaranty in the form provided by the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture—a guaranty signed by the manufacturer or the party from whom the dealer has purchased the article. It is said that this guaranty will be an ample protection; that no man can be convicted if he shows such a guaranty. But, sir, there is no provision in this bill which says that a man can not be prosecuted if he shows this guaranty. The inspector may come along and look into a man's business affairs, may investigate his food products, and his drugs that he proposes to sell on the market; the dealer may say "I bought these from a certain manufacturer, I have a guaranty from that manufacturer, and I am perfectly willing to submit it to you."

The guaranty may be produced and submitted to the inspector; but he may say, "I do not know anything about this guaranty; I do not know whether it is genuine or forged." Here are a number of people flocking around who are willing to say that they purchased these goods from you and that they are impure. They may be anxious for an opportunity to attend the Federal court 100 or 200 miles away, to see the sights and the ways of the world, and have their expenses paid by the Federal Government. These people may be persuading him to bring a prosecution against this dealer; and he may be willing to be persuaded, because he wants to show his efficiency, his alertness, his zeal in the enforcement of the law. So he may say: "This guaranty that you offer may be all right, but it is only a matter of defense. The statute does not say that you shall not be prosecuted if you have this guaranty; it simply says that you shall not be convicted. Therefore I will report the case to the court, and when you go before the bar of justice you can present your guaranty, and if it is a bona fide, genuine guaranty, furnished under the rules and regulations prescribed by the Agricultural Department by the manufacturer from whom you purchased, you will be acquitted."

So that man has to be put to the trouble and expense of possibly carrying his witnesses with him a considerable distance in order to defend himself; he may be put to the trouble of leaving his home and his business and traveling 100 miles or more away to some adjoining county, or some other part of the State in order to present his defense. Not only that; he would be required, in order to be properly represented in a court of justice, to secure the services of some able lawyer to whom he must pay a fee in order that his defense may be properly presented. And although his guaranty when presented may be shown to be bona fide and genuine, yet he will have been dragged from his home, taken away from his business, and obliged to travel many miles to make his defense, and probably may have been subjected to large expense in order to meet this unjust, unrighteous, and contemptible prosecution.

Therefore I say that this guaranty amounts simply to no guaranty. It answers no purpose as a protection except when presented as a matter of defense in a court of justice after the man has been indicted and placed upon trial and called upon to answer a charge preferred against him by a Federal grand jury.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on account of these provisions I have been constrained to oppose the bill. I do not want anybody to say that I am opposed to pure food; I am not. I am in favor of pure food. But I believe that the States can better take care of these matters than the Federal Government I believe that the citizens can better look after their local affairs than the National Government—can attend to them more satisfactorily to themselves, to their State, to the community, and to their fellow-citizens, and that there is no necessity or demand for this bill.

The founders of this great Government had no idea that the Government would ever go into the business of prescribing what people should eat or should not eat. I would be perfectly willing, as suggested by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] yesterday, that persons engaged in interstate commerce, shipping their goods to and from different States, or bringing them from foreign countries, or shipping them to foreign countries, should be required to place upon the commodities in which they deal a label showing exactly what they are, the ingredients they contain, and of what substances they are made, and I would be glad to see trust-made articles shut out of interstate commerce and shut up in the States where produced.

There are a great many articles of food in this country that are said to be adulterated which are entirely wholesome, entirely nutritious—articles that are made for food and are just as pure for every purpose as the natural product itself. I do not believe that the Government should interfere in these private or local matters. I do not believe we should make it possible to drag people into a Federal court at the instance of anybody who may see proper to carry them there. [Applause.] I said a moment ago that I am in favor of pure food. Anybody in the world, to look at me, would believe that I must eat pure food. If I did not, how in the world could I prosper and grow to such large proportions? [Laughter.] Mississippians all believe in pure food. In that country we all like it, and I believe that there we have as pure food as they have anywhere in all the land.

Mr. RUCKER. How about the drinks there?

Mr. CANDLER. My brother asks me what about the drinks. I am glad to say that in the State of Mississippi we do not indulge very much. Out of 75 counties, in only 10 of them in the State of Mississippi can drinks be secured over the counter and in accordance with the law, and it looks like the time is speedily coming when drinks will entirely disappear from that grand old Commonwealth. The statutes in the State of Mississippi in reference to this matter, however, do not permit one to go into the home, to go up to the fireside or in the dining room of the citizen and say what he shall eat or what he shall drink. They do permit a man in his own home to "dispense hospitality" to his friends and neighbors within the limits and boundaries of his own household.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question about Mississippi. I would ask the gentleman about another product of that grand old State. How are the bears holding out? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANDLER. The bears are holding out wonderfully well, and even refused to be exterminated by the President of the United States, but hid out when he appeared upon the scene, although right in the adjoining county from where he was Capt. Bob Bobo had a party of friends from Chicago down hunting with him and the bears permitted his party to slay five of them, and eleven deer submitted themselves as sacrifices upon the altar to supply the demand of Bobo and his friends, while the President, unfortunately, in the adjoining county, could find but one, and I heard he was tied to a tree, and I suppose that is the one whose picture appears so often in the morning papers. [Laughter.] As for myself, I wish he had found more. The truth of it is, I was willing that he should have the opportunity to kill one of our Mississippi bears, and if I had had the say I would have tried to place one where it would have been possible for him to have enjoyed the pleasure of slaying him and enjoying his meat afterwards and seeing what pure bear food we produce. [Laughter.]

To return to the point I was discussing a moment ago, when asked the question in regard to the drinks in the State of Mississippi, in reference to there being but ten counties in which it could be obtained, I would call attention to the fact that we permit every county and community and every incorporated town in the State of Mississippi to say whether its people want drinks sold or whether they do not. In other words, we have local option, and that is what I contend in reference to this bill; that is, that the people and not the National Government should manage and control their own local affairs. [Applause.] You can not enforce this kind of a law unless you have public sentiment behind you and public demand for it, unless, of course, you place it as this bill proposes to place it, in the hands of the Federal Government and put spies in the field to hunt up prosecutions, and pay those spies a per diem and mileage for doing so. When you do that, those spies will find a violation of the law if it is to be found. They will hunt for it and seek it out in all quarters and under all circumstances, and they will find it sometimes to exist where in fact it does not exist, if the rewards are sufficient to justify them in finding it.

As I was saying, I believe in pure food. There is no better place on the face of the earth to get it than in the grand old State of Mississippi. We believe in it there, and we want it there, and we have it there, and if any man on earth should suggest to the contrary "every potato would wink its eye, every cabbage would shake its head, every beet would get red in the face, every onion would grow stronger, every grain field would be shocked, every cob would stick up its ear, and every foot of land would kick," and the information would be sent broadcast that there was no better place in all the world to obtain pure food than Mississippi. [Laughter.] That grand old Commonwealth is prosperous and coming to the front by reason of the fact that we do have pure food, because we raise it, and have good housekeepers who know how to present it to those who are in their homes. I am anxious that the products should remain pure.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman think that the use of cotton-seed oil for culinary purposes would be a violation of this act, used in lieu of any other ingredient?

Mr. CANDLER. That would depend absolutely upon the inspection that might be made by the Agricultural Department under the provisions of this bill, and that Department might conclude that it was a violation of it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not well known that it is very often used in that way?

Mr. CANDLER. It is very often used in that way.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As a pure, healthy product.

Mr. CANDLER. Yes, and we believe it is absolutely healthy; and we believe that the people ought to be permitted to use it if they want to use it, that they ought to be permitted to buy it if they want to buy it, but when they buy it let them know that they are buying cotton-seed oil. When they buy lard, let them know that it is lard. When they buy any other product let them know what that product is. I would gladly support that kind of a bill. I would be glad, so far as that is concerned, to have every food product labeled, showing exactly the ingredients out of which it is made, showing exactly what it is. After that is done, if people want to buy it, let them have it. If they do not want to buy it, let them let it alone. That is exactly what I am contending for; but I say this bill requires people to sell what they do not want to sell and makes it a crime if they decline to sell, providing they offer it for sale to other people. [Applause.]

Now, in conclusion, let me say that if this bill should be amended along the lines suggested by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], if the views expressed in his minority report, which are incorporated in his speech of yesterday, and according to the suggestion which he made, requiring that they be labeled, I would gladly support it. Because I want the people to have what they want; I want them to buy what they desire to buy, knowing at the time what they do buy. When that is done, then the citizen himself will be satisfied, the laws will be enforced, and the country will prosper and the functions of the Government will be used and exercised in accordance with the theory upon which it was founded.

It was founded upon the idea that it should be governed by the people, and not that the people should be governed by the Government; that it should be a government in the hands of the people, to be used by them for their advancement, for their welfare, and for their prosperity; that they should be permitted themselves, through their own agents and officers, to manage and control the Government and to use it in such a way as to give them the greatest liberty consistent with good government, to give them the greatest privileges consistent with the welfare of themselves, their neighbors, and others. [Applause.] And so long as the Government pursues that course its flag will ever wave as an emblem of liberty and of purity and will stand for the prosperity and for the good of all the people alike; but when the Government is turned into the narrow channels of the investigation of these minor affairs, these private and domestic and local concerns within the communities, the homes, the counties, and the households of the people, then its powers will be directed in a manner which the founders of the Government never intended.

Long may this country prosper and may this Government continue to exist so long as it is used for the good of the people, and I trust the day will never come when it shall be taken out of the hands of the people and placed absolutely in the hands of the favored few, to be administered for their own good and to the detriment of the people at large. [Applause.]

I believe in a "Government of the people, by the people, for the people," and I pray it may "never perish from the earth," and to this end may God save us from paternalism, centralization, and empire, and preserve for this and future generations the time-honored, liberty-loving, blood-bought Republic of the Fathers in its pristine beauty and simplicity, and thus bless humanity and quicken the world to sublimer thoughts, purer aspirations, and nobler achievements. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Iowa now consume some time?

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] desires to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] is recognized.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention as a member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee making a favorable report on this bill to make any remarks upon the subject at all, and I do not intend now to undertake to analyze it or to discuss at length its different provisions and clauses, for the reason that that duty has been very ably performed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOMPKINS] who reported the bill from the committee.

I have listened with a good deal of interest seeking to ascertain and find out what really is the tangible objection that has been made by any gentleman who has taken the floor against this bill. No gentleman has yet said that impure and unwholesome food ought to be sold to the public. I have heard the elaborate speech of my worthy and distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], and really with great deference to him and respect for his remarks, the reference that he made to "the bear hunt of the President" in Mississippi was just about as germane and pertinent to the subject-matter of this bill as any other feature of my friend's delightful and entertaining speech.

The gentleman really failed to point out any specific objection to the bill. He spoke freely of many evil practices that have grown up in certain legal procedures in the country; but this bill is not amenable to such criticisms.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman stated that he was in favor of "pure food." That remark is subject to the same criticism that was once made of a distinguished gentleman from New York who was very thoroughly criticised throughout the entire country when he said, "I am a Democrat."

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] in his argument states that he is in favor of all the food products that are not deleterious to health being branded and sold, but that this bill prohibits such a thing as that. If the gentleman from Mississippi will carefully read the bill he will certainly find out that he is mistaken about the provisions of the bill relative to food not deleterious to health.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, when it is properly analyzed makes no inhibition whatever upon the sale of any product that is not deleterious to health. The bill merely requires that a label shall be upon the product informing the purchaser what it is. It does not prohibit the sale or manufacture of it. It simply says when you put anything on the market that you want to sell you must put a label on it showing just what it is. That is all. It does not prevent it. It does not prevent the manufacture or sale.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the object of this bill—and we may criticise the mode and the manner of its enforcement as much as we please, we may make hypercritical criticism upon its verbiage—but the object of the bill is to prevent deceit and fraud. There can be no question about that being the aim and end of the bill. It is to protect commerce, it is to protect not only the man that makes, but also to protect the man that sells, and to protect the man that buys. What possible objection can be made to protecting the public against impure food?

I am sure that I feel as much attached to what is known as the rights of the States as any man on this floor. I would not concede to any man more earnest, devoted loyalty to the rights of the States than I have myself. In the elaborate hearings on this bill, that extended over weeks and weeks of time, with many of the most qualified and experienced men in the country on the subject giving their testimony in these hearings, contained as it is in a book—large book—which I hold in my hand, we came to the conclusion that it was necessary and right to insert for the sake of the opinion of a great many men upon the question of State rights section 10 of the bill. I earnestly favored the insertion of section 10, which I read:

SEC. 10. That this act shall not be construed to interfere with commerce wholly internal in any State, nor with the exercise of their police powers by the several States.

What gentleman advocating or upholding the doctrine of State rights can ask anything more than that provision in the bill? Then the question comes back, Are we willing to have no relief, when the hearings before this committee develop the stern and solemn fact that in those States my friend from Mississippi refers to which had enacted legislation on the subject of pure food, that that legislation in nearly every single instance had been an absolute and dismal failure? No one can deny that the only way of relief was under that provision of the Constitution of our country which gives to Congress the right to regulate commerce. This simply regulates commerce between the States, and the only object this bill has is to protect the public and the people against fraud, deceit, and misrepresentation about the products constituting impure food. Is this a character of legislation that is offensive to your idea of the rights of States?

Why, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] has arraigned the Federal courts. I am not here, Mr. Chairman, to put up a straw man and then knock him down. In all such measures as this, which is the initiatory step in a great movement to protect the public in the purity of food, we must rely to a great extent upon the common sense and justice of the courts of the country in the enforcement of the law; and if there are defects discovered in the enforcement of the law, let them be properly amended in a proper way and at the proper time.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Mississippi misunderstands the whole scope, spirit, and purpose when he states that the bill punishes a man who sells food that is not deleterious to the health of the people. As I said in my opening remarks, the bill does not in terms prohibit the sale of any product deleterious, however adulterated, nor does it lay its inhibition on the sale of an adulterated product, but it does provide that adulterated foods and drugs shall be placed upon the market under their true names and in such a manner as to advise the purchaser of what he is getting. Does anybody object to that? If I go to the corner-grocery merchant and he proposes to sell me food, have not I the right to know what he is selling me? Have not I the right to know whether that product is a fraud, a deceit, or misrepresentation practiced upon me? The bill, Mr. Chairman, expresses better than I can what its real purpose and object is in the case of food:

First. If any substance or substances has or have been mixed and packed with it so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength so that such product, when offered for sale, shall deceive or tend to deceive the purchaser.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. PADGETT. Speaking about the corner-grocery retailer, do you think the bill is sufficiently safeguarded for the protection of the innocent retail dealer?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I am glad you called my attention to that.

Mr. PADGETT. I would be glad to have some information on that point.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I believe the object and purpose of this bill, if carried out in the spirit that it is intended to be carried out, no innocent man will ever suffer. It is only intended to reach out after the guilty.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that is the purpose, but does not the scope of your bill make it so that a burden will be laid on the retail dealer without any purpose or intention to commit a fraud?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No; I think not. I heard your remarks here yesterday, and did not agree with you.

Mr. PADGETT. Do you not make the simple fact that they are in possession of those goods guilt?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Your criticism, if I understood it yesterday, was that the word "knowingly" ought to be there.

Mr. PADGETT. Or some equivalent word.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I appeal to my friend as a lawyer, and a good one, as I know he is, if that word was inserted in all the penal statutes that prevail in this country, how many men would ever be convicted?

Mr. PADGETT. That or an equivalent word is in nearly all the statutes. Does not this act, as worded, make the act of possession of adulterated goods in the hands of a retail dealer an offense?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I think not.

Mr. PADGETT. I mean independent of any scienter or intention.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No, I do not believe the gentleman's construction is correct. I believe in a law like this, which is not simply the result of the last twelve months of thought, but has been under discussion for years. Many efforts in years past in various forms of attempted legislation have been made, and whenever you get a bill of this kind of course there is language and verbiage in it, phrases, etc., that will have to pass through the crucible of fair and just and honest courts. But when you follow it up you are not going to find the courts of this country disposed to punish innocent men. I might say to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] that a man who is in possession of stolen property has to explain. Why should not a like rule apply to a man found with impure and adulterated food which he proposes to sell to innocent purchasers?

Mr. PADGETT. Does not the gentleman think the law should be safeguarded, so that you will not have to rely on the humanitarian principles of the courts?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes; I agree to that, but that very matter, the point that the gentleman now suggests, was fully discussed and elaborated before the committee, and we got it in the very best practical shape we could to carry out the purposes and the objects, which is to prevent deceit and fraud. Does not the gentleman believe that a man ought to be punished who sells an article of food that is adulterated?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; if he does it "knowingly," he ought to be; but suppose he does it innocently?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. If he does it innocently, then he ought to be acquitted.

Mr. PADGETT. That presents precisely the issue that I want to call the gentleman's attention to. Should there not be a provision in the bill that a retail dealer should not be held guilty, or should not be convicted, if he can show that he has sold it in good faith, in the exercise of reasonable diligence; that he purchased these goods, and is himself free from any intention to do wrong?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. If he complies with the terms and provisions of this bill that condition of affairs would never arise. If he complies with the law he could not be convicted.

Mr. PADGETT. The bill provides that he shall be held to be guilty if he has the goods in his possession, qualifying it with the provision that he may protect himself by securing a written guaranty from a resident wholesale merchant or manufacturer. But it eliminates entirely from the bill any guaranty from a foreign wholesale merchant or manufacturer. Now, then, if he has in his possession foreign goods he is liable to conviction regardless of his intent, or his purpose, or knowledge, or want of knowledge.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I do not agree with the gentleman from Tennessee as to the insertion of the "knowingly." If you do that, you would never have a conviction, and you would make it impracticable, and you could not carry out the provisions of this bill. You would destroy its efficiency.

Mr. PADGETT. As the bill reads now, could not a man be convicted in the absence of knowledge?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. If the gentleman inserted "knowingly" as a provision in the bill he would turn out thousands of guilty men and destroy the purpose of the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Does the gentleman from Alabama think that we should enact legislation that would convict men entirely free from all purpose and intent to do wrong?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Oh, no. That is a speculative question and one that it is not worth while to discuss here. On general principles, I would say that I do not believe in any such thing. I do not believe in convicting innocent men. A man must be convicted according to the ordinary rules prevailing in the courts of the country. If the man is shown to be guilty of selling you or me or any other citizen of this country adulterated food, why, I think that he ought to be required to label it what it is and let us know it. If he does not do it, and puts it on the community under false representations, then I think he is guilty of fraud and should be punished.

Mr. PADGETT. One other question. The retail dealer selling adulterated goods, although it may be labeled, is made guilty under this bill without any reference to his knowledge of the adulteration.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. You say the retail dealer who sells goods properly labeled——

Mr. PADGETT. No; I said labeled, but not in conformity with the label is made guilty without his knowledge of the fact that it does not correspond to the label.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Then he has not complied with the law and has not labeled it according to the adulterated product.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but that duty devolves upon the manufacturer.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The dealer can get a certificate from the manufacturer.

Mr. PADGETT. But not from the foreign manufacturer.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have briefly given my views as a member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee on this question, and I take this occasion to say relative to the deliberations of the committee on this subject that I do not believe any question has been before that committee since I have been a member of the committee to which more careful attention has been given to its consideration than this bill received at the hands of the committee. We have either to adopt this kind of legislation, Mr. Chairman, or we have got to submit to what every man knows is going on in the country—the most extravagant and barefaced frauds relative to the purity of our foods. All kinds and character of adulterants are being used, and the public absolutely helpless to check or prevent it. This bill is a step in the right direction. It is not perfect. No supporter contends that it is. It has some defects, and on that we all agree, but its chief end is right, and it ought to become the law.

This is the only alternative that is left us. The State has failed in this matter; there is no question about that. That was the proof before the committee, and we must either accept this bill or submit to evils too grievous to be borne. It seems to me such criticisms as that of my friend from Mississippi in regard to inquisitorial proceedings should not be raised against a measure of this kind. Why, sir, you and I might stand here and go back into the past history of our section of the country; we might talk about matters of wrong, the unjust imposition of taxes, and everything of that kind. But is this a measure justly liable to objections of that kind in any shape or form?

Oppressive proceedings in connection with the collection of the internal-revenue tax upon whisky have been spoken of; "moonshiners" have been referred to. But, sir, a great many of the people engaged in such proceedings believe that they have an inherent right to manufacture whisky in the gorges of the mountains, along the little streams. The law pursues them, in a great many instances, with a good deal of unnecessary rigor. But does any objection of that kind apply to the bill we now have under consideration, the whole purpose and object of which is, as I stated at the beginning, simply to prevent fraud and deceit? That is all that this bill contemplates doing. It may be that after it goes to the courts it may have to be modified or amended as to the procedure to be adopted.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As a lawyer, does the gentleman think that any man should be punished for any act unless he has in that act a criminal intent?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No, sir.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then are you not willing that the word "intentionally," or "knowingly," or some qualifying word of that kind be placed in the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Does not the gentleman know as well as I do that intent is frequently inferred from an act?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It seems to me it can do no harm to insert in the bill some such word as "intentionally," "knowingly," or "willfully."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. But, I ask the gentleman, is it not a fact that in the administration of the criminal law intent is frequently inferred from an act?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then put in the word "negligent." That would cover the gentleman's point. Let some qualifying word be inserted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, in response to my friend from Texas—and I am glad he has asked the question—allow me to say that I am not in favor of punishing any man under this bill (and the bill does not favor such a proceeding) who is innocent. I am not in favor of punishing any man who goes before the public and puts a label upon his goods showing exactly what he is selling. I am entitled, as are other men, to know exactly what I buy to eat.

The gentleman from Mississippi says that this bill proposes to invade "the dining room"—to invade the private affairs of a family. He says the bill is objectionable because it is "inquisitorial." Well, sir, we have heard such language very frequently in the past; but, sir, I think that many of us are inclined to make a great mistake in imagining that the question of State rights appears in every matter that comes up on this floor. There is always a well-defined line of State rights, which very few object to recognizing. No man will say for a moment that the Constitution of the United States does not provide for the regulation of commerce between the States. That is all that this bill proposes to do—to regulate commerce by protecting the man who makes or sells an article honestly.

Mr. ROBB. Will the gentleman allow me to refer to the contention made by the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Tennessee, that the word "knowingly" should be inserted in the bill? If that word were inserted, would it not be incumbent on the Government, in order to make out a case, to show, in the first instance, that the party selling the article had sold it knowing that the goods were adulterated; whereas if that word be omitted, then if in any case a party should happen to sell goods without knowing that they were adulterated, although there might be a presumption of guilt, the defendant would still be at liberty to show as a matter of defense that the sale was not made knowingly?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The suggestion of my friend is very pertinent and one that I accept. That is just the line of discussion that was followed in the committee in framing this very feature of the bill. When you put any allegation in an indictment the State must prove it absolutely; so in this case if the word "knowingly" were inserted the State would have to prove absolutely that the goods had been sold knowingly. How could that be done?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This is similar to the case of a man arrested for counterfeiting because he has counterfeit money in his possession. Although that fact would of itself be "some evidence" of guilt, it would not mean that he would necessarily be guilty or found guilty. He could be acquitted on showing that the money had come innocently into his possession.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The bill does not cut off any proper legal defense that he may be able to make.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Not at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee is a good one. It is in line with suggestions that are familiar to all lawyers.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am averse to occupying the gentleman's time, but as he has evidently given much consideration to this bill, I wish to ask him a question. Section 11 of the bill invokes the power of Congress under the Constitution to regulate interstate commerce, and I think the principle of that section is sound. Now, I want to present to the gentleman a proposition upon another branch of the subject. Assuming now as the hypothesis that we describe by law trust-made articles as being against public policy in the arbitrary control of prices and productions, could not this principle embodied in section 11 of the bill be applied to that case? It reads as follows:

SEC. 11. That any article of food or drug that is adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of this act, and is transported or being transported from one State to another for sale, or if it be sold or offered for sale in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States, or if it be imported from a foreign country for sale, or if intended for export to a foreign country, shall be liable to be proceeded against in any district court of the United States, within the district where the same is found and siezed for confiscation, by a process of libel for condemnation. And if such article is condemned as being adulterated the same shall be disposed of as the said court may direct, and the proceeds thereof, if sold, less the legal costs and charges, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Therefore, describing the trust article as against public policy, could not that, under this same principle and same procedure, be seized and sold and the proceeds placed in the United States Treasury.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Under this bill or under a bill like it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Under a bill like it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I think the gentleman is right about it. Mr. Chairman, I yield back my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to know if there is any gentleman in opposition to the bill who wants further discussion? If there is not, I would like to close the debate. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to control "interstate traffic," under the commerce power granted Congress, including the trade into and within the Territories and the District of Columbia. Section 10 provides "that this act shall not be construed to interfere with commerce wholly internal in any State, nor with the exercise of their police powers by the several States," similar to the provision that I wanted inserted into the bill passed here a few days ago with reference to "diseased stock."

The "police power of the several States" covers not only State "commerce wholly internal," but goes further and applies to "noncommercial interstate commerce," the articles nominated in this bill being so classed and denounced by Congress.

This seems to me the construction to be placed on this part of the bill under the Austin case (179 U. S. Rep.) and the Reed case, for we must see Congress does not take "entire" control of this interstate noncommercial traffic and expressly recognizes the continuance of this police power in the States.

In the Addyston Pipe trust case (175 U. S. Rep.) the Supreme Court of the United States in explicit language says:

Congress may * * * prohibit the performance of any contract between individuals * * * to directly regulate, to any substantial extent, interstate or foreign commerce. * * *

"The power of Congress to regulate commerce comprises the right to enact a law prohibiting the citizen from entering into contracts which directly and substantially and not merely remotely, incidentally, and collaterally regulate, to a greater or less degree, commerce among the States."

"The power to regulate interstate commerce is, as stated by Chief Justice Marshall, full and complete."

"Why, then," I said in my speech in the House June 2, 1900, "should not Congress prohibit interstate trust combines," and stop the shipment of their goods from one State to another—and I still so insist.

Again, in the case of Crutcher against Kentucky—a case where that State taxed a corporation doing an interstate business—held invalid; but the court, through Mr. Justice Bradley, said it is the "duty" of Congress to protect the people of the United States from being imposed upon by foreign corporations or concerns dealing in interstate or foreign commerce. Mr. Justice Bradley, for the court, said:

Congress would undoubtedly have the right to exact from associations of that kind any guarantees that it might deem necessary for the public security and for the faithful transaction of business, and as it is within the province of Congress, it is to be presumed that Congress has done, or will do, all that is necessary and proper in that regard.

The prerogative, the responsibility, and the duty of providing for the security of the citizens and the people of the United States in relation to foreign corporate bodies or foreign individuals with whom they may have relations of foreign commerce belong to the Government of the United States and not to the several States, and confidence in that regard may be reposed in the National Legislature without any anxiety or apprehension arising from the fact that the subject-matter is not within the province or jurisdiction of the State legislatures.

And the same thing is exactly true in regard to interstate commerce as it is with regard to foreign commerce.

Citing many cases. This case you can find in 141 United States Report, pages 57–58.

Mr. Chairman, Congress has from time almost immemorial "prohibited" objectionable commerce if it is international or interstate. This is shown, notably, by the embargo acts way back almost a century ago, generally discussed and approved as valid legislation in the Clark-Fields case. (143 U. S. Rep.)

We have prohibited the bringing to the United States certain objectionable immigrants—idiots, insane persons, criminals, polygamists, and Chinese—by the acts of 1891, 1894, 1882, and 1875. We prohibited the importation of convict-made goods by the Wilson tariff act of 1894.

We have prohibited this, that, and the other. For instance, only last year—and I believe the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] supported the bill; at least I feel quite sure that they did not object—we passed what is known as the Lacey bill, which prohibited the sale and transmission of birds from a State prohibiting their killing to another State.

I have quite a long list of such legislation enacted by Congress, by both Democrats and Republicans, which I incorporated in my speech delivered in this House on June 2, 1900, to be found at page 686 of volume 33, part 8, Appendix, of the Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.

Further on down in this speech I say Congress has prohibited the importation of adulterated or unwholesome food or products and drugs injurious to health by the acts of August 30, 1890, March 2, 1897, and the importation of diseased cattle, under act of August 13, 1890; the importation and exportation of diseased cattle, act August 30, 1890, and interstate commerce in diseased live stock, act of May, 1884; the exportation of slaughtered meat, by the act of March 3, 1891. Then we have prohibited often many things being sent and sold to Indians.

All these acts were founded on this commerce clause.

So, Mr. Chairman, as I say, from time to time, both Democrats and Republicans have supported laws which prohibited the transportation of things objectionable, interstate and foreign products, from one State to another.

Now, I fully appreciate what my distinguished and eloquent young friend from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] has said on State laws, etc., but really, with all due deference to him, I do not think he fully appreciated the purpose or effect of this bill.

It does not interfere with any right possessed by the State, as I now understand the bill. It aids the States. When Congress acts as to interstate commerce—takes the matter entirely in its control, as was held in the Reed case—State laws are inoperative as to such commerce; but in this case the police laws of the State remain intact. There is an express provision in this bill, as I have shown—section 10—wherein it says that State commerce and the laws pertaining to the same and the police powers of the State shall not be disturbed. I can not possibly see how any State rights man can possibly object to this kind of a bill under all the circumstances.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] says this bill says what we shall have on our tables to eat and drink. Well, have the States the right to say that we shall not have arsenic for breakfast? The State can say you shall not have strychnine for dinner. The State can say you shall not have opium for supper. The State can say you shall not sell or use any of these articles except on the prescription of a physician, or it can prohibit their sale and use outright—because dangerous to life and health.

Now, that each of these things can become a subject of interstate or foreign commerce, Congress can come up and help the State, as provided in this bill, and say that you shall not bring from one State to another, or import from any foreign country, any one of these drugs, or diseased clothes, or diseased cattle, or anything that is in derogation of the public health, the public morals, or the public welfare.

That has always been the law. Simply because Congress in this case has not taken charge and said, "You shall not do so and so" with interstate traffic is no reason why Congress can not now legally do so under this commerce power so clearly defined.

In no case has this power been more clearly defined than in the Addyston pipe case and in the Reed case, the distinction being drawn in both, especially in the pipe case, that Congress has the right to "prohibit" interstate commerce, while in the Crutcher case the court said it was the "duty" of Congress to stop objectionable interstate commerce to protect our people.

Again, in the Reed case the court said where Congress takes exclusive charge of interstate commerce, then that suspends the operation of the State laws. But that is not this case. The bill expressly exempts that; and while there may be other provisions in the bill with which I am not familiar that we can amend later on, certainly the power to pass a bill controlling such interstate and foreign commerce, and that alone, is clearly within the power of Congress, and for the present I can not see anything objectionable in the bill. We can eliminate any objectionable features later on.

Will my friend from Iowa yield to me a minute more?

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield a minute more to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, just on the point on which my friend from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] was interrogated by my colleague [Mr. PADGETT] I wish to say: Take, for example, a case of passing counterfeit money. When you have a counterfeit bill in your possession it is "some evidence," at least, of your being guilty of passing it. You are certainly guilty of having it in your possession, but that does not in any wise prohibit or bar the party from making his defense in court and saying: "Well, I got it innocently, in due course. I got it from Smith & Co." Smith & Co. will prove that they got it innocently from the Riggs Bank, we will say, and then the Riggs Bank will say: "We got it innocently from the United States Treasury only a few minutes ago," and so on. This bill does not bar any man from such defense. Of course, a very high law says, "Thou shalt not kill."

The State law mitigates that, and says you shall not kill under certain conditions; that if you do you are guilty of murder. But that does not bar the defendant from proving his intent. Under this bill you can prove the intent and show your certificate of purchase. Still, Mr. Chairman, the language might be modified so that a blind man might see that no one is barred from that kind of a defense. As it is, the bill may not be too drastic, as the subject treated is one where many frauds can be imposed on the people and it will be hard to prove guilt.

Mr. PADGETT. The State law says you shall not willfully, deliberately, etc., kill. It does not say in specific terms that you shall not kill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I was quoting a higher law, with which my friend is more familiar than I am. Still the questions of intent and honest belief are questions susceptible of proof in several ways.

Mr. PADGETT. The killing is always qualified, and the character of the killing is specified in order to constitute murder.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You will agree that this does not bar the proving that the party has not intentionally or willfully or knowingly bought these goods that are outlawed.

Mr. PADGETT. That is the very question that I am raising. It makes the specific act of having possession of the goods a criminal act because of the intent with which the person has possession.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose a man is indicted. He is indicted for having outlawed goods in his possession. When you prove the goods in his possession and that they are such and such goods, and that they are outlawed, then the burden is on him to show how he got them into his possession innocently.

Mr. PADGETT. Why not give him an opportunity to prove that?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why, of course, the burden then shifts upon him at once, and he can show his certificate of honest ownership under this bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Georgia if he desires to use more time? I would like general debate to close in fifteen minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say to the gentleman that no other gentleman has requested time from me.

Mr. HEPBURN. Would it be satisfactory if twenty minutes from now I ask for the reading of the bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. I say no gentleman on this side has requested any time. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. SCHIRM. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOMPKINS] was making his speech yesterday I put some questions to him in respect to the effect of the punishment provided. I do not wish to be placed in the position of antagonizing this bill. While I do not think it is at all a perfect measure, and perhaps no bill is, yet I would rather vote for it with those provisions that I consider objectionable than not to vote for it and thus lose its beneficent effects. Diseases of the stomach are on the increase in this country, and the time has come when something must be done to raise the standards of food we eat. Our pantries have become repositories for harmful drugs, so that it is not strange that Americans take readily to the use of medicines. We take drugs with our foods every day, and have become so practiced in the art that we do not even turn our faces awry at the strongest drugs.

Fortunes are being built up upon the wrecks of human bodies. Manufacturers are making large fortunes from the misfortunes that they are forcing upon the public. Nearly every article of common food has been counterfeited. We sit down to the table expecting to use catsup, when, as a matter of fact, we are using ground turnips or carrots that are dyed and doctored. This catsup never turns its color. It is always a beautiful brick color, altogether unnatural to the tomato, and we eat it in cold blood, knowing that it is deleterious matter. Why, the dining room, could we look into the properties of the various things put there as wholesome food, could we understand the true nature of things we eat, would impress us as a chamber of horrors rather than as a place for the upbuilding of the human system through wholesome foods.

This bill provides that under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture a commission shall be appointed, consisting of physicians of well-known and high reputation, to fix the standards of food. This proposition has been objected to as perhaps too paternal in its effect. The fact is that we are allowing a certain unscrupulous class of manufacturers to fix a low standard in this country by the use of hurtful drugs and harmful, deleterious matter. A wise provision of this law is that it fixes the maximum penalty and not the minimum penalty; so that in cases where there is a violation of the law, without any serious criminal intent or through mistake, the judge can use his discretion in fixing a small fine or a short term of imprisonment, or both.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate be closed in fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed in fifteen minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that this bill is not a perfect one. I do not believe that it met in its entirety the views of any member of the committee that reported it. But it was the best possible bill attainable. It was prepared by a committee appointed by the pure-food congresses that from time to time have met in this city.

I understand that it was unanimously approved by the last and largest of these conventions, although it is but fair to say that there is a dispute as to the unanimity with which it was adopted. At all events, it is the best exposition of the view of those most interested in the question that has been up to this time attained. It is not as drastic as I would have drawn it. It does not interfere with the legislation of the States. I would have made it interfere if I had had the power. It does not in any degree, and it expressly so avers, interfere with the police power of any of the States. I would have omitted that declaration if I had drawn the bill. So that there has been compromise and concession upon the part of nearly all those who have taken an active interest in the legislation in the hope of getting something. There is a demand for it. I believe I would be justified in saying that no subject that has attracted the attention of Congress in the last five years has been so unanimously petitioned for as has this measure or some measure of this character.

One reason why so many ask it is because of the diversified legislation of the States. Thirty-six States have legislated upon this subject, and I am told by those who have studied the subject that no two of those statutes are alike. The merchant in the city of Baltimore or in the city of Boston trading in Iowa is required to put one kind of a label upon his goods, in Illinois another, and in Missouri another. There is no uniformity, and he meets with constant difficulty because of this want of uniformity. The friends of uniformity have said before the committee that has reported this bill that by securing this legislation it was believed that the States will change their enactments to conform to it as far as practicable, so as to have uniformity.

One great difficulty in the way of prosecutions is in the ascertainment of the real character of the article sold. The belief is general that very many of the articles that enter into our daily food that we buy in the market or in the corner grocery are adulterated. They are not genuine; they are not what they purport to be. There is an attempt, and a successful one, to defraud—to sell the cheaper and the less perfect article for the dearer and more perfect. This bill seeks to correct these evils by the creation of proper standards, and by providing the means by which the real character of the goods can be ascertained in a way fair and just to all parties.

There is much of power, and that is complained against in this bill, lodged in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture. You must lodge the power somewhere if you are to correct the evils that the legislation is directed against. It must be lodged somewhere. I do not know of anyone fitter to hold this power than the Secretary of Agriculture, with the limitations that are put about him. He can not, as his mere ipse dixit, say that this article or that or the other is not lawful and therefore under ban. He has his means of such ascertainment and is bound to their use. He must have in cooperation with him, first, a man in charge of the Bureau of Chemistry—its director. He must have five medical men, three of them from the Government—from the Army, from the Navy, from the Marine Corps—two from civil life appointed by the President, and then must, in addition to that, have the cooperation of the five that are appointed by the Agricultural association of the United States, the chemists of their choice, and surely that ought to constitute a tribunal that the people of the United States would be willing to trust. If you will not trust them, where can you lodge this power? Some one must determine; and then, at most, the determinations of these men, so carefully secured, are but prima facie evidence in the courts. Their determination may be assailed just as any other question of fact. The only advantage there is to the Government is the prima facie character of the proof thus secured.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there were objections to this bill from all portions of the country, I will admit; but they are the persons that the law is feeling after. The gentleman from Massachusetts yesterday made a most lachrymose plea for the codfish of Gloucester. His argument, when it was reduced to its ultimate, was that there were certain persons in Gloucester who were engaged in producing codfish; that they could not reach my constituents in Iowa, for instance, with their codfish without they could wash their codfish with boracic acid, and, therefore, that they might continue the lucrative traffic in codfish, they must have the privilege of selling boracic acid to the people of Iowa as an article of food.

Now, gentlemen must know that it is to prevent the Massachusetts men from selling boracic acid to innocent Iowans that this bill is brought forward. At least, that is one of the purposes. But after I had listened to the speech of the gentleman in regard to the codfish, as I passed out of the corridor a gentleman who has taken much interest in this bill, who knows what he is talking about generally, informed me that it was not codfish that they wanted to preserve. He said that the codfish that you and I know, Mr. Chairman, a slab-like substance composed of bone and salt that sells upon the market, that that was well near indestructible, as indestructible as a cottonwood board; it may fuzz up and blow away in the wind, but that was the only way in which you could destroy it; you could not burn it and you could not rot it. [Laughter.] In other words, you could not make codfish worse than it is when it leaves Massachusetts by any lapse of time. [Laughter.] But he said that there were some other fish of a more delicate character that could not be preserved in salt, and that could not reach the interior of the country without they had this bath of boracic acid. [Laughter.]

Now, I do not know whether that is true or not. I will hunt up the gentleman who gave me this valuable information and will turn him over to the gentleman from Massachusetts and let him wrestle with the question of fact. But I do know this: I know there are other men opposing this bill simply because it will interfere with their business; and as a witness that it ought to be interfered with, I call upon the gentleman from Massachusetts to speak. In fact, he has spoken. He tells us, "I know that boracic acid is deleterious." He tells us that while it is deleterious yet we can wash it out. He recognizes the fact that it ought to be washed out. Why? Because it is deleterious.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa in what part of my remarks I admitted that boracic acid was injurious?

Mr. HEPBURN. I can not tell in just what part. I will remind the gentleman of what I am referring to, and he can tell what part. He said that Dr. Wiley—the first chemist, perhaps, in the United States, the man who is now and probably would be charged with the execution of this bill—he said that Dr. Wiley will decide against us, that Dr. Wiley will decide that boracic acid is unhealthful. I am quite confident that the gentleman specifically said, "I believe boracic acid to be unhealthful." If he did not, then I am perfectly willing that he should have the benefit of his denial.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield further?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; for a question, or for a denial, or for a correction of myself.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I stated that Professor Wiley believed that boracic acid was harmful, because he had been in the midst of a controversy with the best German authorities on that question. Professor Wiley has taken one side and the German authorities, as I understand, have taken quite different view. My personal argument, if I expressed myself as I think I did, was something like this: Granted that boracic acid is harmful—taking Professor Wiley at his word——

Mr. HEPBURN. I am willing to have my remarks modified by that statement.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that Professor Wiley testified in the hearings before our committee that "the Hepburn bill as it stands to-day would not operate in any way to prohibit the use of any such substance," referring to boracic acid. So that this is not a matter that has been determined by Professor Wiley.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's contention that the German chemists are insisting that boracic acid is not harmful must be erroneous, because this bill has been urged upon us for the reason, among other reasons, that our foods are being excluded from German markets because of the presence of boracic acid. The Germans are excluding our foods and we are suffering in the markets because of the proceedings of these gentlemen.

If my contention is true—if this mode of treating codfish, or something or other that is called codfish, is unwholesome, why not give us the benefit of this legislation? If it is wholesome, who is hurt? No one, because I undertake to say that under the provisions of this law every man engaged in the manufacture of food can protect himself if the article that he produces is not harmful to human health.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has expired. The time for general debate has also expired. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of protecting the commerce in food products and drugs between the several States and in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States and with foreign countries the Secretary of Agriculture shall organize the Chemical Division of the Department of Agriculture into a bureau of chemistry, which shall have the direction of the chemical work of the present Division of Chemistry and of the chemical work of the other Executive Departments whose respective heads may apply to the Secretary of Agriculture for such collaboration, and which shall also be charged with the inspection of food and drug products, as hereinafter provided in this act. The Secretary of Agriculture shall make necessary rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act, under which the director of the bureau of chemistry shall procure from time to time, or cause to be procured, and analyze, or cause to be analyzed or examined, chemically, microscopically, or otherwise, samples of foods and drugs offered for sale in original unbroken packages in the District of Columbia, in any Territory, or in any State other than that in which they shall have been respectively manufactured or produced, or from a foreign country, or intended for export to a foreign country. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to employ such chemists, inspectors, clerks, laborers, and other employees as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and to make such publication of the results of examinations and analyses as he may deem proper.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to move to strike out the enacting clause?

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, a motion to strike out the enacting clause would be in order at this time.

Mr. ADAMSON. I make that motion.

The question having been taken,

The CHAIRMAN. The noes appear to have it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I call for a division.

The question was again taken; and there were—ayes 12, noes 53.

So the motion of Mr. ADAMSON was rejected.

Mr. MANN. I have an amendment which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15, page 2, strike out the words "necessary to carry out the provisions of this act" and insert "hereafter provided by law."

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to that proposed amendment. The bill as it stands gives to the Secretary of Agriculture unlimited power to employ persons in connection with his Department, a provision which is contained, I believe, in no other law. The usual provision is to authorize such persons to be employed as may be provided by law or by Congress, which means in an appropriation bill. I do not think that the gentleman from Iowa can have any objection to this amendment. Professor Wiley in his testimony before our committee was asked as to whether in his opinion there ought to be any limitation in the law upon the power of the Secretary to employ inspectors and he said, on page 211 of the hearings, at the top of the page:

I think that would be very desirable, very desirable that the number should be limited by law.

It seems to me that that would remove one of the objections to this bill, which has been that it might at times be used for partisan purposes, for the purpose of blackmail, for all sorts of improper purposes, if there should come an opportunity for an improper official to make use of such power of appointment; but if the power is limited, as I suppose it should be by an appropriation bill, that objection to the bill would be removed. I hope that the gentleman can see his way clear to accept the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty in the way is this: The matter can not be cured, if left in this way, by an appropriation bill. You can not fix the number. You will have to have some other legislation. Now, would it not be better to allow the discretion to remain in the Secretary of Agriculture for the establishment of this Bureau, and then legislate for those that were in place in an appropriation bill?

Mr. MANN. Why does the gentleman think it could not be provided for in an appropriation bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. Simply because no appointment could be made until the legislation was had. It would be new legislation, and therefore subject to a point of order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman understands that it would be to carry out a purpose provided by law, so that it would not be new legislation, but simply making appropriation to carry out this plan of the law.

Mr. HEPBURN. That possibly may be so, but I do not think it would be so.

Mr. MANN. If that is not so, then any provision in reference to these people would be subject to a point of order in an appropriation bill. I suppose the gentleman would hardly think that. Now, we make the same provision in all of our other bills and statutes, as the gentleman knows in the bill in reference to the department of commerce. There we put in the bill in a number of places a provision for such clerks and assistants as may be provided by law, clearly giving the power to make the appropriation. I suppose in this case, if this bill becomes a law in time, it could be covered by the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am not clear about it myself, Mr. Chairman, although I think the gentleman is in error.

Mr. MANN. I talked with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations this morning and asked him if, in his opinion, that would give to the committee the power to make an appropriation without being subject to a point of order, and he stated to me that he thought it would.

Mr. HEPBURN. If that is the case, I have no objection to this amendment.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. The bill provides for the establishment of a bureau of chemistry. I had supposed that last session of Congress we did establish such a bureau.

Mr. HEPBURN. We have a Division of Chemistry. This is making a bureau. It is simply enlarged so as to meet the purposes of this bill.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I supposed that was done at the last Congress.

Mr. MANN. That was in fact done after this bill was prepared, but it does not make any difference.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. By an appropriation bill in the last Congress we did establish a Bureau of Chemistry, with Dr. Wiley at the head.

Mr. HEPBURN. Very well, then we will not have to establish another one.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 7, noes 23.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think that is too important a matter to be disposed of in this way. I shall have to make the point of no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will demand tellers first.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. MANN and Mr. HEPBURN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 20, noes 41.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the introduction into any State or Territory or the District of Columbia from any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or from any foreign country, or shipment to any foreign country, of any article of food or drugs which is adulterated or misbranded, within the meaning of this act, is hereby prohibited; and any person who shall ship or deliver for shipment from any State or Territory or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or to a foreign country, or who shall receive in any State or Territory or the District of Columbia from any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or foreign country, or who, having received, shall deliver, in original unbroken packages, for pay or otherwise, or offer to deliver to any other person, any such article so adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of this act, or any person who shall sell or offer for sale in the District of Columbia or the Territories of the United States such adulterated, mixed, misbranded, or imitated foods or drugs, or export or offer to export the same to any foreign country, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and for such offense be fined not exceeding $200 for the first offense and for each subsequent offense not exceeding $300 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. In line 8, page 3, after the word "shall" and before the word "sell," I move to insert the word "willfully."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not wish to debate this matter at length. I simply submit that no man should be punished unless he intends to commit a crime, and I think he will be unless the word "willfully" or "knowingly" is inserted. I think the word "willfully" is the best one to use.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not prevail. It will destroy the efficiency of the bill. If the burden was upon the Government of showing that a man knew the contents of what he sold it could never be met under a statute of that kind. I want to say that, in my judgment, the people of the United States have gone mad in their solicitude and tenderness for men who are committing crime. Criminals ought to be punished. Men ought to know what they are doing when they are tampering with the health of communities.

The health of invalids, the health of infants, the health of people who have no protection is a matter of consequence. I have no consideration for the class of people who endanger the public health. It is a man's duty to know what he is doing when he is selling to me what may be a poison. At least, he must take such means to ascertain and inform himself as to show his good faith, so that when his conduct is investigated before the court no punishment will come to him. This law is to be administered by judges, by lawyers, by men who know what ought to be done in the construction of a statute, and who will have all proper regard for the defendant. I do hope that the efficiency of the bill will not be destroyed by the insertion of that word.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

ADULTERATIONS.

SEC. 6. That for the purposes of this act an article shall be deemed to be adulterated—

In case of drugs:

First. If, when a drug is sold under or by a name recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia, it differs from the standard of strength, quality, or purity, as determined by the test laid down in the United States Pharmacopœia official at the time of the investigation.

Second. If its strength or purity fall below the professed standard under which it is sold.

Third. If it be an imitation of or offered for sale under the name of another article.

In the case of confectionery:

If it contain terra alba, barytes, talc, chrome yellow, or other mineral substances or poisonous colors or flavors, or other ingredients deleterious or detrimental to health.

In the case of food:

First. If any substance or substances has or have been mixed and packed with it so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength, so that such product, when offered for sale, shall deceive or tend to deceive the purchaser.

Second. If any substance or substances has or have been substituted wholly or in part for the article, so that the product, when sold, shall deceive or tend to deceive the purchaser.

Third. If any valuable constituent of the article has been wholly or in part abstracted, so that the product, when sold, shall deceive or tend to deceive the purchaser.

Fourth. If it be an imitation of or offered for sale under the distinctive name of another article: Provided, That the term "distinctive name" shall not be construed as applying to any article sold or offered for sale under a name that has come into general use to indicate the class or kind of the article if the name be accompanied on the same label or brand with a statement of the place where said article has been manufactured or produced.

Fifth. If it be mixed, colored, powdered, or stained in a manner whereby damage or inferiority is concealed, so that such product, when sold, shall deceive or tend to deceive the purchaser.

Sixth. If it contain any added poisonous ingredient or any ingredient which may render such article injurious to the health of the person consuming it.

Seventh. If it be labeled or branded with intent so as to deceive or mislead the purchaser, or purport to be a foreign product when not so, or is an imitation, either in package or label, of another substance of a previously established name, or which has been trade-marked or patented.

Eighth. If it consists in whole or in part of a filthy, decomposed, or putrid animal or vegetable substance, or any portion of an animal unfit for food, whether manufactured or not, or if it is the product of a diseased animal, or one that has died otherwise than by slaughter: Provided, That an article of food which does not contain any added poisonous or deleterious ingredients shall not be deemed to be adulterated in the following cases:

First. In the case of mixtures or compounds which may be now or from time to time hereafter known as articles of food, under their own distinctive names, and not included in definition fourth of this section. Second. In the case of articles labeled, branded, or tagged so as to plainly indicate that they are mixtures, compounds, combinations, imitations, or blends: Provided, That the same shall be labeled, branded, or tagged so as to show the character and constituents thereof: Provided further, That substances which enter into the preparation or preservation of food and which change their chemical nature in the preparation of food shall be branded at the time of manufacture with the names of the resulting substances which are left in the food produced when ready for consumption, together with the name and address of the manufacturer: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed as requiring or compelling proprietors or manufacturers of proprietary foods which contain no unwholesome added ingredient to disclose their trade formulas, except in so far as the provisions of this act may require to secure freedom from adulteration or imitation: Provided further, That no dealer shall be convicted under the provisions of this act when he is able to prove a written guaranty of purity, in a form approved by the Secretary of Agriculture as published in his rules and regulations, signed by the manufacturer, or the party or parties from whom he purchased said articles: Provided also, That said guarantor or guarantors reside in the United States. Said guaranty shall contain the full name and address of the party or parties making the sale to the dealer, and said party or parties shall be amenable to the prosecutions, fines, and other penalties which would attach in due course to the dealer under the provisions of this act.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add at the end of line 20, on page 6, the following:

Provided, That dried fish preserved by suitable preservative substances employed as a surface application shall not be deemed adulterated in the meaning of this act.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, my reason for offering this amendment, which follows substantially the line of the Massachusetts statute, is that it is impossible to preserve codfish in summer for consumption in the interior of the country without the use of a small amount of borax. Now, the honorable gentleman in charge of this bill quoted a friend whom he met, who says that substances are put up as codfish which are not codfish.

So far as I know, in a sense this is true. The codfish family consists of hake, haddock, cod, and pollock. Hake, haddock, and cod are superior fish. The pollock is an inferior fish—that is, it is always so classed in the codfish family. Now, it is utterly out of the question to ship these foods without the use of borax. If that product is analyzed by the chief of the Division of Chemistry, as provided in this bill, he will find that in each package of codfish there is four-tenths of 1 per cent of borax. But he analyzes it as it comes from the grocery store. He does not analyze it as it goes onto your table. Before it goes onto your table it will be put to soak for twenty-four hours, to soak the salt out, and the borax will be soaked out at the same time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I ask the gentleman what he means here by the word "suitable?" Why does he not describe the preserving substance? Why does he not call it by its name?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly satisfied to call it by its name; but I have followed the line of the Massachusetts statute. Preservaline is used for this purpose. It is powdered on the surface of the fish.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What is the powder?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Forty per cent of the preservaline is boracic acid. What the rest is I do not know, but it is perfectly harmless stuff, and there is one proportion in weight of this preservaline used for one hundred proportions of fish. In other words, four-tenths of this preservative substance, which is necessary for the transportation of the fish into the interior of the United States, is a compound deleterious to health in the opinion of the chief of the Division of Chemistry.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Are you willing to put the word "harmless" before or after the word "substance?"

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I am willing to insert "boracic acid" instead of the words "preservative substance." I am not willing to put the word "harmless" there, because that would give the case to the chief of the Division of Chemistry to decide, and we know beforehand how he is going to decide. But, Mr. Chairman, I want to say this: The quantity which would be contained in the sample might be harmful, but the quantity which goes into your food is not harmful, because your food is soaked for twenty-four hours to get the salt out before it goes on the table. The reason that I have selected this wording is because it follows substantially the Massachusetts statute.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to give notice that I shall move to insert "a harmless" before the word "suitable."

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that we ought to rely too much upon the fact that this innocent amendment follows the Massachusetts statute. You must remember, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman has informed us that this amendment is necessary in order to enable them to sell fish to the interior. They do not eat this fish in Massachusetts. [Laughter.] Therefore they have fixed their statute to meet their wants. They propose to sell the deleterious food to us out in Iowa. Therefore the statute ought not to figure very extensively.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I myself eat it repeatedly, and it is one of the most usual articles of diet, especially on Fridays, of a large part of the population.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand the gentleman to say that it is necessary.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. MADDOX. You might modify it and sell it to the people of Massachusetts alone. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, I hope, Mr. Chairman, the amendment will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

[Mr. MANN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, let me call attention of the committee to the language of section 7, which provides:

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to fix standards of food products when advisable, and to determine the wholesomeness or unwholesomeness of preservatives and other substances which are or may be added to foods; and to aid him in reaching just decisions in such matters he is authorized to call upon the Director of the Bureau of Chemistry and the chairman of the committee on food standards of the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, and such physicians, not less than five, as the President of the United States shall select, three of whom shall be from the medical departments of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine-Hospital Service, and not less than five experts to be selected by the Secretary of Agriculture by reason of their attainments in physiological chemistry, hygiene, commerce, and manufactures, to consider jointly the standards of all food products (within the meaning of this act), and to study the effect of the preservatives and other substances added to food products on the health of the consumer.

Now, I say, Mr. Chairman, there is a tribunal that we may safely rest this case with. There is no one man who can determine it arbitrarily as he pleases. Here is a provision to secure the most eminent of those who are best informed upon subjects of this kind, and I think it is infinitely safer to trust the health of the people of the United States to a tribunal of this kind than it is to trust it to the dealers in codfish or dealers in beef and beer.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Iowa misapprehends entirely the remarks I made to the committee. I may call his attention to the fact that this bill does not require the Secretary of Agriculture to call in anybody. It only authorizes him to call in people to aid him in making the determination. The point I make is this: that if the English people desire meat preserved by the aid of boracic acid, and so order it, why should we say that it should not be sold to them in the way they want it because we do not choose to eat it in that fashion? This bill provides if the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine that boracic acid is a harmful preservative, then the use of it in this country must cease, and the use of it must cease in regard to export beef, although the English dealers say that the beef is harmless and want their meats sent to them in that fashion. The only question about boracic acid is like all other preservatives, it is a matter of preserving the flesh from decay; you can use sugar and salt for the same purpose, as we do in butter. You can put in boracic acid and it is a preservative in the same fashion. We may say it is harmful, but why should we say that we should not sell the thing that other people want in the manner they want it because we do not choose to eat it in that fashion?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by inserting before the word "suitable" the word "harmless."

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 16, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Insert at end of line 14, page 8, the following:
"Provided further, That the retail dealers shall not be adjudged guilty under the provisions of this act who can satisfactorily show to the court trying the cause that he purchased said goods from a reputable wholesale merchant or manufacturer, and that after exercising reasonable diligence he was ignorant of the adulterated, defective, or misbranded quality or condition of said goods."

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will not prevail. This retail dealer has a method of protecting himself which is ample. All he has to do is to secure a certificate from the person from whom he bought.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to fix standards of food products when advisable, and to determine the wholesomeness or unwholesomeness of preservatives and other substances which are or may be added to foods, and to aid him in reaching just decisions in such matters he is authorized to call upon the Director of the Bureau of Chemistry and the chairman of the committee on food standards of the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, and such physicians, not less than five, as the President of the United States shall select, three of whom shall be from the Medical Departments of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine-Hospital Service, and not less than five experts to be selected by the Secretary of Agriculture by reason of their attainments in physiological chemistry, hygiene, commerce, and manufactures, to consider jointly the standards of all food products (within the meaning of this act), and to study the effect of the preservatives and other substances added to food products on the health of the consumer; and when so determined and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture such standards shall guide the chemists of the Department of Agriculture in the performance of the duties imposed upon them by this act. Such standards and determinations, when so fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the use of the chemists of the Department, may be read in evidence in the United States courts, but shall not be considered as determining the adulteration of any articles under section 6 of this act until such standards and determinations are approved in the courts. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture, either directly or through the Director of the Bureau of Chemistry and the chairman of the committee on food standards of the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists and the medical officers and experts before mentioned, to confer with and consult, when so requested, the duly accredited representatives of all industries producing articles for which standards shall be established under the provisions of this act.

The following amendment was recommended by the committee:

In lines 16 and 17 strike out the words "until such standards and determinations are approved in the courts."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 8. That every person who manufactures or produces for shipment and delivers for transportation within the District of Columbia or any Territory, or who manufactures or produces for shipment or delivers for transportation from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, any drug or article of food, and every person who exposes for sale or delivers to a purchaser in the District of Columbia or any Territory any drug or article of food manufactured or produced within said District of Columbia or any Territory, or who exposes for sale or delivers for shipment any drug or article of food received from a State, Territory, or the District of Columbia other than the State, Territory, or the District of Columbia in which he exposes for sale or delivers such drug or article of food, or from any foreign country, shall furnish within business hours, and upon tender and full payment of the selling price, a sample of such drugs or articles of food to any person duly authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture to receive the same and who shall apply to such manufacturer, producer, or vender, or person delivering to a purchaser such drug or article of food, for such sample for such use, in sufficient quantity for the analysis of any such article or articles in his possession. And in the presence of such dealer and an agent of the Department of Agriculture, if so desired by either party, said sample shall be divided into three parts, and each part shall be sealed by the seal of the Department of Agriculture. One part shall be left with the dealer, one delivered to the Director of the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture, and one deposited with the United States district attorney for the district in which the sample is taken. Said manufacturer, producer, or dealer may have the sample left with him analyzed at his own expense, and if the results of said analysis differ from those of the Department of Agriculture the sample in the hands of the district attorney may be analyzed at the expense of the said manufacturer or dealer by a third chemist, who shall be appointed by the president of the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists of the United States; and the analysis shall be conducted, if so desired, in the presence of a chemist of the Department of Agriculture and a chemist representing the dealer, and the whole data obtained shall be laid before the court.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 11, page 11, the following: "Said manufacturer or dealer," and insert in lieu thereof the word "Government."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the bill provides that the Government shall obtain, or the dealer shall furnish to it, a sample of the goods——

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any objection to that amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That this act shall not be construed to interfere with commerce wholly internal in any State, nor with the exercise of their police powers by the several States: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with legislation now in force, enacted either by Congress for the District of Columbia or by the Territorial legislatures for the several Territories, regulating commerce in adulterated foods within the District of Columbia and the several Territories.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I wish to inquire of the gentleman in charge of this bill whether there is not now in the District of Columbia a complete pure-food law, and whether this provision, if left in the bill, would not conflict with that law? Should not this bill go into effect in the District of Columbia if it goes into effect at all?

Mr. HEPBURN. It has been thought by gentlemen who prepared this bill—and they had charge, some of them, I think, of the preparation of the bill now in force regulating this matter in the District of Columbia—that the present District law is ample for the purposes of the District, and they thought that confusion might result if the provisions of this bill should be applied to the District.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Chairman, all through this bill it talks about enacting this law in the District of Columbia. Then when we come to section 10 we say that it shall not apply to this District.

Mr. HEPBURN. That will govern, will it not?

Mr. MANN. Now, if this bill is a good pure-food law, why not enforce it in the District of Columbia? Why except the District of Columbia from these stringent measures?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not think that the District of Columbia is being exempted from stringent measures. It is a stringent law that they now have, and they have become accustomed to its operation. It has been in force three or four years. Therefore it was thought best not to apply this bill to the District.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember that we had before the committee a number of people from the District of Columbia, including some of the grocers of this city, who were insisting upon the passage of this bill to correct the evils which are in existence in the District of Columbia. But this section excepts the District of Columbia from the operation of the bill.

Mr. WANGER. I beg my friend's pardon. This does not seek to except the District of Columbia from the operation of the bill. It only provides that the provisions of this act shall not interfere with the laws which the District now has on this subject. So that all the provisions of this bill will be in full force here except in so far as the same ground is covered by local legislation.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman, of course, understands very well that there is a pure-food law in the District now—a law defining what is and what is not pure food and what is adulterated food—that would conflict with this bill, so that if that law is to continue in force the provisions of this bill would not be in effect in this District. Now, why should we say what shall be done in Pennsylvania and other States in regard to pure food and be afraid to make the same test in the District of Columbia?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with my friend from Illinois exactly, that the real benefit of this bill is to come from making the laws with reference to pure food uniform.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Unquestionably that is the best feature of legislation of this kind. But does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER] explain that fully when he says that the provisions of the District law shall not be operative where its provisions conflict with this bill?

Mr. MANN. That is just exactly the opposite to what it states.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to hear from the gentleman on that point.

Mr. MANN. The provision of this bill is—

That nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with legislation now in force, enacted either by Congress for the District of Columbia or by the Territorial legislatures for the several Territories, regulating commerce in adulterated foods within the District of Columbia and the several Territories.

Now, since there is legislation in force in the District of Columbia defining adulterated food, this act does not go into effect here, because if it went into effect it might interfere with the existing law operative in this District.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That being the case, I agree with the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. It is just as clear as that one and one make two that if this section of the bill be enacted the District of Columbia remains outside the limits of this law, except as to food shipped out of the District of Columbia into some State or Territory.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw the amendment to strike out the last word?

Mr. MANN. Yes, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If there is no amendment pending to make the bill uniform, I move to strike out that portion of the bill which exempts the District of Columbia from the operation of this measure. I move to strike out the proviso extending from line 9 to line 14.

I am for this bill, Mr. Chairman; I think it is a proper bill; but I believe that if this is a good bill, a just bill, a bill that will benefit the people of the country, then it is proper that such legislation should extend uniformly throughout the United States. Such a measure will be a benefit to commerce.

When the shipper gets ready to put up his goods he does not have to find out what is the law of 36 different States to know how to ship them, but he knows what the general law is and he can comply with that law. Now, why should we exempt the District of Columbia and make this exception? It may be the opening door to making other exceptions, and I think the committee by putting in this proviso are injuring a bill that otherwise is excellent, and I therefore move to strike it out.

Mr. HEPBURN. As far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose this bill. I see much in its pages to commend it to the favorable consideration of the House. It is brought here in response to a demand for pure food, and we have the greatest incentive for such legislation, and the highest consideration for it is found in public policy.

The section just read provides:

SEC. 11. That any article of food or drug that is adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of this act, and is transported or being transported from one State to another for sale, or if it be sold or offered for sale in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States, or if it be imported from a foreign country for sale, or if intended for export to a foreign country, shall be liable to be proceeded against in any district court of the United States, within the district where the same is found and seized for confiscation, by a process of libel for condemnation. And if such article is condemned as being adulterated the same shall be disposed of as the said court may direct, and the proceeds thereof, if sold, less the legal costs and charges, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, but such goods shall not be sold in any State contrary to the laws of that State. The proceedings of such libel cases shall conform, as near as may be, to proceedings in admiralty, except that either party may demand trial by jury of any issue of fact joined in such case; and all such proceedings shall be at the suit of and in the name of the United States.

In these provisions we find a salutary and drastic procedure for the enforcement of laws aimed to correct evils and abuses that have grown up, and which are clearly against public policy.

Good and stringent laws should be passed to insure pure articles of food and diet, and no surer or safer remedy can be found than that provided in this section. It enables the Government to run the spurious article down and seize it under judicial process and sell it under the hammer of the United States marshal, and the proceeds of sale, if sold, are turned into the United States Treasury. A wholesome public sentiment asks for this protection. This bill by criminal penalties and by process of condemnation makes the remedy salient and ample.

I commend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] who introduced this bill, and who is managing it upon the floor, for in its operation will be found still further evidence of his ability and wisdom as a legislator.

With recollections of his efforts in conjunction with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] to secure a half million of dollars to strengthen the arm of the Attorney-General in the prosecution of trusts, I see a precedent in the field covered by this bill and in the methods provided for the enforcement of its provisions for a still more important class of legislation.

Legislation against trusts may safely follow along the line and purview of this act, which seeks to eliminate evils clearly against public policy. Let me suggest to the gentleman some legislation against trust operations, so far as it is within the scope of the control by the Government of interstate commerce.

Engrossing, forestalling, and monopolizing products and markets have been against public policy and the common law from the beginning of good law down to the present moment.

When a combination is found to exist that has for its object and purpose the stifling of competition, the arbitrary control of prices and of commodities and of markets, a law based upon the theory of this bill along interstate-commerce lines would be a most wise and efficacious remedy for a growing evil.

A carefully worded definition of a combination of the description mentioned would make it clearly against public policy, and of the kind against which there is such a great demand for legislation. Enact a law that will deny the products of such combinations the rights of interstate commerce.

Under a section like section 11 in this bill seize the inhibited goods and treat them as contraband. In a complaint in the United States court allege that they are the product of such combination or trust and are the subject of interstate commerce, give notice by publication and on proof of the facts alleged order the goods sold by a judgment of the court, and that the proceeds of sale be covered into the United States Treasury. With such a law and its enforcement the fruits can easily be foreseen.

I congratulate the gentleman for in this manner and form promoting the public good. It is a long and a wise step in the right direction. I commend to his consideration another great step in the same direction in the control of the trusts.

With the means in the hands of the Attorney-General to prosecute civilly and criminally; with a law controlling interstate transportation not more drastic than this bill; with additional power given to the Interstate-Commerce Commission, such as it has for years asked Congress to give it, a great measure of relief will be given against the trust evils that have grown up around us.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, in conformity with the last amendment, ought not the words, in line 18, "or that be sold or offered for sale in the District of Columbia and Territories of the United States" be eliminated?

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, I think not. I think the cases are not at all similar. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments back to the House with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3109) for preventing the adulteration, misbranding, and imitation of foods, beverages, candies, drugs, and condiments in the District of Columbia and the Territories and for regulating interstate traffic therein, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not, the Chair will submit them in gross to the House.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and it was read the third time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is it in order now to move to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. This is the proper time to make such a motion, if it is to be made.

Mr. MANN. Then I move to recommit the bill, with instructions to the committee to report in lieu thereof the following, which is a bill introduced by me at the request of the Retail Grocers' Association. It is known as the Mann bill. It has never been reported. I will send it to the desk and ask to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit the bill with instructions to report the following:

A bill (H. R. 9352) to prevent the transportation of deleterious foods and drinks and for the appointment of a dairy and food commissioner.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created the office of dairy and food commissioner of the United States of America.

Within sixty days after this act shall take effect a dairy and food commissioner shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and his term of office shall be four years from the date of his appointment, and until his successor is appointed and qualified, subject to removal at any time by the President. His office shall be at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia. The salary of said dairy and food commissioner shall be $6,000 per annum, and he shall in addition thereto be paid his necessary and actual expenses incurred in the discharge of his duties.

The President shall also have power to appoint an assistant dairy and food commissioner, whenever in his judgment such assistant shall become necessary, and the term of office of said assistant dairy and food commissioner shall be the period of four years, subject to removal at any time by the President, provided the term of office of the assistant dairy and food commissioner shall not extend beyond the term for which the dairy and food commissioner was appointed. His salary shall be $3,500 per annum, and he shall be paid in addition thereto his actual and necessary expenses, and he shall perform such duties as the dairy and food commissioner may from time to time designate.

SEC. 2. That the dairy and food commissioner shall have charge of the enforcement of this act. He shall for this purpose procure, or cause to be procured, the necessary office fixtures, chemical laboratory, and proper appliances, and analyze, or cause to be analyzed, chemically, microscopically, or otherwise, articles of food and drink and articles and compounds intended to be used in the preparation of food and drink offered for sale in the District of Columbia or the Territories of the United States, or found in any State other than that in which they shall have been manufactured or produced, or imported from a foreign country, or intended for export to a foreign country. He is hereby authorized to employ 25 inspectors, who shall be subject to removal by the dairy and food commissioner at any time. The salary of each inspector shall be $1,800 per annum, and they shall be paid in addition thereto the actual and necessary expenses incurred in the discharge of their duties. Said inspectors shall from time to time perform such duties as may be required by the dairy and food commissioner. He is further authorized to employ a chief chemist, whose salary shall be $5,000 per annum, and he shall be paid in addition thereto his actual and necessary expenses. He may also employ not to exceed 5 assistant chemists, who shall perform such duties as the dairy and food commissioner may from time to time require, and the salary of each assistant chemist shall be $2,500 per annum, and they shall be paid in addition thereto their actual and necessary expenses, and all chemists shall be subject to removal at any time by the dairy and food commissioner. The dairy and food commissioner is also authorized to employ such clerks, laborers, and other employees as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. He shall annually report to the Congress the results of the examinations herein provided for, and issue such bulletins announcing said results as he may deem proper or the Congress may require.

SEC. 3. That any article of food or drink, or any article or compound intended to become an ingredient in a composition or preparation for food or drink, containing any substance or substances which are in the quantity used, or intended to be used, deleterious to health, and has been transported from one State to another, and remains in original packages, or is being transported from one State to another for sale, or if it be sold or offered for sale in the District of Columbia, or any of the Territories of the United States, or if it be imported from a foreign country for sale, or if intended for export to a foreign country, shall be liable to be proceeded against in any district court of the United States within the district where the same is found and seized for confiscation by a process of libel for condemnation. And if such article is condemned as being deleterious to health in the quantity used, or intended to be used, the same shall be disposed of as the said court may direct, and the proceeds thereof, if sold, less the legal costs and charges, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States of America; but such goods shall not be sold in any State contrary to the laws of that State. The proceedings of such libel cases shall conform as near as may be to proceedings in admiralty, except that either party may demand trial by jury of any issue of fact joined in such case, and all such proceedings shall be at the suit of and in the name of the United States.

SEC. 4. That any person or persons, company or corporation, engaged or interested in the manufacture of food products may at any time submit to the dairy and food commissioner a formula for the manufacture of any preparation intended for food or drink, with a sample prepared after such formula, and it shall be the duty of said dairy and food commissioner to approve or reject said formula and enter upon the public record of his office, hereinafter provided for, such formula, together with the approval or rejection thereof, and, if rejected, the specific reasons therefor. He shall also enter upon said record the name and address of the person or persons, company or corporation, submitting said formula. When a formula has been approved by the dairy and food commissioner, this act shall not apply to any article transported or introduced, or intended to be introduced, into any State or Territory or the District of Columbia from any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or from any foreign country, by any person or persons, company or corporation, prepared in accordance with said formula so approved by the dairy and food commissioner.

SEC. 5. That the dairy and food commissioner shall keep a book or books which shall be a public record, in which all decisions in relation to food products, which may at any time be made by him, shall be recorded.

SEC. 6. That nothing herein contained shall apply to any article intended to be used as a medicine only.

SEC. 7. That if it shall appear from the examinations provided for in section 2 hereof that any of the provisions of this act have been violated, the dairy and food commissioner shall certify the facts to the proper district attorney, together with such analyses and information as may be in his possession.

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of every district attorney to whom the dairy and food commissioner shall report any violation of this act to cause proceedings to be begun and prosecuted without delay to enforce the penalties herein provided.

SEC. 9. That there is hereby appropriated from any funds in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $150,000 for the purpose of carrying out and enforcing the provisions of this act.

SEC. 10. That the dairy and food commissioner shall fix the salary of all employees whose salaries are not herein specifically fixed, but none of said employees shall receive to exceed $1,500 per annum.

SEC. 11. That this act shall take effect on the 1st day of July next following its passage.

During the reading of the above, Mr. HEPBURN asked unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the further reading of this part of the motion, namely, the bill, be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recommit with instructions.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ADAMSON) there were—ayes 72, noes 21.

Accordingly the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. HEPBURN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SCOTT, for two days on account of important business.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MUSKEGON, MICH.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 6399, which makes no appropriation of any money whatever, but is simply remedial in its character.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for immediate consideration a bill which the Clerk will report to the House.

The bill (S. 6399) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902, as restricts the selection of a site for a post-office and custom-house at Muskegon, Mich., to certain lots in a certain block in said city be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska to explain the necessity for this legislation.

Mr. MERCER. The necessity is this: The bill as passed provided that a donation of land from the citizens of Muskegon should be confined to certain lots. Complications have arisen since then, and the citizens have an option upon other property more desirable even than this for Government purposes, and they desire that this restriction be taken from the measure so that the citizens of that city can donate to the Government a better piece of property than the one provided for in the bill, and the option expires January 1.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman states that this does not increase the cost in any way.

Mr. MERCER. It makes no increase whatever and no appropriation. It is a very meritorious proposition.

I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RECORDING OF DEEDS, ETC., INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5678) providing for the recording of deeds and other conveyances and instruments in writing in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be not read. It is exactly the same bill that passed the House a few days ago, and it is unnecessary to read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the House dispense with the further reading of this bill, as it was read in full a few days ago and passed the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee, striking out the text of the Senate bill and substituting therefor the text of the House bill, was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WILLIAM H. CRAWFORD.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 1563) for the relief of William H. Crawford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, William H. Crawford, of Philadelphia, Pa., an assistant engineer, with rank of lieutenant, junior grade, on the retired list of the Navy, as for disabilities incurred in the line of duty, to take effect upon the date of appointment under this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask why this gentleman is to be legislated into the retired list of the Navy?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I will state that this is to correct a mistake that was made in the Navy Department many years ago, which the Secretary of the Navy has reported should be done, and that he is quite willing to have done. The record of this man, who has served the Government both in the Army and the Navy, and which is contained in the report, shows that it is one of the most creditable in the annals of the War Department. He was suffering from illness incurred in the line of duty when a physician said it would be necessary for him to go to Colorado for a long time in order that his health might be restored.

Under the rules of the Department he could not do that. While the matter was under consideration he wrote to the Department asking if he resigned at a future period would that resignation be accepted. His object in doing this was, in the event that his physician determined he must take this long rest and go to Colorado, that he might resign in order to do so. Judge his surprise at the fact that this inquiry on his part was accepted by the Navy Department as a resignation. He wrote immediately to the Department and asked why that had been done. For some time he could get no answer at all. Finally, after repeated inquiries, he was told that his resignation had been accepted because he tendered it. Upon proper presentation of the facts to Secretary Long, and upon the proof and correspondence, it was found that the facts as alleged by Lieutenant Crawford were perfectly correct.

This man was retired from the service through absolute mistake and through no intention on his part of resigning at that time. His record in the Army, where he served and was wounded, was most brilliant. He was then transferred to the Navy. He was present in many actions and highly commended and promoted, and then, when in a broken condition in health by service in both branches of the military forces of his country, he was retired through this mistake. The Secretary of the Navy expresses himself as willing to correct the mistake, but states that it is not in his power so to do, and it is therefore necessary to come to Congress, and he comes to Congress in good faith, relying upon the patriotic judgment of this body that such an error will not be allowed to prevail, but that he may be placed on the retired list. I ask my colleagues that this injustice shall not be done a gallant officer through mistake, which is admitted on the part of the Department itself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman how long ago did this gentleman resign?

Mr. ADAMS. In 1871.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In 1871; and he has just come to Congress now to get this matter corrected?

Mr. ADAMS. He has just come to Congress.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a matter that ought to go over.

Mr. ADAMS. Just one minute, in answer to the gentleman's objection. He comes to Congress when the Navy Department tells him that it is beyond their power to do anything, and that he must apply to Congress. His efforts all the time have been with the Navy Department, so I do not think the ground of the objection of the gentleman is well taken.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania if I thought that the Navy Department had resigned this man when it was not his fault I would have no objection to his bill.

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I can not conceive how the Navy Department could so put a man out of the service. Let the matter go over and I will look into it.

Mr. ADAMS. The Department admits it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects.

INCLINE RAILWAY ON WEST MOUNTAIN, HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION, ARK.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 15708.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15708) to extend the time for the completion of the incline railway on West Mountain, Hot Springs Reservation.

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the completion of an incline railway upon the West Mountain of the Hot Springs Reservation, as provided by act of Congress approved December 21, 1893, and as extended by act of Congress approved March 26, 1900, be further extended for the term of one year from and after the passage of this act, and that said original act, approved December 21, 1893, be continued in full force and effect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if this is to be positively the last time this time is to be extended?

Mr. CLARK. I think it is.

Mr. LACEY. We have already extended it three different times.

Mr. CLARK. The way I came to have anything to do with it is this: This is a matter that relates to the district of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE], and he asked me to call it up.

Mr. LACEY. He got ashamed of calling it up so often, I suppose; but I think it ought to pass.

Mr. CLARK. That is partly true. Heretofore the time has been extended two or three times and the men failed to build it. The parties want the bill to pass before the holidays, so they can go on with the work.

Mr. LACEY. They are really in earnest this time?

Mr. CLARK. They are in earnest; and everybody interested in the road wants the bill passed, so as to have this incline road built.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chairs hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLARK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented this day to the President of the United States for his approval bills of the following titles:

H. R. 619. An act providing for the recognition of the military service of the officers and enlisted men of the First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery;

H. J. Res. 227. Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1902, on the 18th day of said month; and

H. R. 15140. An act providing that the circuit court of appeals of the fifth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Fort Worth, in the State of Texas, on the first Monday in November in each year.

ISSUANCE OF A PATENT TO COUNTY OF CLALLAM, STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4355) authorizing the issuance of a patent to the county of Clallam, State of Washington.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a patent to issue conveying to the county of Clallam, in the State of Washington, for county purposes, to be expressed in patent, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a parcel of land 220 feet in width off the east side of suburban block No. 26, as shown on official plats of the town site of Port Angeles, in said county, subject to all other valid adverse rights.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to understand something about the effect of this bill and how much it involves.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, the facts concerning the bill are briefly as follows: In 1864 there was a large block of land reserved by the Government in the center of the town known as Port Angeles, the county seat of the county of Clallam. There is a road running through this block of land, leaving a small portion of one block on one side 220 feet in length. The county court-house stands on that portion of the block 220 feet in length, and one side of the roadway. The title is in the Government. The Government has no use for the land and the bill provides that the title to that portion of the Government reservation, 220 feet in length, be vested in that county for county purposes. It has been recommended by the Department of the Interior, and is the unanimous report from the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Let me ask the gentleman what is the value of the property.

Mr. CUSHMAN. It is a little difficult to determine the value. It is in the center, or near the center, of a town of 1,500 people. It is not exceedingly valuable.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CUSHMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the similar House bill (H. R. 4449) will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to. Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 38 minutes) the House adjourned until to-morrow morning at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, submitting detailed statement of expenditures of the contingent fund of the Navy Department—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting application of William O. Bailey for relief from responsibility for loss of certain clothing—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an appropriation for moving expenses and rent of temporary quarters for public offices in Portland, Oreg.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers relating to the claim of Charles Lennig & Co.—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

SENATE.

SATURDAY, December 20, 1902.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday last, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

DISTRICT MUNICIPAL BUILDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia recommending that the limit of cost of the proposed new municipal building for the District of Columbia be increased to $2,500,000; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PATAPSCO RIVER AND BALTIMORE HARBOR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers correcting the estimates of the cost of increasing the depth of the Patapsco River and Baltimore Harbor; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ARIKARA INDIANS OF NORTH DAKOTA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an agreement between the United States and the Arikara and other Indians of North Dakota by which the Indians have ceded to the United States a certain portion of their reservation, and also a draft of a bill to ratify the agreement; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings filed by the court in the cases of William W. Beck and sundry other claimants v. The United States, Joseph B. Parker and sundry other claimants v. The United States, James M. Clayton and sundry other claimants v. The United States, Robert B. Rodney and sundry other claimants v. The United States, Daniel Delehanty and sundry other claimants v. The United States, Walter C. Cowles and sundry other claimants v. The United States, and Edwin Longnecker and sundry other claimants v. The United States, which cases were referred to the Court of Claims by the resolution of the Senate of June 4, 1902, referring the bill (S. 5949) for the relief of certain naval officers and their legal representatives to that court; which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] asked on the last day's session for the printing of a report made by the Committee on Immigration and certain statements made before that committee. Inquiry was made at the time as to the cost, and it was estimated by the Senator that it would be less than $500. The Public Printer now reports that the cost will be at least $1,500.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I ask to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Printing. I based the calculation on a similar amount of printing done at the last session. I submit a concurrent resolution and ask to have it referred to the Committee on Printing, in accordance with the rule.

The concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Immigration 5,000 copies of Senate Report 2119, first session Fifty-seventh Congress, accompanied by additional statements made before the Committee on Immigration on the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to know what the rule is about referring matters to the Committee on Printing. Is it not that if the printing costs more than $500 it must be referred to the Committee on Printing, unless otherwise ordered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Every motion to print, except bills, reports, resolutions, printing for a committee, etc., must be referred to the Committee on Printing, unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senate could order this printing?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senate can not order the printing of additional numbers in excess of $500 without a concurrent resolution.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And that is the trouble?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the trouble.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 1833) providing for the transfer of census records and volumes to the Census Office, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 4355) authorizing the issuance of a patent to the county of Clallam, State of Washington;

A bill (S. 6399) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 57) relating to military badges.

The message also announced that the House had passed with an amendment the bill (S. 5678) providing for record of deeds and other conveyances and instruments of writing in Indian Territory, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. MUDD, and Mr. MEYER of Louisiana managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3109) preventing the adulteration, misbranding, and imitation of foods, beverages, candies, drugs, and condiments in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and for regulating interstate traffic therein, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8130) for the relief of the Miami Indians of Indiana;

A bill (H. R. 13307) for the relief of Valdemar Poulsen;

A bill (H. R. 15006) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statute in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880;

A bill (H. R. 15702) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 8, 1902;

A bill (H. R. 15708) to extend the time for the completion of the incline railway on West Mountain, Hot Springs Reservation;

A bill (H. R. 16021) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 16066) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the use of timber and stone for domestic and industrial purposes in the Indian Territory," approved June 6, 1900.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 832) granting an increase of pension to William Clark;

A bill (H. R. 931) granting a pension to Huldah A. Clark;

ANTHRACITE COAL STRIKE COMMISSION.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15372) to provide for the payment of the expenses and compensation of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission, appointed by the President of the United States at the request of certain coal operators and miners, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, and 9.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said Senate amendment insert the following:

'Commission, who are not officers in the civil or military service of the Government, $4,000 dollars each, and for the employees of the said commission who are not officers or clerks in the civil or military service of the Government, such compensation as may be fixed by the said commission: Provided, That the members of said commission and the assistant recorders shall be allowed the sum of $15 per day each, and the other employees of the commission in the service of the Government, $12 per day each in lieu of traveling and all other expenses."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7 and 8, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the amended paragraph, being lines 9 to 14 inclusive, page 2, of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"A disbursing agent for the Commission is hereby authorized, and the expenses, compensation, and per diem allowance herein provided for shall be paid by him on vouchers certified by the recorder and approved by the chairman of the commission, and the accounting officers of the Treasury shall credit the said disbursing agent with the amounts so certified and paid."

And the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. G. CANNON,
L. F. LIVINGSTON,
S. S. BARNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa what changes are made by the report. I could not fully understand it from the reading. In what particular does it differ from the bill as it was passed by the Senate? In other words, what do the Senate conferees propose to yield?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the original bill as it came to the Senate provided that all compensation, allowances, and so forth, should be in the discretion of the President. The Senate inserted a specific provision prohibiting those persons who are in public office from receiving additional compensation, but allowed them to receive $10 per day in lieu of traveling and all other expenses.

The House conferees agreed to the main point involved in the bill, namely, that the compensation and expenses should be fixed by the bill, but they insisted that the amount allowed by the Senate was not enough, as it included all expenses. They insisted upon $15 a day in lieu of the amount inserted by the Senate, and, the Senate conferees yielding to this request, the compensation is, as reported originally to the Senate, an allowance of $15 a day to the commission for expenses, and to the other employees $12 per day. That is the substance of the report.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, when I offered the amendment in the Senate the principal and main object, at least that which I thought most important, was to fix some sum by Congress rather than to leave it to the President to determine the compensation of these commissioners. I believed that that practice, which had to some extent prevailed heretofore, was a bad one, and that Congress ought always to retain and exercise the power of determining how much salary shall be paid.

Since that discussion was had here the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] in a speech the other day asserted upon the floor of the Senate, and I have not seen it denied, that the members of the canal commission, known as Admiral Walker's Commission, which went to Nicaragua under a similar provision, leaving it alone to the President to determine their compensation, had been paid at the rate of a thousand dollars a month each for the period of twenty-nine months, when they were absent from the country only some two or three months, I think, during that time. That itself should be sufficient to show that no such power should ever be given to the President of the United States or any other executive officer. I say, Mr. President, that that is an exorbitant salary; it is an unreasonable salary, and it is such a one as ought never to have been fixed by any Executive, whether it be the present one or any other.

Therefore, the Senate took the view that Congress should determine the amount, and it fixed the sum at $4,000 for these commissioners and $10 a day for expenses. I thought that was too much, and I think so yet. I thought $4,000, without regard to the time the commissioners may serve, was an unreasonable sum, that is, providing the service did not extend for the period of a year or some such period. I thought also that $10 a day for expenses was more than would be used for that purpose, and that it was indirectly adding to the salary under the guise and head of allowing them for expenses.

Now, the Senator from Iowa says that the Senate conferees have yielded that point and allowed $15 a day for expenses. I do not think there is a member of this body who does not know that their expenses will not amount to $15 a day. It is not possible that in the locality where they are they will be at so much expense.

While I am glad that the House conferees have yielded the position of the House on the proposition, I regret that the conferees on the part of the Senate saw proper to yield and agree, and I am surprised that the House should demand that $15 a day shall be paid in the way of expenses, when we all know that the expenses will not amount to that sum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the conference report?

The report was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Worcester, Mass., praying for the appointment of a permanent tariff commission; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BURROWS presented petitions of the Grand Rapids Credit Men's Association, of Grand Rapids; of Charles F. McKenzie, of Battlecreek; of Ralph Stone, of Detroit; of Griffith Ogden Ellis, of Detroit; of the Acme White Lead and Color Works, of Detroit; of Morley Brothers, of Saginaw; of Park, Davis & Co., of Detroit; of Noach & Gorenflo, of Detroit; of the Babbitt & Graham Co., of Detroit, and of the Elysian Manufacturing Company, of Detroit, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the present bankruptcy law; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of Cigar Makers' Local Union No. 208, of Kalamazoo; of the Saginaw Specialty Company, of Saginaw; of Henry C. Ward, of Pontiac; of the G. J. Johnson Cigar Company, of Grand Rapids; of Cigar Makers' Local Union No. 457, of Benton Harbor; of A. D. Hill, of St. Joseph; of Cigar Makers' Local Union No. 45, of Grand Rapids; of Cigar Makers' Local Union No. 330, of Alpena; of Cigar Makers' Local Union No. 393, of Cadillac; of Cigar Makers' Local Union No. 452, of Petoskey; of Cigar Makers' Local Union No. 130, of Saginaw, and of Cigar Makers' Local Union No. 314, of Jackson, all in the State of Michigan, praying for a reduction of the duty on Cuban tobacco; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. QUARLES presented the petition of John R. Drake and 9 other citizens of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation to amend the internal-revenue laws relative to a reduction of the tax on distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of L. R. Hurd, of Duluth, Minn., and a petition of the Plankinton Packing Company, of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the ratification of the proposed commercial treaty between the United States and Newfoundland; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PERKINS presented petitions of the Azusa-Covina-Glendora Fruit Exchange, of Azusa; of the Board of Trade of Whittier; of the Fruit Exchange of Covina; of the San Dimas Citrus Union, of San Dimas; of the Covina Orange Growers' Association, of Covina, and of the San Dimas Lemon Association, of San Dimas, all in the State of California, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a more efficient protection from fire of the forest reservations of southern California; which were referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to encourage the sale and exportation of articles of domestic manufacture; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petitions of Charles Peacock and 45 other citizens of Newhall, of H. J. Dierks and 84 other citizens of Reinbeck, and of sundry citizens of Iowa, all in the State of Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a reduction of the tax on distilled spirits; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Clinton, Iowa, and a petition of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Clinton, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of sundry citizens of Missouri, praying for the passage of House bills Nos. 178 and 179, relative to a reduction of the tax on distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL. In support of the bill (S. 2974) granting an increase of pension to Samuel J. Boyer I present the affidavits of Samuel J. Boyer and Dr. W. E. Dawson, and I ask that they be referred to the Committee on Pensions. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that this pensioner is now totally blind, and the evidence shows it conclusively.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HOLLAND SUBMARINE BOATS.

Mr. STEWART. I present a report of the Army board to the Secretary of War on the value of the Holland submarine boats for harbor and coast defenses. I think it is a very important document relating to that subject, and as it is very short I move that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

STUDY OF LEGISLATIVE QUESTIONS.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I present a paper, being an outline for the study of legislative and other public questions, prepared by the International Reform Bureau, of Washington, D. C. The paper will make a pamphlet of about 32 pages, and I move that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

POST EXCHANGE AND ARMY CANTEEN.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have some interesting papers relating to the post exchange and Army canteen, which I ask may be printed as a document. I also ask that 1,000 additional copies be printed. It is a short paper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that certain papers relating to the post exchange and Army canteen be printed as a document, and that 1,000 additional copies be printed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S.6438) to provide for the modification of the project for the improvement of Bridgeport Harbor, Bridgeport, Conn., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

WILLIAM S. BARKER.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15480) granting an increase of pension to William S. Barker, to report it favorably without amendment, and as it is an urgent case I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of William S. Barker, late captain Companies E and K, Fourth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANNIE M. KIMBERLY.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, two days ago the Senate passed a bill (S. 3708) granting an increase of pension to Nannie M. Kimberly, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Kimberly. Since then a House bill has come here identical in terms with the Senate bill. I report back the House bill favorably, and ask that it be considered.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 11093) granting an increase of pension to Nannie M. Kimberly; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Nannie M. Kimberly, widow of Lewis A. Kimberly, late rear-admiral, United States Navy, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the Senator to state that a Senate bill has passed the Senate and gone to the House. Ought it not to be recalled?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I think it would be better to recall it. I ask that an order be entered for the recall of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the House be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3708) granting an increase of pension to Nannie M. Kimberly.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

SOUTHWEST LOUISIANA RICE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. MALLORY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15605) to authorize and empower the Southwest Louisiana Rice Growers' Association, of the State of Louisiana, to construct a lock or locks and a dam in Bayou Vermilion, in the State of Louisiana, to report it favorably without amendment, and submit a report thereon. At the request of citizens of Louisiana, I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill, and I shall make the same request when I report a similar bill after this one is disposed of.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICE IRRIGATION AND IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. MALLORY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15606) to authorize and empower the Rice Irrigation and Improvement Association, of the State of Louisiana, to construct a lock or locks and a dam in Mermentau River, in the State of Louisiana, to report it without amendment, and submit a report thereon. As I stated, at the request of citizens of Louisiana I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS AT MONTGOMERY, ALA.

Mr. PETTUS. By authority of the Committee on the Judiciary, I reported back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 6333) to divest out of the United States all its right, title, and interest of, in, and to certain real estate situated at and near the city of Montgomery, State of Alabama, and to vest the same in the Southern Cotton Oil Company, Bessie R. Maultsby, James S. Pinckard, trustee, M. V. B. Chase, and Edwin Ferris.

This bill, if the Senate will allow me to explain it in a word, is a compromise of suits brought by the United States and the State of Alabama. In those suits the United States bought some land at or near Montgomery. The suits were compromised by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General, and accompanying the bill is a statement from the Attorney-General and a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending that this particular bill be passed. I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS. Accompanying the bill are documents stating how this compromise was effected, and also the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury on this identical bill and the opinion of the Attorney-General on this identical bill. I ask that the Secretary be instructed to send those papers along with the bill to the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will go, without any instruction, to the House.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBOR OF BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Among the last reports made before the bill just acted on were two bills with reference to a change or modification of the plan for the improvement of harbors in New Haven and in Bridgeport. We have been acting on similar matters this morning, and it is very important that those bills should be acted on so that they may be in the House at the opening of Congress after the holiday recess. It will take only a moment. The bills are short, and I ask that they may be acted on now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 6438) to provide for the modification of the project for the improvement of Bridgeport Harbor, Bridgeport, Conn.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Has morning business been concluded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not. Reports of committees are still in order, and this bill has just been reported.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will not object to the consideration of these reports, but I hope that morning business will be proceeded with after these bills are disposed of.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This is morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill has just been reported from the Committee on Commerce. Is there objection to its consideration?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBOR OF NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I now ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 6504) to provide for the modification of the project for the improvement of the harbor of New Haven, Conn.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 8, to strike out "1901" and insert "1902."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF SHOAL IN NEW YORK HARBOR.

Mr. NELSON. On behalf of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], I report from the Committee on Commerce a joint resolution, and submit a written report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. R. 145) to amend a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the removal of shoal in North River of New York Harbor," approved July 1, 1902, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the removal of shoal in North River of New York Harbor," approved July 1, 1902, be and the same is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be removed the rock or obstruction in North River of New York Harbor near Pier No. 1 to a depth of 40 feet at mean low tide; and that for such removal he is hereby authorized to divert a sum not exceeding $45,000 from the amounts heretofore appropriated or authorized for the improvement of Ambrose Channel, in said harbor."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVENUE CUTTER FOR MAINE COAST.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6542) to provide for the construction of a revenue cutter of the first class for service on the coast of Maine, to report it without amendment and to submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $200,000 for the construction, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, of a steam revenue cutter of the first class for service on the coast of Maine.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted this day by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Immigration 5,000 copies of Senate Report 2119, first session Fifty-seventh Congress, accompanied by additional statements made before the Committee on Immigration on the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

Subsequently, on motion of Mr. PENROSE, the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to was reconsidered, and the concurrent resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. PENROSE, it was Ordered, That Senate Report 2119, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, together with hearings before the Committee on Immigration in the first and second sessions of the Fifty-seventh Congress, be printed as a document, and that so many extra copies be printed as will not exceed in cost the sum of $500.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 16th instant approved and signed the act (S. 215) regulating the duties and fixing the compensation of the customs inspectors at the port of New York.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 17th instant approved and signed the act (S. 6070) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, at a point to be selected, within 5 miles north of the Kaw River, in Wyandotte County, State of Kansas, and Clay County, State of Missouri, and to make the same a post route.

The message further announced that the President of the United States had on the 18th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 4067) granting an increase of pension to Julia L. Gordon; and

An act (S. 4204) relating to grants of land to the Territory and State of Washington for school purposes.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 19th instant approved and signed the act (S. 4572) to grant an honorable discharge from the military service to Charles H. Hawley.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 6665) authorizing the President of the United States to remove the duty on coal coming into the United States from the Dominion of Canada when the Dominion of Canada removes the duty on coal coming from the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6666) for the relief of Joseph M. Simms, captain, United States Revenue-Cutter Service (retired); which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6667) granting an increase of pension to John Lindt;

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 6673) to amend "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 6674) to correct the naval record of Michael J. Kenefick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 6675) granting an increase of pension to Levi Dove; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6676) granting an increase of pension to S. N. Weeks; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6677) granting a pension to Sarah D. Crabb; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6678) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Withrow; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WARREN introduced a bill (S. 6679) granting to railroads and water companies the right of way through public lands and reservations of the United States for reservoirs and pipe lines; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DUBOIS introduced a bill (S. 6680) authorizing the President to reinstate Alexander G. Pendleton, jr., as a cadet in the United States Military Academy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 6681) for the relief of Rudolf Herbst; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MILLARD introduced a bill (S. 6682) granting an increase of pension to James W. Tucker; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURROWS (for Mr. ALGER) introduced a bill (S. 6683) to enable the State of Michigan to utilize certain dock facilities at the Straits of Mackinac, and to aid in providing for a memorial monument adjacent thereto; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Coast and Insular Survey.

Mr. STEWART (by request) introduced a bill (S. 6684) for the payment to Charles E. Dailey of the balance due him as United States land officer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 6685) to provide for furnishing Yearbooks of the Department of Agriculture to the agricultural colleges of the several States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. McCOMAS introduced a bill (S. 6686) granting an increase of pension to Elvira M. Cooper; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6687) for the relief of the legal representatives of William P. Custis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. NELSON (for Mr. DEPEW) introduced a bill (S. 6688) for the addition of protected torpedo boats to the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 6689) for the protection of wild animals, birds, and fish in the forest reserves of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6690) for the relief of the Alaska Commercial Company, the North American Transportation and Trading Company, and the Alaska Exploration Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 6691) granting a pension to Mary H. Cornell; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. To accompany the bill I present the petition for pension of Mary H. Cornell, widow of Horatio N. Cornell, late sailor in the United States Navy, duly verified by sundry affidavits, and also an abstract of the evidence in the case. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 6692) for the relief of William G. Tidwell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AKRON, STERLING AND NORTHERN RAILROAD.

Mr. MILLARD. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be read the first and second time and put upon its passage, if there be no objection.

The joint resolution (S. R. 146) to extend the time for construction of the Akron, Sterling and Northern Railroad, in Alaska, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the time within which the Akron, Sterling and Northern Railroad Company is authorized to construct its line of railroad from the head of Valdex Bay, in the Territory of Alaska; thence extending up Lowe River 12 miles to Keystone Canyon; thence for a distance of 3 miles through said canyon, on the west side thereof; thence through Dutch Valley a distance of 4 miles; thence 13 miles along the benches on the west side of Lowe River drainage, through Thompson Pass, as definitely located by said named company, be, and the same is hereby, extended for two years from and after the passage of this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution may receive present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. I have no desire to interfere with the present consideration of the joint resolution, but I ask if the company referred to is an American company and chartered under the laws of the United States?

Mr. MILLARD. There are a great many Americans connected with the company. They are all Americans, I think, who are the promoters and builders of the railroad.

Mr. LODGE. Is the company an American company and operated under an American charter?

Mr. MILLARD. I think so; but I can not say positively as to that.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me that is a very important matter, on account of the claims which have been made by Great Britain and Canada in that region.

Mr. MILLARD. The joint resolution only came to me this morning and I am not familiar with the facts regarding it. If there be any objection to it, I should like to have it referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What is the resolution? I did not hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be again read to the Senate.

The Secretary again read the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Has the joint resolution come from a committee? Practically it is a bill, and it ought to have the report of a committee.

Mr. MILLARD. I have just introduced the joint resolution.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It ought to be referred to a committee.

Mr. MILLARD. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment relative to the compensation of the registers and receivers of the United States land offices in the State of Kansas, upon whom were imposed the duties and responsibilities of making sale and disposal of the Osage Indian lands, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TERRITORIAL ORGANIC ACTS.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 2,500 additional copies of Senate Document No. 148, first session Fifty-sixth Congress, being a compilation of the organic acts for the Territories of the United States, with notes thereon, and that there be added to this compilation the organic acts for Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I inquire of the Senator from Ohio if the resolution includes the organic acts of all the Territories from the beginning?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; from the beginning. They were all printed in one document some two or three years ago and this simply adds those that have been since enacted. An estimate has been made by the Public Printer that the printing will cost less than $500.

The resolution was agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION AND SALE OF ANTHRACITE COAL.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I present a resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas on October 4, 1902, a sworn statement or petition was filed with the Attorney-General of the United States by William R. Hearst, charging the existence of an illegal combination or conspiracy among railroads therein named engaged in interstate commerce, the tendency and purpose of which was the establishment of a monopoly in the business of transporting and selling anthracite coal, and in connection with said petition a request was made for permission to present evidence establishing the existence of such a combination;

Whereas said petition was referred to the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York with instructions to receive the evidence proffered and report the same to the Department of Justice;

Whereas a protracted interval has elapsed since the filing of the said petition and the submission of such evidence:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the evidence presented by said petitioner, together with the report thereon by said United States district attorney.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LODGE. The resolution had better go over, Mr. President.

Mr. CULLOM. It is a long resolution and it embodies a number of statements. I think it had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rule.

STATUES OF CHARLES CARROLL AND JOHN HANSON.

Mr. McCOMAS. I offer a resolution, and ask that the letter which I send to the desk, addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives by the governor of Maryland, may be read before the resolution is read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland asks that the letter of the governor of Maryland referred to by him may be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Annapolis, Md., December 15, 1902.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to inform you that, in acceptance of the invitation contained in section 1814 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the general assembly of Maryland, by chapter 311 of the acts of 1898, made an appropriation to procure statues of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and John Hanson, President of the Continental Congress of 1781 and 1782, to be placed in Statuary Hall, in the Capitol, at Washington, D. C.

By authority of the act of the general assembly of Maryland, the governor appointed John Lee Carroll, Douglas H. Thomas, Thomas J. Shryock, Fabian Franklin, and Richard K. Cross to constitute a commission to procure and have the statues erected.

I am informed by the commissioners that the statues were made by Mr. Richard E. Brooks, of Boston; that they are completed and have been placed in position, and are now ready to be presented to Congress.

As governor of the State of Maryland, therefore, I have the honor to present to the Government of the United States the statues of the distinguished statesmen named.

Very respectfully, JOHN WALTER SMITH,
Governor of Maryland.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Maryland will now be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance from the State of Maryland of the statues of Charles Carroll of Carrollton and of John Hanson, erected in Statuary Hall in the Capitol, be made the special order for Saturday, January 31, 1903, after the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that he modify the resolution so as to make the time 2 o'clock.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa to make the time 2 o'clock p. m. on Saturday, January 31, 1903.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so modified. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

SAFETY APPLIANCES ON RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate, under the rule, a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PATTERSON on the 17th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of all information and reports furnished by its inspectors showing the condition and defects of train or power brakes, and the operation of trains thereby, as required by the act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads, approved March 2, 1893, from May 10 to December 31, 1902, on the following-named railroads and their leased lines: Baltimore and Ohio, Chesapeake and Ohio, Cincinnati, New Orleans and Texas Pacific, Erie, Illinois Central, Lehigh Valley, Louisville and Nashville, Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, New York, New Haven and Hartford, Norfolk and Western, Pennsylvania, Queen and Crescent, Southern, and Southern Pacific.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection whatever to the resolution; but I wish to inquire whether technically we have the right to give directions to the Interstate Commerce Commission, or whether that is not in substance a bureau under the authority of the Department of the Interior, so that the resolution should be addressed to the Secretary of the Interior? The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] perhaps will know as to that.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I rose for the purpose of stating that the Interstate Commerce Commission is an independent bureau. For a time after the law creating the Commission was passed it was attached to the Department of the Interior, but was subsequently made an independent establishment, and therefore I think it is entirely proper to make the inquiry direct.

Mr. HOAR. We undoubtedly have authority under the practice which has existed from the beginning of the Government, and which, I believe, so far as the Treasury is concerned, is enacted by the law which established that Department, to require the heads of all of the Departments of the Government to furnish us such facts as are on their records.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose we have the right to make the inquiry in this way.

Mr. HOAR. I make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

A bill (H. R. 15708) to extend the time for the completion of the incline railway on West Mountain, Hot Springs Reservation; and

A bill (H. R. 16066) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the use of timber and stone for domestic and industrial purposes in the Indian Territory," approved June 6, 1900.

The bill (H. R. 3109) for preventing the adulteration, misbranding, and imitation of foods, beverages, candies, drugs, and condiments in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and for regulating interstate traffic therein, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

The bill (H. R. 8130) for the relief of the Miami Indians of Indiana was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 13307) for the relief of Valdemar Poulsen was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

The bill (H. R. 15006) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statute in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 15702) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 8, 1902, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

The bill (H. R. 16021) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SUPPRESSION OF BUBONIC PLAGUE IN HAWAII.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6216) to pay in part judgments rendered under an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Hawaii for property destroyed in suppressing the bubonic plague in said Territory in 1899 and 1900, and authorizing the Territory of Hawaii to issue bonds for the payment of the remaining claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read to the Senate for its information.

Mr. MORGAN. Is the regular morning business completed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is completed.

Mr. MORGAN. I gave notice on Wednesday last that I would ask the Senate at this time to allow me to submit some remarks on a bill on the Calendar. It will not take a great while, and then I will be out of the way and Senators can proceed with their matters.

Mr. FORAKER. I should be very much gratified if the Senator would allow this bill, which is a very short one, to be now considered. It will take but a moment. It is a bill providing relief for Hawaii on account of the bubonic plague, and is a matter of very great importance.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no right to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read to the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to appropriate $1,000,000 to pay in part the judgments rendered under an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Hawaii by the fire claims commission of that Territory for property destroyed in the suppression of the bubonic plague in the Territory in the years 1899 and 1900.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL SERVICES ON THE LATE SENATOR JAMES M'MILLAN.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Friday, the 30th day of January next, I will ask the courtesy of the Senate, after the conclusion of the regular routine morning business, to consider resolutions commemorative of the life and character of my late colleague in the Senate, Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTOR RICHMOND P. HOBSON, U. S. NAVY.

Mr. MORGAN. I now ask leave to take the floor to proceed with the remarks of which I gave notice.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me to call up a little bill in which he is perhaps more interested than I am? It will take but a moment, I think.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3983) authorizing the transfer to the retired list of the Navy of Naval Constructor Richmond P. Hobson, United States Navy. I will say in reference to this bill that on a former occasion I think two Senators mildly objected to it, but they have both withdrawn their objections, and I am very confident there will be no objections to its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BACON. I think, Mr. President, that the bill ought to be considered when the Senate is somewhat full. I do not know anything about it myself. I do not know that I shall refuse to to vote for the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that it is a unanimous report from the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] wanted it held up a little time ago, but they have both said to me that they are quite content to have the bill pass. I know pretty intimately about this case, and I am very sure this man ought to be placed on the retired list. I feel confident of that. I hope the Senator from Georgia will not object to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask whether there has been a medical examination and report as to Mr. Hobson's physical condition?

Mr. GALLINGER. There has been, and it is included in the report.

Mr. MALLORY. Does the report recommend his retirement?

Mr. GALLINGER. It does.

Mr. MALLORY. On account of his eyes?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; on account of his eyes. He has a very serious eye trouble.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will consent that the bill may go over for the present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I do not want to be put in the position of objecting to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no power to prevent it from going over if the Senator from Georgia objects.

Mr. BACON. I do not want the Senator to put it on that ground. I do not want to be put in the position of objecting. I do not know that I shall object, but there is not a single member of the committee on this side of the Chamber who is present. The Senator knows what the total number present may be.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator need not argue it with me. Of course I am quite willing that the bill shall go over.

Mr. BACON. I do not want to appear as objecting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15372) to provide for the payment of the expenses and compensation of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission appointed by the President of the United States at the request of certain coal operators and miners.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 1893) granting an increase of pension to Cornelia A. Dennis;

A bill (H. R. 2492) to reimburse the Mellert Foundry and Machine Company for money retained by the United States for failure to complete a contract within a specified time;

A bill (H. R. 4471) for the relief of James M. Chism;

A bill (H. R. 13449) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. E. Scott;

A bill (H. R. 14801) to make Wilmington, N. C., a port through which merchandise may be imported for transportation without appraisement;

A bill (H. R. 15372) to provide for the payment of the expenses and compensation of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission appointed by the President of the United States at the request of certain coal operators and miners;

A bill (H. R. 15593) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 16057) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate at this time on the bill (S. 451) to provide for acquiring the rights necessary for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. I ask that the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill as reported by Mr. MORGAN from the Committee on Introceanic Canals, with amendments. As proposed to be amended, the bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to conclude agreements with the Republics of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, or either of them, for and in behalf of the United States, for the acquiring and full control of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary on which to locate, construct, maintain, govern, regulate, police, and protect a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft, from a point near Greytown, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean; and such sum as may be necessary to secure such necessary rights, privileges, and control is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the bill read at the desk is the first one reported to the Senate at the present Congress on the subject of the isthmian canal.

It is copied, with slight changes, from the first section of the House bill known as the Hepburn bill, from which is also copied the contracts made by President McKinley in December, 1900, with Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

Those contracts are identical in terms and dates, so that it is only necessary to read one of them, as follows:

It is agreed between the two Governments that when the President of the United States is authorized by law to acquire control of such portion of the territory now belonging to Costa Rica as may be desirable and necessary on which to construct and protect a canal of depth and capacity sufficient for the passage of vessels of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use from a point near San Juan del Norte, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean, they mutually engage to enter into negotiations with each other to settle the plan and the agreements, in detail, found necessary to accomplish the construction and to provide for the ownership and control of the proposed canal.

As preliminary to such future negotiations it is forthwith agreed that the course of said canal and the terminals thereof shall be the same that were stated in a treaty signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and Great Britain on February 5, 1900, and now pending in the Senate of the United States for confirmation, and that the provisions of the same shall be adhered to by the United States and Costa Rica.

This contract contains three provisions, all of which are to become obligatory on Costa Rica and Nicaragua when Congress has authorized the President to acquire the canal rights and privileges therein described. Since the enactment of the law of June 28, 1902, both Nicaragua and Costa Rica have signified their consent to the full and perfect obligation of these contracts, notwithstanding the alternative preference given in that law to the selection of the Panama route, when Congress has given the requisite authority to the President to acquire the rights and privileges defined in these contracts.

Besides the alternative and conditional preference given to the Panama route in the law of the 28th of June, 1902, that act provides that in the event the Panama route is not selected and acquired by treaty with Colombia the President is authorized to acquire the rights and privileges defined therein from Nicaragua and Costa Rica by treaty.

In the case of the selection of either route that law requires that the title to the property shall be clear and satisfactory.

The Hay-Pauncefote treaty, ratified on the 16th day of December, 1901, also defines the canal rights that the United States may acquire from Nicaragua and Costa Rica in lieu of or in substitution of the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850, to which Nicaragua and Costa Rica have agreed to adhere, as follows:

ARTICLE II.

It is agreed that the canal may be constructed under the auspices of the Government of the United States either directly at its own cost, or by gift or loan of money to individuals or corporations, or through subscription to or purchase of stock or shares, and that, subject to the provisions of the present treaty, the said Government shall have and enjoy all the rights incident to such construction, as well as the exclusive right of providing for the regulation and management of the canal.

This treaty, referred to in the agreements of December 1, 1900, defines fully the rights granted to the United States. Waiving the discussion of the question (which seems to be reserved by Lord Lansdowne in his correspondence with Mr. Hay) whether that treaty applies to a canal through Colombian territory, and assuming that it does so apply, it gives to the United States the exclusive right, as far as Great Britain is concerned, to own and control a canal, in perpetuity, through Nicaragua and Costa Rica. And those States consent that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, as it was ratified, applies to the contracts made with each of them by Mr. McKinley December 1, 1900. So that nothing remains to be done to give those contracts perfect obligation but for Congress to authorize the President to acquire the rights which they clearly and specifically define.

The definition of those rights so made includes completely all the rights mentioned in the act of June 28, 1902, and fills the full measure of our wishes.

It was a wise and courageous act of the highest statesmanship on the part of President McKinley to enter into those solemn engagements with Costa Rica and Nicaragua at the time and under the conditions that then prevailed.

He proposed those agreements to those States, and they accepted them when the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty was pending in the Senate and when amendments were pending, under discussion, that caused its final rejection by Great Britain.

Mr. McKinley knew that he had the support of the House of Representatives, for it had passed the first of the Hepburn bills by a vote of 223 to 26, from which these agreements were copied, as to their substantive and important parts, and he knew that he had the support of a majority of the Senate, but was not assured of the support of a two-thirds majority of that body on the ratification of a treaty. Throwing himself with entire confidence upon the legislative powers of Congress, he promised Nicaragua and Costa Rica that he would locate the canal between Greytown and Brito whenever Congress authorized him to acquire the exclusive right to construct a canal on the Nicaraguan route.

He did not agree that the canal should be constructed by the United States. Those States were willing to rely upon the will of our people, oftentimes expressed, to supply the means to construct the canal. Neither was payment for the necessary concessions made a feature of those contracts, but, when Congress should give the requisite authority to the President to acquire these controlling rights, those contracts provided that they should become complete and immediately obligatory as to the location and definition of the canal route, and as to the exclusive right of the United States to construct, own, and control the canal in perpetuity.

The adherence to the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty settled all that. The agreement became complete and perfect, and nothing remained to be done to require the further consent or action of Congress. The adjustment of the details of the work on the canal, in its location and construction, and as to its control and management, was left to be provided for by treaty, not by act of Congress. A different department of our Government was to consider these details after Congress had settled the broad basis of agreement by legislative act.

No wiser conception was ever formed in the mind of a President than this plan to prevent any jealousies between the House and the Senate after the House had expressed its will, by a very great majority, in the very terms that President McKinley wrote into these agreements.

Nor was a final act of wise and determined statesmanship ever resolved upon in the will of a President of the United States with deeper reflection or more courageously. These agreements, quietly but firmly, overrode the threatening barriers of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and left them a wreck. They defied those barriers and bound us in honor to Nicaragua and Costa Rica, that they should no longer be permitted to impede the will of the American people to execute and enforce the exclusive right to construct, own, control, and regulate an isthmian canal, in perpetuity, through Costa Rica and Nicaragua, with the consent of those sovereign States.

Why this masterful act of this great man has been discarded and trodden under foot with contempt by men who profess friendship for his memory and have given public pledges to execute his policies is not a question for a Democrat to solve, for they have upheld his splendid statesmanship in this demonstration of his wisdom and courage with one accord. There are some mind readers, or inspired spirit rappers, who have told us that President McKinley did not mean what he said in those carefully framed and solemn intruments, under signature and seal.

I must excuse myself from thus defaming so honorable a name by charging him with dealing idly with a subject of such vast importance. I have dwelt on these agreements, which only failed when President McKinley was called to a higher station, because the time may be near at hand when they will be the only means of saving to the American people the highway that President McKinley bequeathed to them as a rich legacy to his country in that wonderful last public utterance at Buffalo, N. Y.

I now speak of a painful apprehension, growing out of existing conditions, that threaten the loss of an isthmian canal or its indefinite delay, and I will speak frankly and boldly, as the occasion requires.

An appropriation has been made of $180,000,000 for constructing a canal and an indefinite sum for the purchase of concessions.

If this appropriation is not used, in whole or in part, by June 28, 1904, it will be stiffly urged by the opponents of any canal that the law covers the appropriation into the Treasury.

The next Congress will meet in December, 1903, in regular session, within seven months of the time when it will be alleged that this great appropriation is dead, and that the canal has been lost. Is there a man in Congress who is so inexperienced as to doubt the power of a minority to defeat the renewal of the appropriation in the short period of seven months? I need only allude to this danger to arouse the apprehensions of the friends of an isthmian canal as to its future certainty and its magnitude. This difficulty might possibly be provided against by an extra session of Congress.

But another difficulty has already arisen, against which we can make no possible provision. Under her constitution Colombia can not ratify a treaty with the United States otherwise than by act of Congress. She has no Congress in commission, and can not have until a new Congress is elected. No Congress has assembled in Colombia since November, 1899, and none has existed there. War has paralyzed civil government, and the whole Republic has been in a state of siege.

I go further, but it is not necessary in the views I am now presenting, and I insist that, under the law of May 28, 1878, which forbids the transfer of the original canal concession made to the old Panama Canal Company, and under the constitution, which forbids the President of Colombia from making any contract that affects the treasury without authority from Congress first obtained, no negotiator appointed by that President or dictator can sell a concession to the United States, because he has no powers to enter into such a negotiation. Such an act is in violation of the law and the constitution of Colombia and is derogatory to the character of our Government. I mention this because the question must necessarily arise and will at least cause delay. It will also grow like a cancer in the hearts of the people of Colombia.

If, however, a treaty is signed and submitted to the Senate, and if we ratify it before this Congress expires, it will then be sent out, like the raven from Noah's ark, to find a place where it can rest from its flight; with a strong probability that it will never return. In the meantime the offer of sale made to us by the New Panama Canal Company will expire by its own limitation. It is only open until March 4, 1903.

If a Congress can be elected and assembled at Bogota, will it be a representative body of the Church party and of the Liberals, after a fair election, met in the fraternal spirit of reconciliation, or will it be a partisan Congress, the creature of the dominant faction, selected by dictatorial power, assembled at an extra session by the command of the dictator, Murroquin, who now holds the supreme power or the semblance of it, and enforces his sway over the people of Colombia by the sword and the bayonet?

Under the constitution of Colombia, Title VI, article 68, a regular session of Congress can not be held until July 20, 1903. We should know that there is a legitimate Congress, and that it really represents the will of the people of Colombia, before we send a treaty to it for ratification, after the Senate of the United States has acted upon it, or before it has acted. We should know whether the Panama Canal Company has furnished the money to pay the expenses of that Congress, either out of the three or more million dollars now in its treasury or by a pledge of the $40,000,000 they are to get from the United States.

Colombia has no money to pay the expenses of a Congress. I have evidence to show that one American dollar is worth $90 and from that up to $130 in Colombian currency at the present time. They must have help, or else they can not assemble a Congress, even by military compulsion.

If we submit a treaty to the consideration of any Congress that can now be assembled in Colombia, the risk of its being hereafter assailed by any new government that may come into existence is extreme.

These "hereafters" in Colombia occur at intervals of about two years, as periodically and almost with the regularity of the seasons.

Before the passage of the law of June 28, 1902, Colombia, through her minister, Señor Silva, submitted her proposition for a treaty with the United States, setting forth her full demands for the concessionary privileges we were seeking. In that act these propositions were rejected in the following words, which are utterly repugnant to that treaty. That act provides:

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby authorized to acquire from the Republic of Colombia, for and on behalf of the United States, upon such terms as he may deem reasonable, perpetual control of a strip of land, the territory of the Republic of Columbia, not less than six miles in width, extending from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean, and the right to use and dispose of the waters thereon, and to excavate, construct, and to perpetually maintain, operate, and protect thereon a canal, of such depth and capacity as will afford convenient passage of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean, which control shall include the right to perpetually maintain and operate the Panama Railroad, if the ownership thereof, or a controlling interest therein, shall have been acquired by the United States, and also jurisdiction over said strip and the ports at the ends thereof to make such police and sanitary rules and regulations as shall be necessary to preserve order and preserve the public health thereon, and to establish such judicial tribunals as may be agreed upon thereon as may be necessary to enforce such rules and regulations.

The President may acquire such additional territory and rights from Colombia as in his judgment will facilitate the general purpose hereof.

This action of Congress was so utterly different from the proposition of Colombia that Señor Silva was recalled and Señor Concha was sent as minister to the United States from Colombia.

On his return to Colombia, through New York, Señor Silva declared, in a published interview, that the New Panama Canal Company had no title to property in Panama connected with the isthmian canal that it could sell.

In this he was sustained by the third section of article 6 of the concession to the liquidator of the old Panama Canal Company, of December 10, 1890, as follows:

SEC. 3. It is, moreover, understood that the buildings, plant, works, and improvements which are to become the property of the Republic under the circumstances provided in this article, and in conformity with article 23 of the contract of 1878, shall be inalienable, and are to be in good condition, subject to deterioration arising from use, from unavoidable causes, or from accident.

Under the further extension of the concession to the liquidator of the old Panama Canal Company, dated April 4, 1893, which was also made a law of Colombia, the following prohibition is placed upon the power of the New Panama Canal Company against the sale by it of any of the property held in Colombia under any canal concession.

Article 6 is as follows:

The Republic shall enter into possession and ownership, without need of previous judicial decision and without any indemnity, of the canal itself and the annexes dependent thereon, in conformity with the contracts of 1878 and 1890, in each of the following cases:

If the new company shall not be organized within the period fixed by article first.

If the work shall not be resumed within the period fixed by the same article.

If the receiver sells the property which is to belong to the Republic in case of lapse or abandons its maintenance, all in conformity with the provisions of the previous contracts, saving and excepting deterioration arising from use, unavoidable causes, or from accident.

If the inventory mentioned in article 7 of the present contract shall not be made.

If the conditions of article 2 of the same contract shall not be fulfilled.

Thus it appears that Mr. Silva was entirely correct in his declaration that the New Panama Canal Company had no right or power to convey its canal properties in Colombia to the United States, and it was for this opinion that he was recalled as minister to the United States.

It is a surprise to jurists and to laymen alike in our country that the Attorney-General, in his opinion given to the President upon the right and power of the New Panama Canal Company to make a title to the United States of its property in Panama, omitted to notice the above-quoted prohibitions in the concessions and in the laws of Colombia, through which it derived all of its property rights in Colombia. They positively forbid all alienation of that property, and the Attorney-General could not have held that the French courts could lawfully confer such power upon them, in the face of that prohibition.

The French courts, in their dealing with this property, assume the power to authorize its sale, as if no such prohibition existed, and the law of Colombia and the restraints of the power of sale in the concessions are nowhere even alluded to in their decrees. They are made as if these things did not exist, with the result that the decrees of those courts are as void as if they did not exist.

This is equally true, as matter of law, with respect to the concession of 1878 and the French decrees which violated that concession; but that concession has been displaced or merged in the new concessions, 1890 and 1893, and it is no longer in force, except as it is incorporated in the new concession to the New Panama Canal Company.

Mr. Silva saw with absolute certainty that any sale of the property of the New Panama Canal Company would be void until Colombia had changed its law that granted the new concession, and that consequently a title derived through a decree of the French courts must be void and of no value.

He evidently saw that the purpose and policy of Colombia in the enactment of the laws of 1890 and 1893 was to complete the canal for her advantage and for the benefit of the stockholders and creditors of the old Panama Canal Company, with whose money, amounting to $260,000,000, all had been done that was done toward constructing the canal, and in the corruption of its agents and in corrupt and wasteful administration that had disgraced the very name of the enterprise until, in France, the name "Panamist" was and still is the synonym of thief and robber.

The money contributed to that company, chiefly by the middle classes of France, created the plant and dug the canal ditch and supplied the material and labor, the product of which we are trying to purchase at a forced sale, under an order of a French court, in defiance of an express law of Colombia, which is incorporated in the terms of the concession to the New Panama Canal Company.

Mr. Silva knew that our Isthmian Canal Commission, before they heard the siren of a cheap bargain, had denounced the men who formed the New Panama Canal Company, in a large part, as convicted culprits and as fraudulent despoilers of the old company. He knew, as we all now know, that these men will not only be reimbursed out of the $40,000,000 we are to pay them for all their outlay for stock in that company, and will make a profit of more than $3,000,000, which has been already settled by the decree of a French court in anticipation of its payment by the United States. He saw that the honest intention of Colombia to complete the canal was as far removed from the dishonest purpose of these men to wreck the property and pocket the proceeds of the forced sale as the East is from the West.

He saw that Colombia, to prevent such a result, had forbid the New Panama Canal Company from alienating the property, or any part of it, and he refused, out of respect for his oath of office, to assume the authority to repeal or to violate the laws of Colombia, or to nullify them, and being required to do this, he retired from office as minister to the United States. Then came Señor Concha, and he could not be made to agree that Colombia had the constitutional power to make a concession of canal rights and privileges in perpetuity, such as the act of June 28, 1902, requires.

The pressure of the speculators in these canal concessions came upon him with such weight as to drive him into retirement, and he returned to Colombia to join Silva in making war upon any such concessions to the United States as the act of June 28, 1902, requires to be made. Not these distinguished men alone, but many others of great influence are in Colombia awaiting the arrival of our ultimatum in the form of a treaty signed by Mr. Herran, now secretary of legation and chargé d'affaires of Colombia, and are ready to make war upon it.

The financial aspect of the question appears to have the greatest significance with Mr. Herran, and if he can move us up to the payment of a large annual stipend for a lease he will be satisfied for us to take the risk of the constitutional question along with the risk of the engineering difficulties that hang about the scheme, and he will consent for us to write the treaty engagement in our own words.

It is a strange attitude that we should find ourselves compelled to argue the ministers of Colombia into an attitude toward the constitution of their own country that they are unwilling to assume and retire from office rather than adopt.

These ministers, thus relieved from office under pressure from eager speculators, have still other apprehensions that arise out of conditions that are indicated as forcibly as the quivering of the earth foretells the eruption of a slumbering volcano.

They remember what the people of Panama can never forget—that their State, once sovereign and independent, was the first State of this hemisphere, after the United States of North America, that achieved their independence and sovereignty.

Neither can they forget that the Church party has stripped that badge of honor and power from their national flag and has reduced Panama to a department of Colombia, ruled by a governor appointed at Bogota. It is as if Ohio should be reduced to the former condition of a part of our Northwestern Territory. Above all, they can not forget the degrading bondage of the concordat that the Church party in Colombia has forced upon them in the agreement of 1888 with Pope Leo XIII. While memory of these events lasts in Panama peace will have only a precarious and temporary residence there.

These thoughtful men know that agitation in Panama will be incessant to enlarge the canal concession we may obtain from Colombia into a bond of union with the United States, and no occasion that promises success will be overlooked to promote and intensify that feeling; and they know that even the security of the canal property will be made a reason why the United States should accept the annexation of Panama as a measure of necessity. This is not a new thought or an abandoned hope in Panama. I dread the thought of placing such a temptation, so lit up with the hopes of restored liberty, honor, and sovereignty, before those people, unless they could be again realized in their separate independence.

If Panama could be again restored to her sovereign independence, I would hail the event with joy, but I will not consent to an agreement with Colombia that may drive Panama into our Union to escape her present bondage to Colombia.

Above all else, we should be careful and entirely frank in our dealings with Colombia. The belief or the pledge that we will even aid her actively in fastening upon Panama the fetters of the concordat of 1888 or in maintaining her hold on Panama against the will of her people, if they choose to throw it off, will prove to be a mistake that may deceive Colombia, for our people will not sustain us in supporting such a pledge.

Our people will never aid Colombia in the infliction of wrong and injustice upon the people of Panama at the will and pleasure of that Government, and this appears to be the pledge we are asked to give. They will never extinguish or prevent the rekindling of the light of liberty, independence, and sovereignty in that once brilliant star that has been stricken from the galaxy of American republics by the fratricidal hand of Colombia. A casual concession offers no temptation to the people of the United States for an act that is so unnatural.

It would be a far better use to make of the $40,000,000 we are asked to pay the Panama Canal Company for a title that is a mere possession of a property they are anxious to get rid of to pay $30,000,000 of it to Colombia for the restoration of Panama to independence and $10,000,000 to Panama for the concessions claimed by the New Panama Canal Company. The French could then work out their concession, if they wish to do so, and if they can get the money, or, if not, they could forfeit it to the United States.

If they could complete the canal, we would have it at the end of ninety-nine years, with the annual stipend of not less than $250,000 per annum, and the railroad in 1966, with an annual stipend of like amount. This would be a great speculation; an immense profit on $40,000,000 of investment, and the French would get all they bargained for in their concession, Panama would get her liberty again, and Colombia would get rid of her white elephant. Even this plan is more certain of success than is to be expected under the existing conditions and in view of long and deep-seated animosity between Panama and Colombia. The United States can not afford to become a party to that bitter strife.

In all likelihood the French people would contribute the money to complete the canal if we owned the reversionary interest in the property covered by their concession. They would certainly do this if they believed that the canal is possible as an engineering project at a reasonable cost. If they have not such faith in its success, they would at once abandon it and suffer it to revert to the ultimate owner of the soil. But no such inducements weigh with the New Panama Canal Company. They only want the $40,000,000 for a property in which they have no faith.

But I do not propose to change anything in the act of June 28, 1902, or in the conditions that now exist. What I fear and object to is our future relations with Panama, Colombia, and South America, if we follow the Panama Canal Company into this dangerous adventure and thereby renew the civil war there, for which that company is chiefly responsible. That war is as flagrant in the hearts of those people as it was, recently, on very bloody battlefields.

The proposition of Colombia for our guarantee of her ownership of Panama, as well as her sovereignty over that department, is thus stated in the treaty offered us by Mr. Silva, as minister from Colombia:

All the stipulations contained in article 35 of the treaty of 1846-1848 between the contracting parties shall continue and apply in full force to the cities of Panama and Colon and to the accessory community lands within the said zone, and the territory thereon shall be neutral territory, and the United States shall continue to guarantee the neutrality thereof and the sovereignty of Colombia thereover in conformity with the above-mentioned article 35 of said treaty.

In furtherance of this provision there shall be created a joint commission by the Governments of Colombia and the United States that shall establish and enforce sanitary and police regulations.

When the treaty of 1846–1848 was made Panama was a State with sovereign powers. Now she is a department of Colombia, and that treaty has made the United States accessory to her degradation. I can never vote for its renewal. To pledge the protection of Colombia in her sovereignty over one of her departments, without restriction as to any abuses of power over those people, is to bind our country to assist Colombia in any policy she may choose to adopt toward them. It is not a pledge of protection to Colombia against foreign aggression, but a pledge of assistance to that Government against any resistance by the people of Panama to any policy or law Colombia may choose to impose upon a people who are already degraded in their political rights from the proud position of sovereign statehood to that of a mere department that is governed from Bogota.

Stern opposition to such a treaty is to be expected in Colombia, unless the people are awed into silent submission by the presence of military power in the hands of a dictator.

Our people will dread such a result with as deep a feeling of apprehension as the people of Colombia will oppose it with bitterness and resentment. In both countries there will be apprehension of danger to the canal in the midst of such controversies no matter which party may be dominant in Colombia.

The reasons I have but partially stated may cause any treaty we can make with the diplomatic functionaries of Colombia to fail of ratification in the Congress of Colombia, or in the Senate of the United States.

That they will lead to careful debate in both bodies is evident. If such a treaty is supported by a majority of our Senate, but fails to get a majority of two-thirds of this body, its defeat will lead to irritations which may also defeat any treaties we may afterwards make with Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

I am not imputing any lack of patriotism or any disposition to defeat all canal enterprises to anyone in these observations. I am only considering possibilities that are obviously in view and endanger the construction of a canal at either of the localities provided for in the act of June 28, 1902.

Yet, all the world knows that powerful interests are opposing the opening of any canal through the American Isthmus, and these combinations are relying upon a minority of the Senate to destroy all effort to construct such a canal through the provisions of the act of June 28, 1902, which requires that, in either case, the concessions shall be obtained through a treaty with Colombia, or through treaties with Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

I will atttempt no description of the anger and disappointment of the people of the United States and the disgust of the civilized world at our failure to open any canal because of the opposition of one-third of the Senate, which can thus defeat the act of June 28, 1902, which passed both Houses of Congress by a vote that was practically unanimous and invoked a joyous response from all but a very few of our people.

No Senator can be unmindful of the weight of responsibility we are under or how it alarms cool and conscientious action from its propriety, even to discuss objections to either of the treaties we may be required to consider and pass upon, when the defeat of both these treaties may be the entire destruction of the purposes of the act of June 28, 1902.

There is little liberty of action or judgment in circumstances of such extreme peril to that great movement of the people which found expression in that act of Congress.

For one, rather than defeat the hope of constructing an isthmian canal, I would prefer to take whatever treaty with Colombia the President may send to the Senate and throw the whole responsibility upon the Executive.

If it comes to the alternative of being compelled to locate the canal in a country where the United States and the canal will find enemies among the people, I am prepared to so provide that we will establish security by force of arms, and will enforce the rights for which we must pay a very heavy price.

But it is the good fortune of this country that we have already secured a perfect measure of relief from such embarrassing conditions, and it is among the best memories of a great and patriotic President that his forecast, courage, and wisdom have secured this blessing to the people he so truly loved and so faithfully served.

Among the chiefest of the works of William McKinley will always be classed the agreements he caused to be made, signed, sealed, and interchanged with Nicaragua and Costa Rica on December 1, 1900, and among the most worthy of the acts of Congress will be its acceptance of this great plan of national deliverance in a time of serious trouble and danger.

If treaties are made with Colombia, or with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and if all of them fail for want of ratification by the Senate, it still remains open to Congress to accept the agreements of December 1, 1900, with Costa Rica and Nicaragua by the passage of the bill now under discussion.

This bill simply confirms those agreements by authorizing the President to acquire such rights as are described in this bill, which are the identical rights described in those agreements. This act of Congress, without more, concludes these agreements and makes them of perfect obligation.

This act will become the means of execution of the provisions of the act of June 28, 1902, all of which will continue in force, but may be impossible of execution in the manner therein prescribed, because of the failure of the treaties therein provided for, but will be in all other respects capable of easy and complete execution by means of the act I am now discussing.

The appropriation will stand, and its purposes, as they are defined in that law, will remain unchanged, and all administrative provisions of the act of June 28, 1902, will remain in full force. The rights of exclusive ownership and control of the canal in perpetuity will be secured to the United States by agreement between the United States and the sovereign Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica. These rights being secured and confirmed are irrevocable except with the consent of the legislatures of all the governments concerned, and they form the sure basis and foundation for any further agreements as to the method and details of the exploitation of the work of constructing the canal.

As to such agreements, which are only collateral and incidental to the real concessions acquired, we have already the consent of Nicaragua and Costa Rica by proposed treaties which conform to every requirement that our diplomatic authorities have either prescribed or have assented to. Nicaragua and Costa Rica have the most honorable intentions to abide by and perform these diplomatic understandiugs; yet, if they were otherwise disposed, the cession of the rights stated in the agreements of December 1, 1900, and their agreement therein to treat with the United States as to the details "found necessary to accomplish the construction and to provide for the ownership and control of the proposed canal" binds them to a reasonable and just arrangement of such details. So that, in the event it becomes necessary to save the canal by the passage of this act, every provision is already made as to all the terms of a treaty to proceed with the work of construction.

A safer situation could not be acquired in advance of the actual ratification of a treaty, for which this act provides.

Mr. McKinley saw and provided against another possible difficulty in respect of the jurisdiction of Congress and the jurisdiction of the Senate as a diplomatic body in dealing with the complex problem of acquiring concessions for canal purposes, and of necessary treaties to arrange the details of municipal, police, judicial, hygienic, and political control of a canal in a foreign country, and also the appropriation of money for these and other purposes connected with a canal.

He left Congress free, under the agreements of December 1, 1900, to acquire property rights in a foreign country by confirming the agreements made by the diplomatic authorities under the Constitution. He left Congress free, with the House of Representatives in the lead, to make all necessary appropriations for the execution of the agreements and for constructing the canal, and this was necessary because no treaty for the construction of such a work can be self-executing. The Senate as a diplomatic body acting with the President could not provide for the construction of a canal in a foreign country, or in any country, with the resources of the United States without the assistance of Congress.

No condition is conceivable in which a canal can be constructed by the United States without special laws to be enacted by Congress, and no treaty can be executed that may be made for that purpose with Colombia without the legislative consent and action of Congress to put it into operation. Why, then, should Congress be excluded from participation in any proceeding for the acquisition of such rights? This is a parliamentary impossibility.

President McKinley left the Senate free, in cooperation with the President, to enact the supreme law for the establishment of all the international relations between the respective Governments concerned, respecting the canal, and to provide the officers and agents to execute these rights and powers. Such arrangements, between three powers, could only be made by treaty.

Thus a minority of the Senate, if so disposed, could not repeal or defeat the act of Congress by which the concessions are acquired by rejecting one treaty or many treaties as to matters that are only collateral to such rights. Failing in one treaty, others could be made until all the countries concerned will have reached agreements that are satisfactory to them.

Under the law of June 28, 1900, this, unfortunately, is not true. If treaties made under that act fail of ratification by a vote of a minority of the Senate the whole fabric of canal legislation goes into ruin, and the will of the people, as expressed in that act of Congress, is defeated.

Mr. McKinley thought out all these possible difficulties with the clear mind of a great statesman and provided for them in the agreements of December 1, 1900.

He saw how legislative jealousies between the two Houses could be prevented by conceding to Congress its full and requisite jurisdiction in acquiring property rights, by purchase, in foreign countries, and that such rights could not be obtained without the consent of Congress. He saw that, under the practice of our Government, the House of Representatives must originate the necessary bills of appropriation, and could defeat any canal by refusing them, and he yielded all claim of right, as President, either to acquire or to destroy these great national advantages by the mere concurrence of the Senate, and he brought the subject within reach of the powers of Congress, as a legislative tribunal where the will of the people can be finally expressed by a simple majority vote in both Houses.

It was against all the convictions of his great mind and nature to expose the highest rights and interests of the people to defeat or destruction through the opposing vote of one-third of the Senate.

I am proud as an American to do this simple justice to the conduct of this wise and patriotic President.

In the event of the failure to execute the law of June 28, 1902, if the Senate refuses to ratify such treaties as may be made with the three Governments concerned, I rejoice that President McKinley has pointed the way and has opened it to Congress to secure the canal by ratifying the agreements he so wisely made with Costa Rica and Nicaragua, under hand and seal, on December 1, 1900.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition does the Senator desire to have made of the bill?

Mr. MORGAN. Let the bill remain on the Calendar. It has been reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will remain on the Calendar.

JOSEPH S. MESS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill No. 13468.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13468) granting an increase of pension to Joseph S. Mess. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Joseph S. Mess, late musician, Second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, until Monday, January 5, 1903, at 12 o'clock m.

SATURDAY, December 20, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I will state for the information of the House that the conference committee on the strike commission bill had a meeting on Wednesday, but before that meeting the Senate had adjourned over until this morning. I am satisfied that the report will come over very soon adopting the conference report, and I hope it will be adopted by the House to-day, so that the legislation can be had before the beginning of the holiday recess. The deficiency bill is disposed of, I think.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not hear the bill first named by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. The agreement on the strike commission bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is the bill, is it?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I heard the statement that the gentleman made, but I did not catch the name of the bill that he referred to.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess for twenty minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House was in recess until 12 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

On December 19, 1902:

H. R. 619. An act providing for the recognition of the military service of the officers and enlisted men of the First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15372) to provide for the payment of the expenses and compensation of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission appointed by the President of the United States at the request of certain coal operators and miners.

COMPENSATION OF COAL STRIKE COMMISSIONERS, ETC.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 15372) to provide for the payment of the expenses and compensation of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission appointed by the President of the United States at the request of certain coal operators and miners. With this report I submit a statement signed by the House conferees. I ask that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that, in lieu of it, the statement be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the gentleman's attention to the fact that, in view of the rule requiring the printing of a conference report and statement prior to their consideration, unanimous consent will be necessary for the consideration of this matter at the present time.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15372) to provide for the payment of the expenses and compensation of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission appointed by the President of the United States at the request of certain coal operators and miners, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, and 9.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, and 5; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said Senate amendment insert the following: "Commission, who are not officers in the civil or military service of the Government, $4,000 each; and for the employees of the said Commission, who are not officers or clerks in the civil or military service of the Government, such compensation as may be fixed by the said Commission: Provided, That the members of said Commission and the assistant recorders shall be allowed the sum of $15 per day each, and the other employees of the Commission in the service of the Government, $12 per day each, in lieu of traveling and all other expenses;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 7 and 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7 and 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the amended paragraph, being lines 9 to 14, inclusive, page 2 of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"A disbursing agent for the commission is hereby authorized, and the expenses, compensation, and per diem allowance herein provided for shall be paid by him on vouchers certified by the recorder and approved by the chairman of the commission, and the accounting officers of the Treasury shall credit the said disbursing agent with the amounts so certified and paid."

And the Senate agree to the same.

J. G. CANNON,
S. S. BARNEY,
L. F. LIVINGSTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15372) to provide for the payment of the expenses and compensation of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted in the accompanying conference report, namely:

On Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6, 8, and 9, retains the title of "Anthracite Coal Strike Commission," as proposed by the House, instead of the "Anthracite Coal Strike Arbitration," as proposed by the Senate.

On the remaining amendments the compensation of the members of the commission not in the employ of the Government is fixed at $4,000 each, as proposed by the Senate; the per diem allowance to the members of the commission and the assistant recorders is fixed at $15 per day, instead of $10, as proposed by the Senate; and the per diem allowance to the other employees of the commission in the service of the Government is fixed at $12 per day, instead of $6, as proposed by the Senate, and the commission is authorized to fix the rate of compensation to its employees who are not in the Government service.

J. G. CANNON,
S. S. BARNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The question being taken, the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ELECTION CONTEST—COUDEN VERSUS GLASS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House papers in the contested-election case of Couden v. Glass, from the Sixth Congressional district of Virginia; which were referred to the Committee on Elections No. 1.

Dix Council, No. 215, of Newark; of Daniel Webster Council, No. 160, of Newark; of South Orange Council, No. 241, of South Orange, and of Peninsula Council, No. 250, of Bayonne; all of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics; of W. H. Polhemus, of East Millstone; of the Parke File Company, of Newark; of Dr. Caldwell Morrison, of Summit, and of G. F. Snyder, of Washington, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the immigration of aliens into the United States and their insular possessions; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of George Cantrell, of Tabor; of E. W. Beam, of Denville, and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Jersey, all in the State of New Jersey, and of Dr. William C. Stokes, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution requiring Territories when coming into the Union as States to prohibit polygamy; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the International Brotherhood Electrical Workers of Trenton; of the Labor Union of Dover; of the United Powder and High Explosive Workers of Succasunna; of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of Atlantic City; of the Glass Bottle Blowers' Association of Woodbury; of the Bartenders' Local Union No. 124, of Trenton; of Paperhangers' Local Union No. 352, of Trenton; of the Sewing Machine Builders' Local Union No. 7424, of Elizabeth; of Bricklayers, Masons, and Plasterers' Local Union No. 5, of Orange, and of the Federated Council of the Oranges of Orange, all of the American Federation of Labor, of the State of New Jersey, praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of the Whitney Glass Works, of Glassboro; of the Embroidery Works, of Newark, and of Carter, Howe & Co., of Newark, all in the State of New Jersey, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BEVERIDGE presented a petition of the Indiana Bituminous Coal Operators' Association, of Terre Haute, Ind., praying for the ratification of a reciprocal treaty with Canada whereby bituminous coal of each country shall be admitted free of duty into the territory of the other; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Retail Grocers' Association of Peoria, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the adulteration of food products; which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

He also presented a petition of the directory of the National Federation of Civic Rights of New Albany, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the creation of a commission to inquire into the condition of the colored people of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of Local Union No. 342, of New Albany; of Local Union No. 161, International Association of Machinists, of Indianapolis; of Bricklayers and Masons' Local Union No. 21, of Marion; of the United Mine Workers of Indianapolis; of the Trades and Labor Assembly of Logansport; of Local Union No. 597, of Center Point; of Local Union No. 54, of Evansville; of Switchmen's Local Union No. 74, of Michigan City; of the Pattern Makers' Association of Indianapolis; of Local Union No. 78, of Logansport; of Cigar Makers' Local Union No. 335, of Hammond; of the Trades and Labor Council of New Albany, and of Federal Labor Union No. 10106, of Stone Bluff, all of the American Federation of Labor, in the State of Indiana, praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of E. C. Atkins & Co., of Indianapolis, Ind., and a memorial of the Manufacturers' Association of Kokomo, Ind., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CLAY. I present a petition of the Board of Trade of Brunswick, Ga., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of a light-ship at that harbor. The petition is short and of importance. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRUNSWICK BOARD OF TRADE,
Brunswick, Ga., January 2, 1903.

Whereas there is in the westerly curvature of the Atlantic coast from Savannah, Ga., southward to St. Augustine, Fla., the important commercial cities, Brunswick, Fernandina, Jacksonville, and the only less important ports, Sapelo, Darien, St. Andrews, and St. Augustine, largely dependent upon ocean commerce, the commerce of said ports aggregating over $50,000,000 per year—the commerce of Brunswick alone exceeding $27,000,000; and

Whereas this portion of the coast in its entire extent has no first-class lights, necessitating in thick weather in an effort to enter these ports, either from north or south, sailing close inshore for the purpose of identifying the lights of the harbors named above; and

Whereas there are numerous shoals projecting far out into the ocean, which are a constant source of danger to vessels seeking to identity lights as aforesaid; and

Whereas numerous vessels, due to the circumstances above described, have been wrecked and lost entirely, and a much larger number put ashore and injured and delayed, among them Government vessels, the aggregate number wrecked and ashore in the aforesaid range of coast averaging five a year for the past thirty years, and the total loss in vessels, freight, loss in time, and in various ways running into sums of great magnitude; and

Whereas there is no light-ship within this range of coast from St. Martins Industry light southward, and a light-ship placed in such western curvature of the coast would enable all vessels to locate its latitude and longitude with certainty, and thence take course with certainty to the sea entrance of each of the harbors named; and

Whereas the statistics of disaster in the navigation of the seas and the oceans of the world place the percentage of such disasters to vessels seeking and sailing from port at over 50 per cent of all such disasters of every kind; and

Whereas there is a vast coastwise commerce passing up and down the coast into and out of the Gulf and the West India Islands and Caribbean Sea ports, which is now compelled to run far out at sea to avoid danger, to which such a light-ship would prove of great advantage in saving of time, in greater safety of navigation, and is a matter of vital interest to all owners of our prosperous and enormous coastwise trade:

Resolved, That this board, representing the commercial interest of the port of Brunswick, in its own interest and the interest of all the harbors named, and of the vast coastwise commerce referred to, respectfully petitions our Senators, our immediate Representative in Congress, all of the Representatives of the State of Georgia, and the Senators and Representatives from Florida, which is as deeply interested as Georgia, to use their best efforts to procure without delay an adequate appropriation for a light-ship to be located within such a curvature of the coast as a matter of urgent national and international importance.

By order of the board:

FRANK D. AIKEN, President.

Attest:

C. D. OGG, Secretary.

HAY-BOND TREATY.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I present articles published in the Boston Herald and the New York Tribune, relating to the Hay-Bond treaty, which I ask be printed as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13075) to amend section 3 of the "Act further to prevent counterfeiting or manufacturing of dies, tools, or other implements used in manufacturing," and so forth, approved February 10, 1891, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration.

I suppose that this subject, being a matter of the criminal laws of the United States, is usually within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary, but I am told that this House bill has been already referred to the Committee on Commerce and is under consideration there. Without, therefore, making the matter a precedent one way or the other, I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6028) to provide for the appointment of additional United States commissioners in the western judicial district,

Indian Territory, and for other purposes, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6446) to provide for the construction of a bridge across Rainy River, in Minnesota, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

TRUSTS OR COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] on the 15th ultimo, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be prepared forthwith, under the direction of the Attorney-General, a compilation of all the laws enacted by the various States of the Union relating to trusts or to combinations in restraint of trade and commerce, of which compilation 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 5,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 500 for the use of the Department of Justice.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to suggest "and such portion of such legislation in regard to the organization and control of corporations as shall in his judgment seem fit," or something of that sort. It is utterly impossible to separate the consideration of State legislation in regard to what is merely called trusts from the acts relating to corporations, in regard to watered stock, paying in full in cash, etc. I should like to have inserted in the resolution the words "and for the regulation and organization of corporations."

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Does the Senator propose that as an amendment?

Mr. HOAR. Yes; as an amendment.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I see no objection to it.

Mr. PLATT of New York. On behalf of the committee, I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "commerce," at the end of line 5, insert "and for the regulation and organization of corporations."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MCCOMAS. It seems to me that the compilation of State statutes on this subject ought to be accompanied by the decisions thereon in the same compilation, which could be easily obtained from the reports, and that there should be the Federal statutes with the list of decisions of the Supreme Court and of the Federal appellate courts compiled in one volume.

Mr. HOAR. Has not that been made a separate order?

Mr. MCCOMAS. I introduced a resolution to that effect, and it passed the Senate and went to the House, but it would be convenient to have the whole subject in the same compilation. That is all that I suggest. I shall not oppose this proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts?

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

COMPILATION RELATING TO PARDONS, ETC.

Mr. PLATT of New York. From the Committee on Printing I report a joint resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. ——) to provide for the printing of a digest of the laws, decisions, and opinions relating to pardons and other acts of executive clemency under the United States and the several States was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be printed the usual number of copies of a digest of the laws, decisions, and opinions relating to pardons and other acts of executive clemency under the constitutions of the United States and of the several States, and that in addition to said usual number there be printed and bound in sheep 500 copies for the use of the Attorney-General; said digest to be printed under the editorial supervision of an editor or editors to be appointed by the Attorney-General and the editing and clerical work incident thereto to be paid for out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, on the direction of the Attorney-General, at a price not to exceed $2,500, which sum is hereby appropriated, and is to be in full payment for said work, except the cost of printing and binding the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. At what time is it proposed that the digest shall begin?

Mr. PLATT of New York. In support of the joint resolution I submit a letter from the Attorney-General, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hon. T. C. PLATT,
Chairman Committee on Printing, United States Senate.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 29th ultimo, requesting an expression of my views in respect of the propriety of the introduction of joint resolutions in Congress providing for the compilation and printing of a digest of the laws, decisions, and opinions relating to pardons and other acts of Executive clemency under the United States and the several States, and the appropriation of $2,500 in payment of the work of compilation, I have to say that I have given the matter consideration, that it meets with my approval, and that I believe the compilation and publication of the proposed digest proper and necessary.

Important questions frequently arise under this Department concerning the effect of convictions in the United States and State courts, especially as to the rights of convicts to testify, to vote, to hold office, etc., and also concerning the extent of the power of the President in various classes of cases, and the effects of pardon and other acts of clemency.

There is at present no work of authority or even of reference upon this subject, and the preparation and printing of such a digest as is contemplated would be a great convenience, and would save much time and labor, not only to this Department, but also to the officers of the United States courts and to other officials of the Government, besides being useful to the courts and officials of the States.

For reasons appearing above it seems to me that such a digest should, as is proposed, contain a summary of the laws and decisions of the States, as well as the Federal laws and decisions.

As a precedent for the printing by Congress of such digests I may refer to joint resolution No. 26, approved March 2, 1895, under which was edited and printed a digest of the laws and decisions relating to the appointment, compensation, etc., of officials of the United States courts, which work has been of great value to the officers of this Department and of the Treasury Department, and to other officials of the Government, for the editing and preparation of which a appropriation of $2,000 was carried by the resolution.

Concerning the amount to be appropriated to pay for the clerical, legal, and editorial work in the preparation of the proposed digest, I should say that $2,500 ought to be an ample amount from which the Attorney-General could approve and allow such compensation as may seem proper upon the completion of the work.

Respectfully, P. C. KNOX, Attorney-General.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May the first of the joint resolution be read again?

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed the usual number of copies of a digest of the laws, decisions, and opinions relating to pardons and other acts of executive clemency under the constitutions of the United States and of the several States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It seems to me that the word "decisions" is rather indefinite.

Mr. SPOONER. That, I judge from his letter, is one of the things which the Attorney-General especially desires.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Do you mean decisions of courts?

Mr. SPOONER. Decisions of courts.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Or of boards of pardon?

Mr. SPOONER. I am speaking of his letter. I doubt if the joint resolution as it is drawn would cover all that the letter covers. Is there any objection to its going over until to-morrow?

Mr. PLATT of New York. No.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the language ought to be looked at a little.

Mr. HOAR. It occurred to me when I heard the joint resolution read that its phraseology was pretty general and vague and would include a good deal of matter that it would be very difficult to collect; but as I understood from the letter that the Department of Justice approved it, I did not make any point on it. However, it occurred to me that it is pretty vague in its phraseology.

Mr. SPOONER. The joint resolution does not fit the letter, and I think it would be well to let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT of New York. Let it go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If present consideration is objected to——

Mr. SPOONER. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the joint resolution goes to Calendar.

Mr. SPOONER. Without losing its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It goes to the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps the Senator from New York will withdraw the joint resolution and report it again to-morrow, and then it would have its present position.

Mr. SPOONER. I think all would agree to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The simplest way to have it before the Senate to-morrow morning is to withdraw it.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I withdraw the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York withdraws the joint resolution.

Mr. MALLORY. I introduce a bill and move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary. I think it proper it should go to that committee, as it relates to compensation for extra services of a marshal.

The bill (S. 6737) for the relief of Samuel Puleston was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MALLORY introduced a bill (S. 6738) to restrict absences of district judges of the United States from the districts for which they are appointed; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 6740) granting a pension to Frances E. Wild; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6741) granting a pension to Solomon B. Holman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WARREN introduced a bill (S. 6742) granting an increase of pension to Eva V. Downey; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 6743) for the relief of the estate of David Crowell, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6744) for the relief of the estate of Lewis King, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 6745) for the relief of Creighton Churchill; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 6746) granting a pension to Michael Matheny; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 6747) granting an increase of pension to Alvin Harriman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6748) granting an increase of pension to Ann M. Haskell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompany papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6749) granting a pension to Sarah E. Presson Flagg; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

DUTIES ON COAL.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am going to ask permission of the Senate to say a single word in explanation of a bill which I am about to introduce and request to have referred to the Committee on Finance.

It is a bill to suspend for ninety days the duties on coal imported into the United States. I am perfectly aware, of course, that no such bill can originate in this body and that this body can take no action upon such a measure until it comes over to it from the House. I introduce the bill simply because I desire to call attention here and elsewhere to the subject, and to ask for it the prompt consideration of the Senate Committee on Finance.

The State which I represent in part, and, indeed, all New England, is suffering a great deal of distress from the shortage of coal. There is a great shortage of coal, both anthracite and bituminous, owing, as we are all aware, to the protracted strike of last summer. Prices in many cases have reached extravagant heights. It is not worth while to inquire whether this is owing to retailers, owners of ocean transportation, or to independent operators. The fact remains that there is a great deal of real suffering. Many of our factories are in doubt as to whether they will get sufficient coal to continue. Many schools and public buildings are threatened with closing. But the severest distress occurs among those who are least able to pay the extravagant prices for coal.

I do not think, Mr. President, that a duty of 67 cents a ton has much exclusive effect where coal has advanced anywhere from $3 to $12 above the normal prices. This is a coal-exporting country, not a coal-importing country. But I nevertheless think it possible that the removal of the coal duties for a brief period of ninety days during the time of extremely cold weather might have an effect in stimulating importations of coal, which is greatly to be desired and would be very beneficial. Certainly anyone who is familiar with the suffering that now exists in certain of the Eastern States, and I have no doubt elsewhere, could not object, it seems to me, to any reasonable measure which would tend in however slight a degree to modify and reduce the amount of distress and suffering which undoubtedly exist.

It is for this reason, Mr. President, that I introduce the bill and to ask for it the attention of the Committee on Finance.

The bill (S. 6739) to suspend the duties on coal imported into the United States, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. VEST. Let the bill be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That all duties now imposed by law upon coal imported into the United States be suspended for a period of ninety days after the passage of this act, and that the President be, and is hereby, authorized to make proclamation of such suspension of said duties.

SEC. 2. That after the expiration of said period of ninety days if the President of the United States shall be satisfied that the government of the Dominion of Canada does not levy or collect any duty, tax, or impost upon coal the product of the United States he is hereby authorized to, and shall, announce by proclamation the fact of the removal of said duty, impost, or tax by the Dominion of Canada, and that all duties, imposts, or taxes now levied by the Government of the United States upon coal the product of the Dominion of Canada are removed.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, before introducing the joint resolution which I will presently send to the desk, I desire to say that it seems to me the Senator from Massachusetts who has just taken his seat misconceives the provision of the Federal Constitution with reference to revenue bills.

The Constitution provides that all bills for "raising" revenue must originate in the House of Representatives, but I do not understand that by that clause the origination of bills in the Senate which have an entirely opposite purpose, or, in other words, the purpose of cutting off absolutely revenue derived from a specific article is prohibited.

Consequently, Mr. President, I offer a joint resolution on this subject, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 147) exempting anthracite coal from import duty was read the first time by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks for the present consideration of the joint resolution. It will be read to the Senate for its information.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas there is great distress and suffering in many sections of the country because of the inadequate supply of anthracite coal and the high prices for which it is offered and sold; and

Whereas no revenue of consequence is derived by the Government from the duty imposed thereon; and

Whereas the removal of the duty will add to the supply in the United States and lower the price thereof: Therefore

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That on and after the passage of this resolution anthracite coal and all coals containing less than 92 per cent. of fixed carbon when imported into the United States shall be exempt from duty.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks for present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am about to object, but before objecting I want, without entering into a discussion of this subject, to say that as I understand the matter, there is no duty on anthracite coal. I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I should like, with the permission of the Senate, to make one remark in reply to the Senator from Connecticut.

I understood him to say that there is no duty now upon anthracite coal. The board of appraisers of the city of New York have determined that matter unanimously and decided that there is a duty on anthracite coal, and the President of the United States recognizes that fact. It seems to me, sir, it is beyond any question that the language employed in the Dingley Act means anthracite coal, and was so understood at the time, as the debates show.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not wish to go into a discussion of this matter now. The percentage of coal fixed in the Dingley Act was for the purpose, and the sole purpose, of defining the difference between anthracite and bituminous coal; and in adopting 92 per cent of fixed carbon as defining anthracite coal the committee followed not only the consensus of opinion of experts, but also the decisions of the General Appraisers as sanctioned by the courts. On some future occasion I will go into this matter at a sufficient length to make it absolutely plain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will lie on the table.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. DILLINGHAM submitted the following amendments, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed:

An amendment providing for the establishment of a slow sand filtration plant and improvements to the distributing reservoir in the District of Columbia;

An amendment providing for the paving with asphalt of R street from Twenty-second street to Massachusetts avenue in the District of Columbia:

An amendment providing for the paving with asphalt and improving Twenty-second street from R street to S street in the District of Columbia; and

An amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000 for a fountain, to be placed at the intersection of Connecticut avenue and N street in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DOLLIVER submitted an amendment relating to the distribution of the annual appropriations for the fulfillment of existing treaty stipulations with the Sac and Fox Indians of the Mississippi, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying memorial, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 13679) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,500,000 to enable the government of the Philippine Islands to advance money for the purchase of draft animals to be used in restocking farms of said islands, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the Army appropriation bill. I ask that it be read.

There being no objection, the proposed amendment was read, and referred to the Committee on the Philippines, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. STEWART to the Army appropriation bill.

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to construct, equip, and operate railroads in the Philippine Islands for the purpose of protecting life and property and maintaining a stable government, and that he is hereby authorized to construct and equip not less than 300 miles each year for ten years of such Philippine railroads, and the money necessary to carry this provision into effect is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. CLAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, the amendment being to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of War, through the commissioners of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park, to improve the road from Crawfish Springs, Ga., through the Widow Davis Crossroads and Baileys Crossroads, to Stevens Gap, a distance of 12 miles, $25,000.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to state that the amendment is accompanied by an important letter from General Boynton. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD, and that the amendment and accompanying letter be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. ALEXANDER S. CLAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiries concerning the historical importance of the road from Crawfish Springs to Stevens Gap in connection with the establishment of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, I have the honor to say that this was the road over which and along which the main operations of the Union Army, preceding the battle of Chickamauga, took place, and which is indicated upon the map herewith inclosed by dotted lines in blue, the distance being 12 miles.

The corresponding road over which and along which the operations of the Confederate Army took place previous to the battle of Chickamauga is indicated upon the map by the red line on the east side of Pigeon Mountain, extending from Lee & Gordon Mills to Lafayette, a distance of 13 miles.

As the line of the preliminary operations of the Confederate Army has already been improved, it would seem entirely appropriate that the corresponding line of operations of the Union Army should also be improved. These preliminary operations of both armies were of an exceedingly interesting character and had most important bearings upon the results of the campaign.

In view of the annual maneuvers which are now contemplated from the national park as a general rendezvous for portions of the Regular Army and the National Guard of most of the States south of the Ohio and the Potomac and east of the Mississippi, it would seem advisable to have one important road along the main line of both Confederate and Union operations. The completion of the line now in question would accomplish this. This would leave various unimproved branch roads running from these main lines of operations into the numerous theaters of detached engagements, and thus leave abundant lines of rough roads for practice over ordinary country lines of travel.

The right of way over this road has already been ceded to the United States by the State of Georgia. It is believed that this road can be completed for the sum suggested in your proposed amendment.

Very respectfully,

H. V. BOYNTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter and the proposed amendment will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REVISED CODE OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DILLINGHAM submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring, That 2,500 copies of the revised code of law of the District of Columbia be printed and bound, 500 copies for the use of the Senate, 1,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for sale by the superintendent of documents.

RAILROADS IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what effect, in his opinion, an adequate system of railroads in the Philippine Islands would have upon the cost of maintaining law and order and protecting life and property in those islands, and whether, in his opinion, the expense of protecting life and property and maintaining a stable government would be reduced by such a system of railroads in a sum sufficient to equal the interest on the money necessary to build and operate such roads.

Mr. STEWART. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution, and I beg leave to make a few remarks explanatory of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LODGE. What is the nature of the resolution? I was called out and did not hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a resolution of inquiry of the Secretary of War.

Mr. LODGE. Is it proposed to pass the resolution at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have it read before I give my consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will again be read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the undertaking by the United States to protect life and property and extend the blessings of stable government to the Filipinos will be a long and expensive struggle without the use of railroads. When we take into consideration the vast extent of these islands, their enormous resources and commercial possibilities, the necessity for cheap and speedy action forces itself upon our consideration.

The Philippines have an area of 119,542 square miles, which is more than New England, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey combined. These States have over 20,000 miles of railroad. Illinois alone, with an area of 56,650 square miles, which is less than half the area of the Philippines, has 10,997 miles of railroad. The population of the Philippines, as estimated by the Philippine Commission, is 8,000,000, which is greater than the population of New England, New Jersey, Delaware, and the District of Columbia combined.

Prior to the introduction of railroads and telegraphs, civilization was confined to the countries convenient to navigable waters. All the push and energy of the American people were inadequate to subjugate the Indians and establish government in that vast region between the Missouri River and the Pacific Ocean. Prior to the building of railroads only isolated settlements for mining purposes and the self-exiled Mormons obtained a foothold in the region extending east and west 1,500 miles and extending north and south from Mexico to the Canadian possessions. With the aid of the Ohio, the Mississippi, and the Missouri rivers, and the Great Lakes, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri were only partially settled before railroads were introduced. The marvelous development of all the great States of the Mississippi Valley came after railroads. There were constant Indian wars for nearly one hundred years after the Declaration of Independence.

Those wars, however, were only successful in defending the settlements where the base of supplies by navigable waters was within reasonable distance. Before the establishment of railroads the Sioux, the Arapahoe, the Apache, the Blackfeet, the Bannock, the Cheyenne, and numerous other tribes roved over fully half the territory of the United States and excluded therefrom white settlements. Many thousands of settlers were slaughtered by the savages on the frontiers, and many Indians were slain in the continual war. In 1862, when the Pacific railroad bill was under consideration, the Secretary of War reported that the expense of the overland mail and the transportation of Army and Indian supplies on the line proposed for the railroad amounted to $8,000,000 per annum. The law of 1862 required the companies to perform Government service, the payment for which to be applied to the payment of the subsidy. It was supposed that the Government service would more than pay for the subsidy within the period of thirty years. In 1864 the amount to be retained by the Government was reduced to one-half of the service performed. It was then contended that one-half would be sufficient to liquidate the debt by the time it became due. Contrary to expectations, as soon as the road was constructed the freights for military purposes were comparatively nothing, and the mails were a mere bagatelle. The interest accumulated to an enormous amount, but the companies have reimbursed the Government for every dollar they received. Other roads were given land grants and others were built by private capital, and all are to-day worth 200 per cent of their original cost. The continental railroads and their branches put an end to Indian wars and their enormous cost.

Mexico was practically in a state of anarchy when President Diaz commenced the establishment of a stable government. That wise ruler recognized at the beginning of his reign the importance of railroads in maintaining government. He assisted in the building of over 9,600 miles of railroad, which has placed Mexico on a high plane of prosperity and stability.

India was constantly in rebellion, and England was involved in war and expended vast sums of money in maintaining her authority in that country, but finally when railroads were introduced peace and order were established. England has caused to be built in India over 25,000 miles of railroad, and Indian wars are no more.

Egypt presented another like problem. English armies went up the Nile for several years, but failed to accomplish the purposes for which they were organized. Finally England caused to be built over 2,000 miles of railroad. When the railroad train reached the hostile country of the Upper Nile victory was soon achieved and peace established. In establishing peace on the Upper Nile, General Kitchener, of South African fame, achieved his great success.

Spain, during the three hundred years of her rule in the Philippines, was confined to the borders along the navigable waters. She could not maintain her authority in the interior. The United States ought not to pursue the policy of Spain. The cost of maintaining government in the Philippines and pursuing the roving bandits, which they call ladrones, is very expensive. Wagon trains, pack mules, with all the paraphernalia of war, pursuing bandits who take to the brush as the army advances and renew their depredations in another place, is a ridiculous spectacle. The United States has had enough of that kind of war with the hostile Indians in the far West, which happily ceased with the introduction of railroads. Build railroads in the Philippines and the people will be peaceable and industrious citizens. It may be necessary in some cases for the army to guard the building of the roads, as it did in the building of the Union Pacific and the Northern Pacific, but such necessity will be only temporary. Five hundred miles of railroad in Mindanao will open that country to settlement and enterprise. Nearly nine-tenths of the land in that island belongs to the United States, and the resources of Mindanao are said to be marvelously great. Would the people of the United States be in favor of retaining the Philippines if there were no other alternative but to adopt the policy of Spain and govern only a few towns along the coast?

The United States never withdraws from any great enterprise which has been once undertaken. The vast resources of these islands will be ultimately developed. The time must come when every island will be penetrated by railroads, but while the construction of such railroads is delayed vast expenditures must be made without accomplishing much in the development of the country and the establishment of stable government. We know from our own observation how the islands may be civilized and their resources developed cheaply and without delay. Every dollar invested in railroads will come back to the United States. The private business of the railroads will pay. If the United States does not desire to continue the management of the roads after the military necessity for such management shall have ceased, the roads will sell for many times their cost. The Philippines are a most productive country and the Filipinos, if they have markets brought to their doors, will furnish an immense commerce. The commerce that they have carried on under the blighting rule of Spain, without railroads and without any encouragement whatever, is a sufficient guaranty of what they will do when markets are brought to their doors. It is idle to think of establishing schools and churches in the interior of the islands without railroads. The army necessary for that purpose would be too expensive. But schools and churches and all the appliances of a high civilization will follow the railroads in the islands as they do everywhere else. The United States did not seek these islands; they came as the result of war. The people have resolved to keep them. This can be done with small cost in the future by the use of railroads, and not otherwise.

Suppose it costs to build and equip railroads in the Philippines $40,000 a mile, which would be a liberal estimate. Three hundred miles a year would cost $12,000,000 per annum, the interest upon which at 3 per cent would be $360,000 per year, and $3,000 miles to be built in ten years would cost $120,000,000, the interest upon which at 3 per cent would be $3,600,000. It is fair to assume that before the expiration of the ten years the roads would pay more than interest and operating expenses. Policing the islands by that means would be of no expense to the General Government.

These figures may be criticised, but they are sufficiently accurate for all practical purposes. There can be no doubt that the building of the railroads would be profitable to the United States in addition to securing stable government for the Philippines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RECORDS OF VIRGINIA COMPANY OF LONDON.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That under the direction of the Librarian of Congress there be printed and bound in cloth 7,000 copies of the Records of the Virginia Company of London, now in the custody of the Library of Congress, 500 copies for the Senate, 1,500 copies for the House of Representatives, and 5,000 copies for use and distribution by the Library of Congress.

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Bibliography of the Philippine Islands, compiled under the direction of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, War Department, be referred to the Committee on the Philippines, be printed as a document, and that 1,000 extra copies be printed and bound, 250 for the use of the Bureau of Insular Affairs and 750 for the use of the Senate.

VALUE OF NICARAGUA CANAL AND FUTURE OF THE PACIFIC.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer a resolution, and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That there be reprinted for the use of the Senate the "Views of Commodore George W. Melville, Chief Engineer of the Navy, as to the strategic and commercial value of the Nicaraguan Canal, the future control of the Pacific Ocean," etc.

And in connection therewith an article by the same author published in the North American Review of March, 1898, "On the future of the Pacific."

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire to send to the committee the papers which I ask may be printed. I wish to say to the Senate that there is, I think, but a single copy of that very valuable and scientific document of Admiral Melville now in the library, and there is a very large demand for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

REVISED STATUTES OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be directed to inquire whether the edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States published in 1878 be out of print, so that none can be furnished for the use of Congress or the public, and if, in their opinion, it be desirable and necessary to reprint the same, and legislation be required for that purpose, that they report such legislation.

Also, to report what legislation, if any, be necessary and desirable for the distribution of Volume II and later volumes of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States to the departments and individuals to whom the Revised Statutes and Volume I of the Supplement have been furnished.

SAFETY APPLIANCES ON RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate, under the rule, a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PATTERSON on the 17th of December, 1902, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of all information and reports furnished by its inspectors showing the condition and defects of train or power brakes, and the operation of trains thereby, as required by the act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads, approved March 2, 1893, from May 10 to December 31, 1902, on the following-named railroads and their leased lines: Baltimore and Ohio, Chesapeake and Ohio, Cincinnati, New Orleans and Texas Pacific, Erie, Illinois Central, Lehigh Valley, Louisville and Nashville, Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, New York, New Haven and Hartford, Norfolk and Western, Pennsylvania, Queen and Crescent, Southern, and Southern Pacific.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, by whom was that resolution offered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. FORAKER. I do not see him in the Chamber. How does it happen to come up to-day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was presented on the last legislative day, and comes over under the rule.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What is before the Senate, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] in relation to certain information about railroads, which comes over from a previous day, and is before the Senate for its consideration. The Senator from Ohio moves to refer the resolution to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not make that motion in any spirit of opposition to the resolution, but only that the committee may know the purpose of it. It seems to be a resolution in which certain railroads are specifically named, with respect to which information is desired. I am in entire sympathy with the legislation which has been enacted providing for the use of safety appliances, automatic couplers, etc., on railroad trains, but I think the resolution should go to the committee, and I make that motion.

Mr. BACON. I would suggest to the Senator from Ohio that possibly, as the Senator from Colorado is absent, any disposition of the resolution might properly be deferred until that Senator is here.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia is entirely proper, and I agree that that would be a better disposition of the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio then asks that the resolution lie on the table——

Mr. FORAKER. Until the Senator from Colorado comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To be called up at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. FORAKER. I made the motion to refer supposing that some Senator who was present had asked for the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over.

TRANSPORTATION AND SALE OF ANTHRACITE COAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. JONES of Arkansas December 20, 1902, as follows:

Whereas on October 4, 1902, a sworn statement or petition was filed with the Attorney-General of the United States by William R. Hearst, charging the existence of an illegal combination or conspiracy among railroads therein named engaged in interstate commerce, the tendency and purpose of which was the establishment of a monopoly in the business of transporting and selling anthracite coal, and in connection with said petition a request was made for permission to present evidence establishing the existence of such a combination;

Whereas said petition was referred to the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, with instructions to receive the evidence proffered and report the same to the Department of Justice;

Whereas a protracted interval has elapsed since the filing of the said petition and the submission of such evidence:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the evidence presented by said petitioner, together with the report thereon by said United States district attorney.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I objected and asked that that resolution should go over when it was introduced before the holiday recess. Since then I have taken occasion to examine it, and I am satisfied of the justice of my objection.

We have a Department of Justice and an Attorney-General, to whom, we are to suppose, certain evidence has been referred which has been placed in the hands of the district attorney of New York for consideration. I do not know whether they are going to bring suit on that evidence or not; but I am satisfied if the Government is going to take any action in the direction of the evidence there alluded to, that the surest way to defeat that action would be to compel the Government to produce such evidence as they have collected and such arguments as the district attorney may have submitted to the Department of Justice here. It seems to me that it would be certain to prevent the Attorney-General of the United States from carrying out and prosecuting to success any suit if he were obliged, through a public document, to disclose to the Senate of the United States all that he was doing. It seems to me it would be a great mistake to pass any such resolution as that.

I believe we can put entire confidence in the Attorney-General and in his action in such cases. We know that this evidence is before him. We have no means of knowing whether the interval has been unduly protracted or not, though that I suppose to be the view of Mr. Hearst. I do not think when there is a case before the Attorney-General, which is there with a view to action, that we should compel him to produce the evidence and the report of the district attorney on which he is to take action and make them public beforehand. I hope the resolution will not be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not see how asking for information from the Attorney-General can in any sense be considered a reflection on that officer or on the manner in which he discharges his duties. The statement has been published all over the country that the information was furnished to the Department of Justice; that Mr. Hearst had in his hands evidence which would prove that certain railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce had entered into an illegal combination or conspiracy in connection with the coal business. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] told the Senate this morning that there is a condition of suffering in New England—that the manufacturers of New England to-day and the poor people are absolutely suffering for the want of a sufficient coal supply.

Now, if it is a fact that Mr. Hearst has furnished to the Attorney-General evidence which will prove that certain railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce have entered into an illegal conspiracy for the purpose of controlling the coal trade and suppressing the use of coal, it is a fact that ought to be known to the Senate of the United States and to the people.

While I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts in having confidence in the Attorney-General, I have confidence also in the Senate of the United States, and I believe it can do no harm to the public interests for this body to know as to the truth of charges of this kind. If the evidence has been presented which will satisfy reasonable men that certain railroad companies have engaged in this sort of conspiracy, it is time the Senate of the United States should know the fact, and there is no reason why it should be suppressed and held in the hands of one officer of the Government.

I hope the Senate will adopt the resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the resolution may be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is quite right in the view he takes of this resolution. The object of the petition which was granted by the Attorney-General and the object of furnishing evidence of a general conspiracy, if one exists—and if one does exist it is a very merciless and wicked one, violating the laws of the United States and most harmful in every way—was to secure the institution of a suit against the defendant, evidently by the Attorney-General, in the name of the United States, probably under the Sherman antitrust law or some kindred law, by which there might be brought about through a writ of injunction or otherwise a remedy.

Now, this resolution means one of two things—that the Senate shall say that, in utter ignorance of the extent to which this investigation has gone, or the purpose or the judgment of the district attorney or of the Attorney-General upon the evidence thus far presented, he is neglecting his duty. That is the object, I suppose, of the statement in this resolution as to the long interval which has elapsed. Certainly it must be apparent to anyone that if a suit is to be brought by the United States against such a combination it is not in the public interests or in harmony with good sense that before the institution of the suit all the evidence upon which the Attorney-General proposes to proceed shall be given to the defendants.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no suggestion in the resolution that all the evidence upon which the Department is to proceed shall be presented. The resolution asks for the evidence which Mr. Hearst proposed to present to the Department, which he thought was sufficient to establish the fact of this conspiracy.

Mr. SPOONER. But, as I understand from the resolution, the evidence which he thought was sufficient has been presented; it has been received; and possibly the Attorney-General regards it as of very great importance, but is pursuing a further investigation and obtaining additional testimony, and this would very likely call for a portion of the testimony which he proposes to use in a suit which he intends to bring. If such a time had elapsed as that it would be obvious that the Attorney-General had decided not to bring suit, and the purpose was to bring him to the bar of public opinion for some neglect of duty, the situation would be different, but the matter is a pending matter. We have never had, I think it is safe to say, an Attorney-General less likely to be derelict in instituting a suit in such circumstances than the present Attorney-General of the United States. He has shown no want of firmness or promptitude or courage in the institution of such suits.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. The very purpose of the work of the Attorney-General in finding out whether any one is guilty might by publicity be thwarted to such an extent that the Attorney-General would not be able to make his case.

Mr. SPOONER. That is what I have already stated.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to say a word in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois? If the belief of Mr. Hearst that he has presented evidence which will prove this fact should be made public, how can it interfere with anything if the evidence is already there to make it complete?

Mr. SPOONER. It is not a question of the belief of Mr. Hearst that the evidence is adequate or inadequate. That is the opinion of Mr. Hearst. The opinion of the Senator from Arkansas if that evidence were submitted to him, he being a lawyer, might differ from the opinion of Mr. Hearst. It may very well be that the testimony submitted by Mr. Hearst is very important as a part of the case and as affording leads which are to be followed and presumably are being followed, if possible, by the Attorney-General in a further investigation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. My suggestion was in reply to the observation of the Senator from Illinois that the exposure of this fact might defeat action. My suggestion in reply to that was that if the evidence had been presented which would prove the allegations, how could the fact that the Senate knew it interfere with any proceeding?

Mr. SPOONER. If the evidence presented by Mr. Hearst, with other evidence gathered by the Attorney-General, who presumably is doing his duty, constitutes in his opinion a case on behalf of the United States against conspirators, obviously it ought not before the suit is begun to be put into the hands of the contemplated defendants. That is a proposition which proves itself.

I have been of the opinion that probably there was such a conspiracy, and I take it there will be no debate in the country that if there be such a conspiracy it is one which should be prosecuted as one absolutely wicked in its character and far-reaching in its deleterious effects and results. But I do not think the Senate of the United States, knowing so little of the situation as the Senate does, should take the preparation of the case out of the hands of the law officer of the Government whose duty it is under his oath, when he has made a case which he considers adequate, to secure relief and lay the Government's case before the defendants—of course, if you lay it before the Senate you lay it before the defendants—thereby, of course, advising them in advance of the line of pleading and proof upon which the Attorney-General intends to rely and affording them an opportunity to arrange records or whatever may be thought wisest by them or their counsel to defeat the suit when brought. On reflection——

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question, with his permission.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I suppose there has been some information gained from the Attorney-General by Senators who oppose this motion, and I ask the question for the purpose of governing my action.

Mr. SPOONER. So far as I am concerned, I know nothing about it.

Mr. BACON. Possibly the Senator may listen to information from some of his colleagues. I want to ask the question.

Mr. SPOONER. I know only this, that the Attorney-General will not stop to bring a lawsuit in the name of the United States against such defendants the moment he thinks he has a case which will justify him in bringing such a suit; and I assume that the Attorney-General is doing his duty; that he is prosecuting supplementary investigations, with those perhaps indicated by Mr. Hearst, and that we ought not, without knowing something more definite about the status of the matter, to direct him to give to the world the evidence which he has accumulated.

Mr. BACON. The question I desired to ask the Senator from Wisconsin is whether he or those who agree with him in the position he takes are prepared to say to the Senate that the Attorney-General, upon the information which has been thus furnished him, is of opinion that there is such a case as requires him to further prosecute the inquiry.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not.

Mr. BACON. The Senator says he has confidence in the Attorney-General, and I certainly do not desire to intimate that anyone has any other opinion of him or should have any other, but the Senator will note that the Attorney-General may not be of opinion on these facts that further prosecution of inquiry is required. I think before we pass upon the consideration of this matter and act upon the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Wisconsin, we should at least have the assurance that the Attorney-General considers this such a prima facie case that he is now engaged in the prosecution of an inquiry, and that he desires to be permitted to proceed with it without making disclosures.

Mr. SPOONER. That ought to have been ascertained before the resolution was introduced. I know nothing about the desire of the Attorney-General in the premises or the status of the matter. Nor does the Senator. So far as I know neither does any other Senator.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me in this connection. In view of the length of time which has elapsed without any action, so far as we know, does not the Senator think we should at least have from those who have every opportunity to get it the assurance of the Attorney-General that he is engaged in the prosecution of the matter and that in his opinion a disclosure might result in injustice?

Mr. SPOONER. That is an entirely different proposition. The Senator agrees with me. I am opposing this resolution as improvident and improper in the absence of knowledge as to what the Attorney-General is doing, what progress he has made, if any, and as to the general status of the matter.

Mr. BACON. I am very happy whenever I can agree with the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin——

Mr. SPOONER. I also am happy.

Mr. BACON. Because I have every assurance that we are right when we do agree. But I desire to say this to the Senator in the utmost good faith. I do not think we entirely agree.

Mr. SPOONER. I am unhappy to hear that.

Mr. BACON. The point of divergence is this: I quite agree that if an investigation is being prosecuted which would be defeated by this disclosure, there ought not to be the disclosure; but when a sufficient length of time has passed or there has been a sufficient time in which some development could have been manifested and there has been none, and when this proceeding is initiated here for the purpose of getting the information, it seems to me we ought at least to have the information from the Department, conveyed informally, if you please, that there is now being prosecuted by the Department such an investigation as would make it improvident and improper to make the disclosure sought by the resolution.

On the contrary, the position of the Senator from Wisconsin is that in the absence of this information, although this great time has elapsed, we ought to assume that the Attorney-General is prosecuting it and that therefore it would be improvident to ask for the information. There I think we differ. We agree on the proposition that if the Attorney-General has found in the information given to him that there is a basis upon which should be rested further investigation and that he is prosecuting that investigation, then there ought not to be the disclosure. But we disagree as to whether or not after so great a length of time we are to assume it or whether we are to have the assurance——

Mr. McCOMAS. What length of time?

Mr. BACON. The length of time, I understand, disclosed by the resolution. I do not know exactly what it is.

Mr. McCOMAS. It is not stated. It is simply an opinion as to the time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Hearst's opinion.

Mr. McCOMAS. It says "a protracted interval." The resolution recites that in October the petition was filed. It alleges that the petition was submitted to the Attorney-General, and thereafter the evidence was submitted, and that a protracted time has expired since the evidence was submitted. Does the Senator know when the evidence was submitted? That is quite material here.

Mr. BACON. I do not know.

Mr. McCOMAS. Well; does the Senator from Arkansas know when the evidence was submitted?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not know.

Mr. McCOMAS. Well.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. But I presume that if the Attorney-General asked to have it submitted, it was submitted at once.

Mr. McCOMAS. You presume.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I presume so because I presume the Attorney-General is discharging his duty.

Mr. McCOMAS. But if the Attorney-General on the 4th of October received the petition, and in a reasonable time had attention brought to it and notified the district attorney in New York, then we should know when it was that Mr. Hearst submitted the evidence. We should not assume, against the Attorney-General and against the energy of the district attorney, that the persons who proffered the evidence were not slow or that they promptly submitted the evidence. The pending resolution alleges that there was a protracted interval between the submission of the evidence and the 20th day of December, when the resolution came in.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. McCOMAS. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, and if I am not talking in the time of the Senator from Georgia——

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Wisconsin is the Senator of whom permission should be asked.

Mr. SPOONER. I yield.

Mr. McCOMAS. I submit to Senators that there is not and has not been an Attorney-General or a district attorney who would not be eager and swift, upon the submission of a case, to bring to punishment the perpetrators of a colossal crime such as is alleged in this preamble. But when a crime is thus described, which all men would be glad to punish, and it is alleged that there has been delay by the Attorney-General or by the district attorney, that the interval of time has been so protracted that the Senate should have the matter here, Mr. President, it is plain that, before we impute to the district attorney or to the Attorney-General that there has been protracted delay in a large and widespread investigation of the scope indicated by this resolution, we ought to be sure, as has been said before, that we are not now further delaying the matter.

Suppose the papers are sent here. It may happen that the evidence was submitted to the district attorney in New York on the 15th day of December, and on the 20th of the same month the resolution appeared here to have the matter investigated by the Senate. What does the Senate do? Bring it here and refer it to a committee—the Committee on Interstate Commerce or the Committee on the Judiciary; and what will they do? Proceed, perhaps, to have their investigation, and in doing it give away all the evidence upon which the prosecution might have been based and successfully carried on. And if you bring it here the district attorney of New York and the Attorney-General must cease their work, and what then? In the midst of winter, when the great charge is made by Mr. Hearst that in his opinion this thing is being done by various railroads, the whole hand of the Government is given away, and what is the purpose? It is said, "Let the evidence submitted by Mr. Hearst be submitted to the Senate." I do not know, but I venture the assertion that the evidence submitted by Mr. Hearst has already found its way into the newspapers somewhere and that the public has it. But the district attorney, if he be assumed to be doing his duty, may have other information which would be brought out by the investigation in progress.

I do not desire longer to take the time of the Senator from Wisconsin or the Senator from Georgia. The resolution is ill conceived, I submit respectfully, improvident, and hurtful of its author's purpose. It does that, and does something more. It imputes to the Attorney-General and to the district attorney negligence without a disclosure of facts which would constitute negligence on their part. Then there is the mere assertion in the resolution that the time has been protracted, when perhaps there may have been only a week between the submission of the evidence to the district attorney and the introduction of the resolution. It is not just to those officials nor just to the purpose of the Senator from Arkansas if he desires to punish the alleged iniquity of these railroad corporations.

Mr. TILLMAN and Mr. SPOONER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SPOONER. Have I not the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the Senator from Maryland was recognized in his own right.

Mr. SPOONER. I yielded for a question.

Mr. McCOMAS. I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will gladly yield the floor to the Senator from Wisconsin, but I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland a question. I should like to know of that Senator just how much time he would consider it necessary for the Attorney-General and the district attorney to have in order to make up their minds as to whether they had a prima facie case which would warrant prosecution.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator from South Carolina tell me how much time they did have, and then I can answer the question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not that time, and no other Senator over here seems to have it. I think before we settle this question we ought to have it——

Mr. McCOMAS. I think so.

Mr. TILLMAN. Because we appear to be bolting about in the dark trying to find somebody to hit——

Mr. McCOMAS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. We are trying to hit—or pretending to try to hit—the trusts. I do not know what a trust is. Nobody seems to be able to describe it in legal phrase. Anyway, the thing we are trying to hit is a trust, a monopoly, a combination, unholy and outrageous, to keep the people from getting coal, as I take it. I want to know of the Senator just how much time an Attorney-General who is in earnest would want.

Mr. McCOMAS. In reply to that question, I should want to know how much time has been allowed. I am confident there is no Senator on this floor who would not be glad and be swift to help punish the offense alleged in this preamble, but there should be some disclosure of facts here before we impute to these officials that they are not so eager as we are to bring about proper punishment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is what you are trying to prevent.

Mr. McCOMAS. Why say "a protracted interval" if the Senator who offers the resolution can not tell us whether it be five days or two weeks?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. You are trying to prevent the bringing of the facts here. You say we ought to have the facts and to know the facts, and yet are unwilling to adopt the resolution.

Mr. McCOMAS. Why should not the Senator from Arkansas ascertain—it takes little effort—whether much time has elapsed? When was the evidence submitted?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If I may be allowed——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. McCOMAS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The purpose of the resolution is not to criticise the Attorney-General. If I were undertaking to criticise the Attorney-General, I should take the course suggested by the Senator from Maryland. Mr. Hearst has presented evidence which, as he believes, is proof of this illegal conspiracy. That is what the resolution says Mr. Hearst believes. Now, if he has presented such evidence and it is sufficient to convict the railroads of this offense, I can not conceive how it could weaken the Government's case in any sense for the Senate to know those facts as well as the Attorney-General; and the Senate has a right to know them.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to ask who has the floor?

Mr. McCOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to know if any Senator is informed whether a suit has been brought by the Attorney-General or the district attorney.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not know. I should like to know the facts, and the object of the resolution is that the Senate may know the facts.

Mr. CULLOM. Here we are debating the passage of a resolution calling upon the Attorney-General for information in reference to this alleged conspiracy when nobody in the Senate knows whether or not the Attorney-General is prosecuting a suit. Why should we be, as the Senator from South Carolina says, bolting about here in the dark——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We want to know.

Mr. CULLOM. Undertaking to pass a resolution as to a matter about which we know nothing whatever.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We desire to find out something.

Mr. CULLOM. We do not know whether the Attorney-General——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We want to find out.

Mr. CULLOM. We do not know whether the Attorney-General is prosecuting the railroad companies or whatever corporations may be engaged in these practices, if any. Now, let us find out some of the facts——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We should like to find out. That is what we want.

Mr. CULLOM. Without publicly asking for a report to be sent here by a resolution which in a way seems to create the impression that the Attorney-General is not doing his duty.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That has been suggested by the other side.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me we ought first to ascertain the facts.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask one question of the Senator from Arkansas? If Mr. Hearst has presented certain evidence to the Attorney-General which he thinks it important the Senate should know, why does he not present it to the Senate also?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I can not speak for Mr. Hearst. I am speaking for myself. In view of the fact that newspapers allege that more than three months ago a statement was made to the Attorney-General that Mr. Hearst had evidence which he believed sufficient to convict these people of this crime, and the papers say this has been in the hands of the Attorney-General during these three months, I, as a member of the Senate, would like to know, and I presume all Senators would like to know what this evidence is, and then they can make up their own minds whether or not it is sufficient to reach the case.

Mr. HOAR. My question is this: Supposing Mr. Hearst to feel as he does, why does he not send the information to the Senate?

If I may be pardoned for one moment, if a citizen has in his possession evidence in regard to the conduct of certain public corporations which he thinks should be the foundation of legislation or which would instruct us in legislating, why does he not give it to us himself, if he is interested in the matter, or why does not the Senator from Arkansas ask Mr. Hearst to give it to him? The Senate is not the grand inquest of the country. The House of Representatives is the grand inquest, and if there is failure of duty on the part of the Attorney-General, that body is to inquire into it. The Senate is not a judicial tribunal clothed with criminal jurisdiction. That is vested in the courts. So all that the Senate has a right to ask for, unless we are sitting as a court of impeachment of somebody, is for information that will help us in legislating.

Now, if this information in the possession of a citizen will help us in legislating, why should we go to another department of the Government and make them tell us what the citizen has told them he has? I do not see why the gentleman to whom the Senator refers does not send it to us if he wants us to know it, or if the Senator wants us to know it, why he does not ask him for it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator inquires of me why I do not ask Mr. Hearst for this information. The Senate of the United States has the right to direct the Attorney-General, as an officer, a servant of the United States, to send to the Senate any information he has.

Mr. HOAR. Where does it get that——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator will allow me to answer one part of his question at a time I will be obliged to him.

We have no authority to direct any private citizen to furnish information here. We have no control over them. The point is simply this: This evidence is in the hands of the Attorney-General. The suggestion has been made here that the Senate ought not to take it out of the hands of the Attorney-General. There is no proposition to take it out of his hands. I have no desire that it shall be taken out of his hands, but it is a great question, one that is challenging the attention of Senators all the time, and if the Attorney-General has information bearing upon this important question, I see no reason why the Senate should not have it, and I do not understand why gentlemen on the other side of the Senate Chamber should undertake to get away from this question of getting information and undertake to make it a motion to criticise the Attorney-General or to criticise Mr. Hearst. It seems to me we ought to determine whether or not the Senate wants this information.

Mr. McCOMAS. Does the Senator know when the petition was referred to the district attorney?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No, I do not know; I am not criticising the Attorney-General; I am not finding fault with the Attorney-General. If I was finding fault with him, then I would want to inquire about all those details. What I said is that this information, as alleged by newspapers, was furnished to the Attorney-General three months ago, and I should like for the Senate now to take up the matter, so that the country and the Senate may know what the facts are.

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator wants the information furnished to the Attorney-General. That was the petition of Mr. Hearst.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No; it was not.

Mr. McCOMAS. That was the petition of Mr. Hearst.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No; it was not.

Mr. McCOMAS. The resolution says so.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. You are misinformed.

Mr. McCOMAS. It says that on October 4 the sworn petition was filed by Mr. Hearst.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If you will read the whole of it, you will find that you are not stating it correctly.

Mr. McCOMAS. It says the evidence proffered by Mr. Hearst was submitted to the Attorney-General and submitted to the district attorney. Has the Senator information as to the fact that it was submitted? Because if it was, and when it was, is as important as what it was, to warrant the Senate in adopting this resolution.

Whereas a protracted interval has elapsed—

Now, there are two things—

A protracted interval has elapsed since the filing of the petition and the submission of such evidence.

The resolution tells us that the petition was filled by Mr. Hearst on October 4. Can the Senator tell the Senate when the evidence was submitted to the district attorney by Mr. Hearst, or whether in fact he ever submitted the evidence to the district attorney?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Attorney-General can tell us that when he answers the resolution.

Mr. McCOMAS. I think the Senator from Arkansas would do well to strike out the third whereas and thus escape the unjust imputation upon the district attorney and the Attorney-General.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him long enough to say a word?

Mr. McCOMAS. I will yield now to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Wisconsin be kind enough to allow me to ask a question that may throw some light upon this question?

Mr. SPOONER. Of whom?

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. SPOONER. I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts who first objected to the passage of this resolution to say that he had investigated it since and that he had information which led him to know or to feel that it would be unwise to disclose the Government's case, or to show its hand, or something along that line. Possibly he can give us light on the question, which we are all asking, as to when this evidence was submitted, or whether any evidence was submitted.

Mr. LODGE. I dislike to state that the Senator from South Carolina could ever be inaccurate, but that is not what I said.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am trying to give the substance or the meaning and not the exact words.

Mr. LODGE. I said nothing resembling it. I said I had considered the resolution and examined it myself.

Mr. TILLMAN. And had information.

Mr. LODGE. I said nothing about having information. I said I had considered the resolution since I objected to it, and had examined it and was satisfied——

Mr. TILLMAN. I will now ask the Senator from Massachusetts, with the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin, if he has any information from the Attorney-General's Office as to whether any evidence has been submitted by Mr. Hearst or anybody else?

Mr. LODGE. I have had no information. I assume that the Attorney-General is doing his duty, and I do not propose to question that he is doing his duty until I have something more to go upon than a vague statement in a resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am satisfied now that nobody here seems to know what we are all seeking to know. We recognize that there has been a petition filed, and there is an assertion in this resolution that a protracted interval has intervened following the filing of the petition, but nobody knows whether any evidence was ever submitted, and until we get information on that subject, I submit to the Senator from Arkansas that we had better defer action upon this resolution and not be unjust to the Attorney-General. He says himself he does not want to do anybody injustice, and I am sure there is nobody here, certainly on this side, and everybody knows there is nobody on the other side, who would do the Attorney-General an injustice. It is merely a question, it appears to me, whether we are honest with ourselves, and whether you gentlemen who are introducing changes in the tariff laws and opposing joint resolutions changing the tariff laws on the same subject in regard to this coal strike really mean anything or intend to do anything. We are trying to get some light on that subject, and that is the whole of this matter.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, only a moment. I do not think there is any foundation for the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas that anyone has criticised Mr. Hearst. I think Mr. Hearst did his duty as a citizen of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I was unfortunate in the use of language if I made any statement of that sort. I said I did not see any reason why an effort to criticise the Attorney-General or to bring Mr. Hearst into the controversy should divert us from the resolution itself.

Mr. SPOONER. The only way Mr. Hearst has been brought into the controversy is by having his name mentioned in the resolution itself as having filed the petition and submitted evidence. It was a very proper thing for him to file the petition and a perfectly proper thing for him to submit the evidence, if he concluded to do it. It was a very proper thing for the Attorney-General to grant the petition, if it appears he did, and to refer it to the district attorney in New York in order that Mr. Hearst might there, where they both live, submit the evidence. I think, too, it has been a very proper course on the part of Mr. Hearst that he has allowed the evidence submitted to remain unpublished in the hands of the Department of Justice. Mr. Hearst at any time could have given this evidence to the public through the columns of his newspapers. He wisely abstained from doing so, and the motive which could very properly induce him to abstain is one which, I think, should induce the Senate to abstain in the present state of our information.

I knew nothing of this resolution until this morning. I have assumed that the Attorney-General is prosecuting his duty.

The Senator asked the Senator from Maryland how long, in his opinion, it ought to take the Attorney-General to prepare this case or to satisfy himself as to the bringing of a suit. That is a question upon which no lawyer can form an opinion who has not the matter in hand. Such investigations sometimes take a long time. It is not merely a prima facie case always. Especially where a lawyer is bringing suit against men with unlimited capital, who have built around themselves, through the assistance of most skillful and able lawyers, every possible safeguard, he desires to thoroughly understand what he can do and to thoroughly explore the whole situation before he puts the matter into court. He wants to be reasonably certain, as a lawyer, that he can succeed.

Although we have, as the Senator from Arkansas says, power in a general way to direct the Attorney-General, we have never been in the habit of directing the Attorney-General to disclose to the public evidence which he has accumulated and which he intends to use in the prosecution of a suit pending or to be brought. The Attorney-General is prosecuting a vast number of cases throughout the United States for counterfeiting and for all manner of offenses. The Senate never has assumed that it can direct this judicial officer, this Government prosecutor, to lay before the defendant and before the world the evidence upon which he proposes to bring a suit or upon which he proposes to secure a conviction or a verdict or judgment or decree in favor of the Government. It is one of those matters of which the Attorney-General must be the judge.

If it were known that the Attorney-General has decided that the evidence submitted by Mr. Hearst is insufficient to warrant the bringing of a suit, then there would be some reason in the proposition that the evidence submitted to him by Mr. Hearst should be given to the public in order that the public might judge for itself whether the Attorney-General had acted wisely or unwisely, and it would not require the intervention of the Senate, either, to lay it before the public; Mr. Hearst could do it any morning that he saw fit.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me a question right there?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. How is the Senate to ascertain whether the Attorney-General has arrived at such a conclusion or not? It has been three months since this matter was brought to his attention. I am judging simply by what I saw in the papers. I have no information further about it than that the matter has been referred to the district attorney in New York. Now, if the district attorney in New York has reported that this evidence in his opinion was not sufficient and if that should be the condition in the Attorney-General's Office, there would be an exact compliance with the condition suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is putting no question to the Attorney-General to ascertain the status of this matter. He is assuming that the Attorney-General has decided not to bring the suit and therefore asks him to lay before the public the evidence submitted by Mr. Hearst. The resolution is based on that assumption.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator does me an injustice when he attributes that assumption to me.

Mr. SPOONER. I speak of the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is nothing in the resolution which warrants that assumption. It is simply a request for information upon a great question in which the Senate is interested.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, well——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I want to say again that I did not intend by this resolution to take the matter out of the hands of the Attorney-General. I simply believe that the Senate of the United States is entitled to know what steps are being taken and what progress is being had, and this would not in any way interfere with him in the discharge of his duty.

Mr. SPOONER. What the public is interested in, and what the Attorney-General is interested in, and what the Senate is interested in, is in determining, through the Attorney-General's investigation, whether this conspiracy exists or not, and in dissolving and destroying it if it exists.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I agree to that.

Mr. SPOONER. It is interested in that. That is the object, if there is any honest purpose in this proceeding.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is right.

Mr. SPOONER. It is not to exploit before the country partial or fragmentary evidence tending to support the charge of monopolies and conspiracies. The Attorney-General ought to be permitted, on the assumption that he is doing his duty, to follow this thing, using the evidence submitted by Mr. Hearst as far as it goes, acquiring such further evidence as it is possible for him to acquire, taking the time necessary to enable him, in a lawyer-like way, doing his duty by the Government and people, to accomplish it, to get at the truth, to prepare himself for trial, and then to bring his suit and press it to a conclusion.

It is not the function of the United States Senate, nor is it in the interest of the public, to hurry the lawyer of the Government to a decision before he is ready as a lawyer to decide, or to call upon him to give to the public partial evidence or evidence a portion of which he intends to use in a prosecution.

If I had known of this resolution before it came up I would not have hesitated to talk with the Attorney-General about it. There is no one who will not be glad to learn, if it be the truth that there is such a conspiracy, that it is amenable to the laws of the United States and that the strong arm of this Government in a proper judicial proceeding conducted by the Attorney-General can be used to destroy it. But that is not the object of this resolution. I think my friend ought not to press the resolution at this time until something further is learned as to what the status of this matter is.

Mr. BACON. I desire, before the Senator takes his seat, to say to him that I quite agree with the last remark he made; and if the Senator, or some one, will be prepared to give us the information to-morrow as to the status in the Attorney-General's Office——

Mr. SPOONER. I am not a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BACON. I am speaking of some one.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator can inquire of the Attorney-General. If I see him, I will inquire of him, but I do not enter into any agreement about it.

Mr. BACON. The Senator did not permit me to conclude. I was going to make a suggestion. I desire for myself that the information shall be had from the Attorney-General's Office, and I say very frankly, if the Attorney-General shall state that they are engaged in making further inquiry, I myself am content that it shall rest there.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the resolution should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee can make the proper inquiry.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. I make that motion.

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to suggest that the resolution shows on its face that the Attorney-General is engaged in the prosecution of this investigation. The resolution recites that Mr. Hearst has presented to the Attorney-General a petition asking the privilege of submitting testimony to the Department of Justice in support of certain charges which are named in the resolution. The resolution further recites that subsequently the Attorney-General referred that to the United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, and it further recites that Mr. Hearst appeared before the United States district attorney for New York and there presented the testimony which he desired the Department of Justice to investigate. That is all it recites. We are not told when this occurred.

This is a most serious charge, as has been well said and repeatedly said by those who have spoken in this debate. We are bound to assume that the Attorney-General, being responsible for such a prosecution as he is asked here to bring, would want to thoroughly examine the whole subject, and in that behalf he would have to consider not only the testimony of Mr. Hearst, but other testimony which he might think it desirable to have. He might prefer his own judgment as to the competency of the testimony and the sufficiency of testimony, he being a lawyer of long experience, to the judgment of Mr. Hearst, who is not, I believe, a practicing attorney at all. He would not only want to examine testimony as to the fact, in which he might differ from Mr. Hearst, but he would want, if he thought there was testimony to be had that would support these charges, to examine other questions. He would not only look at it as to the sufficiency of testimony and as to its availability, but he would also have to consider jurisdictional questions. Where should this suit be brought? What court will be the court of competent jurisdiction to entertain such a proceeding as is here suggested?

The resolution recites that he not only referred it to the district attorney, through whom, at New York, he would bring the suit, in all probability, but it recites that he directed the district attorney to examine as to the testimony whereby the charges were to be supported and then to make a report to him on the same. Does any Senator imagine that the district attorney would simply send him this evidence the moment it might be submitted by Mr. Hearst? We all know that he would be derelict in his duty if he did not make a thorough examination of the whole subject, an examination not only as to what testimony could be produced and its availability and its competency, but also an examination as to the forum in which it should be presented and the character of procedure which should be resorted to. That can not be done in a day.

Senators have spoken about an unusual delay, and it has been stated that a protracted period has elapsed. This resolution recites that to be the case. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that the Attorney-General has taken any unreasonable time. I do not believe that any careful lawyer such as the Attorney-General of the United States should be, such as the district attorney for the southern district of New York should be, and such as we know him to be, could be expected to examine the testimony, to examine all the jurisdictional questions, and make a report, considering how much other business they must of necessity meanwhile be attending to, before the time that has now elapsed.

The petition was presented to the Attorney-General in October. This is only the beginning of January. It is a suit which if it is brought at all will challenge the strongest interests in this country and will lead undoubtedly to one of the most earnest contests that it would be possible to have in a court of justice. An Attorney-General would be derelict in his duty in contemplating the bringing of such a suit if he did not fortify himself not only in securing the testimony, and all the testimony attainable, but also in examining every phase of a legal nature that will attend the prosecution of this inquiry.

I think, therefore, on the face of it, the resolution recites that which shows that it would be improvident for us to adopt it at this time. I am not going to stop to repeat what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] so well said, that if the Attorney-General is to bring this suit, if he determines to bring the suit as a result of the inquiry, nothing could be more ill advised, if we are in earnest in desiring to support him, than to require him now to present all this testimony in the Senate of the United States, which would be the same thing as furnishing copies of it all to those who are to be the defendants in this litigation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that during the remainder of the session the Committee on the Judiciary shall have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be allowed to sit during the sessions of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. FORAKER. In the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], who has had charge of this bill, I have been requested to take charge of it. When we adjourned for the vacation it is my recollection that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] was about to address the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is correct.

Mr. FORAKER. I would like to inquire of him whether he is now prepared to proceed, and if he so desires I yield for that purpose.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will give way for two or three minutes to allow me to ask for an agreement on the militia bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I agree that the bill may be temporarily laid aside, without prejudice, its consideration to be resumed.

Mr. BATE. It is not to displace this bill in any way?

Mr. FORAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly not.

Mr. FORAKER. The bill is not to be displaced. It will not be prejudiced by temporarily laying it aside. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont, however, how much time he will probably take.

Mr. PROCTOR. Oh, not many minutes.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, between the divers and sundry matters of the morning hour and the question of three embryo States as the unfinished business, the corps of militia bill seems to have a very small chance. I desire to ask if there can not be some agreement made when a vote can be taken.

So far as I can judge, there is no serious opposition to the bill, except to the twenty-fourth section. I certainly want to have a fair chance given for the discussion of that section; but I should like to ask if an agreement can not be made by which some day shall be fixed when a vote can be taken on the amendment and on the bill, provided that we are able in the morning hour to give one, two, or three hours—whatever those in favor of the amendment ask—to its discussion.

I ask the Senate to agree that we may have a vote on Thursday or Friday, provided we can get the bill up in the morning hour, so as to give those in favor of the amendment such time—one hour or two hours—as they may desire for its discussion.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am not authorized to speak, except in a personal way, and also to reflect the opinion of two or three Senators sitting around me. It is an impossibility now to answer the Senator's proposition, by reason of the absence of several Senators who have intimated or expressed their desire to be heard upon the twenty-fourth section. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] wants to be heard on that section, and also on other parts of the bill. I do not know what other objections he may have to the measure. I know, however, that he does object to the twenty-fourth section.

My objection to the bill is limited to the twenty-fourth section and such other parts of the bill as relate to that section. With that out of the bill I would be prepared to vote to-day or at any other time when the Senate might find it convenient to give it attention. But, in the absence of Senators who have expressed their intention to be heard upon it, I certainly would not feel authorized to give any consent either for myself or for them.

I would suggest to the Senator from Vermont that the time of the Senate under the unanimous-consent agreement which has been made is so occupied that it is an impossibility now to anticipate how much time can be given to the discussion of the twenty-fourth section. I think it is true that without the twenty-fourth section there would be no trouble whatever about coming to a speedy agreement as to the bill. Of course, I recognize the right of the committee and of Senators to insist upon the twenty-fourth section, and I do not desire that there should be anything more than the opportunity given for Senators who desire to be heard to present what they consider a vital objection to it.

I repeat the suggestion I made to the Senator, that in the condition of the business of the Senate under the unanimous-consent agreement it is an impossibility to anticipate how much time can be given to the discussion of this bill during any portion of the morning hour, because that is the only part of the session of the Senate which, under the unanimous-consent agreement, is available for its discussion.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, of course it is uncertain how much time can be given, but my request was——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina rises to a question of order. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I desire to know whether it is not the rule of the Senate that at 2 o'clock the unfinished business shall be laid before the Senate?

Mr. PROCTOR. It was temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair laid the unfinished business before the Senate and it was temporarily laid aside.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg pardon. I did not know that the unfinished business had been laid before the Senate.

Mr. PROCTOR. I asked that an agreement might be made, subject to the provision that such time as the Senators might now ask for debate on the twenty-fourth section would be available during the morning hour. I understand the Senator from Georgia to object.

The Senate understands very well that unless this bill, which all seem to favor in the main, is soon enacted it will be of little force for the next two years on account of the early meeting of the legislatures. In fact, many of them have biennial sessions, and it will be of little force unless it can be passed within a very few days. I regret very much that we are not able to come to an agreement. I wish to give all the time Senators can ask for.

Mr. BACON. I will state to the Senator that I myself have consumed all the time which I propose to take, and I am not making the objection in my interest at all.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. Before the Senate passes from the consideration of the militia bill, I desire to have the consent of the Senate to present three new sections, which I will offer as an amendment to the bill. I ask that they may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will lie on the table, and be printed.

ANTHRACITE COAL.

Mr. VEST. My attention was called away when we reached the order of concurrent resolutions. I now offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield that that may be done on the same condition that I yielded to the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Missouri will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to prepare and report a bill amending "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, so that the tariff duty shall be removed from anthracite coal and the same be placed on the free list.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the resolution submitted by the Senator from Missouri be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I will ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On that question the Senator from Missouri demands the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

Mr. LODGE. Let the resolution be read again.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, when I yielded to the Senator from Missouri I did so upon the supposition that it was simply to have a resolution presented and acted upon as to which there would be no debate or controversy of any kind. I do not object to further yielding until the roll may be called, but I want to renew my statement that I was yielding with the distinct understanding that it is without any prejudice to the unfinished business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, certainly, Mr. President. It is understood that the unfinished business will be proceeded with.

Mr. FORAKER. I know everybody says "certainly," but I want the RECORD to say "certainly."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have no objection to the RECORD saying "certainly," and to the Senator saying "certainly," and to all the rest of us saying "certainly."

Mr. VEST. Let the resolution go over until to-morrow. I have no objection to its going over.

Mr. ALDRICH. The motion to refer will go over with the resolution, I take it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Both will go over together.

Mr. ALDRICH. And it will come up for discussion at the proper time, I presume?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is understood that the resolution goes over, coupled with the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I regretted very much that I did not have the opportunity to join the subcommittee and visit the two Territories of Arizona and New Mexico when they were out there taking testimony. One can always get a better view of the situation, understand the facts better, and always acquire more information by studying the locus in quo in the light of the evidence that is taken on the spot.

This question of admitting new States into the Union is one of the most important questions that can possibly come before the Congress of the United States. It is not only important on account of the intrinsic matter involved in the question, it is not only important because we ought to consider well whether a Territory is fitted to become a member of the Union, but it is also important for the reason that if we admit a State and make a mistake, the act is irrevocable and unchangeable. We may make mistakes in respect to other legislation, commit grave and serious errors, those we can easily correct by subsequent legislation, by repeal or amendment, but when it comes to the matter of admitting a Territory into the Union as a State, when that fact is once accomplished, we are utterly helpless, and if a mistake is made the whole country suffers from the effect of it.

In view of the importance of the question, I think that party platforms ought to have little to do with it. We have heard much in this debate about the fact that the platforms of the two parties have indorsed the admission of these Territories. The most you can say about these party platforms is that they are of an advisory character. The members of the several political conventions are not acting under oath. They are there simply to carry out certain political behests of their party, chief of all to nominate candidates. But the rule established and adopted by a party convention can never be controlling in this body or in the other House of Congress. The question is of too serious a character for that.

The question of admitting new States into the Union, Mr. President, should be considered from two standpoints, both in respect to its bearing on the States and also in respect to its effect on the people of the Territory seeking admission. As a rule there are two classes of men who are chiefly eager for early statehood. First, there are the prominent politicians, who are eager to appear in the Senate or in the House and eager to hold State offices. But this is not the most serious matter. There is another class, the promoter class, who want State or local bonds issued, who have business enterprises they want promoted, and they find themselves hampered under a Territorial system of government. It is these schemers and these promoters who are oftentimes the most menacing, the most dangerous, and the most alarming to these new communities.

In the earlier stages of the growth and development of a Territory we know by experience in the past that people pour in from all parts of the country, all classes of people—some good, intelligent, able American citizens, and others, again, of a worthless, shiftless class.

Now, in a Territory it oftentimes happens that in the first instance, or for a while, this shiftless, irresponsible class predominate, or if they do not predominate in numbers, they have a controlling power. Therefore, Mr. President, it is a good plan to withhold statehood from these communities until the population becomes assimilated, until the dross is separated from the gold, and until they become settled and well-organized communities.

Congress has recognized the importance of this fact, and has been obliged, in order to restrain reckless speculation in the Territories, to enact restrictive legislation. The act of July 30, 1886, Twenty-fourth Statutes, commonly known as the Harrison Act, was passed to cure an evil that was then existing in the Territories—a tendency to engage in speculative enterprises, a tendency to run in debt, both on the part of the Territories and on the part of the local communities. In this connection, Mr. President, I beg leave to quote the most important provisions of that act bearing upon this subject. They are as follows:

SEC. 2. That no Territory of the United States now or hereafter to be organized, or any political or municipal corporation or subdivision of any such Territory, shall hereafter make any subscription to the capital stock of any incorporated company, or company or association having corporate powers, or in any manner loan its credit to or use it for the benefit of any such company or association, or borrow any money for the use of any such company or association.

SEC. 3. That no law of any Territorial legislature shall authorize any debt to be contracted by or on behalf of such Territory except in the following cases: To meet a casual deficit in the revenues, to pay the interest upon the Territorial debt, to suppress insurrections, or to provide for the public defense, except that in addition to any indebtedness created for such purposes the legislature may authorize a loan for the erection of penal, charitable, or educational institutions for such Territory, if the total indebtedness of the Territory is not thereby made to exceed 1 per cent upon the assessed value of the taxable property in such Territory as shown by the last general assessment for taxation. And nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the refunding of any existing indebtedness of such Territory or of any political or municipal corporation, county, or other subdivision therein.

SEC. 4. That no political or municipal corporation, county, or other subdivision in any of the Territories of the United States shall ever become indebted in any manner or for any purpose to any amount in the aggregate, including existing indebtedness, exceeding 4 per cent on the value of the taxable property within such corporation, county, or subdivision, to be ascertained by the last assessment for Territorial and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness; and all bonds or obligations in excess of such amount given by such corporation shall be void: That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to affect the validity of any act of any Territorial legislature heretofore enacted, or of any obligations existing or contracted thereunder, nor to preclude the issuing of bonds already contracted for in pursuance of express provisions of law; nor to prevent any Territorial legislature from legalizing the acts of any county, municipal corporation, or subdivision of any Territory as to any bonds heretofore issued or contracted to be issued.

As I said a moment ago, Congress found itself obliged to pass this restraining legislation. But for the fact of that statute on our statute books there would have been no limit to which the schemers and promoters in some of these Territories would have increased the debt of the Territories as well as the debts of the municipalities.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should like to ask the Senator in this connection whether it is not the case that in certain States, some twenty or twenty-five or more years ago, the people of the States and of the counties through which certain railroads were being built were plunged deeply into debt, which rested upon them and their children for almost a generation?

Mr. NELSON. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. BATE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. BATE. Is there not an act of Congress providing that as to the Territories they shall not incur an indebtedness beyond 4 per cent of the valuation of their taxable property, and that what is known as the Harrison Act regulates that very thing?

Mr. NELSON. I have already quoted the act to which the Senator from Tennessee refers. What the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] states is undoubtedly true. I remember in the case of Minnesota that it had no sooner been admitted into the Union than railroad speculation became rampant and ran riot, and the State incurred a debt of upward of $5,000,000 for the purpose of building railroads. While not a single mile of road was ever built under that issue of bonds, the State suffered from it for years after my arrival there, and was obliged to pay that indebtedness with a large amount of interest.

Mr. President, in spite of this wholesome restraining statute, to which I have called your attention, we find that both in the case of Arizona and New Mexico those Territories have exceeded and overstepped this limit, and they have come here to Congress and asked Congress to legalize their indebtedness incurred over and beyond the restraint of this statute.

They have come here for another purpose, Mr. President. After they have legalized these bonds, they have come here and by legislation in one case actually saddled local municipal debt, county, township, and school district debt on the Territory, instead of retaining it as a local municipal debt as it was incurred in the first instance.

Taking the Territory of Arizona as an example, that Territory came here in 1890 and secured the passage of a law for the refunding of its Territorial debt. By that law there was provision made for the appointment of a funding commission, which was not only authorized and empowered to refund in new Territorial bonds the debt of the Territory, but it was also authorized to take up, refund, and convert into a debt of the Territory numerous bonds and obligations of the different municipalities. I will call attention to one feature of this statute bearing upon this question. It is as follows:

The boards of supervisors of the counties, the municipal and school authorities, are hereby authorized and directed to report to the loan commissioners of the Territory their bonded and outstanding indebtedness, and said loan commissioners may, on written demand, require an official report from the board of supervisors of counties, the municipal or school authorities, of their bonded and outstanding indebtedness, and said loan commissioners shall provide for the redeeming or refunding of the county, municipal, and school district indebtedness, upon the official demand of said authorities, in the same manner as other Territorial indebtedness, and they shall issue bonds for any indebtedness now allowed, or that may be hereafter allowed by law, to said county, municipality, or school district, official demand by said authorities.

Such a thing was never heard of in any of the States of the Union, and no State would tolerate such an act as to have the debt of a county, a city, or a school district, a mere local municipal indebtedness, refunded and converted and made a charge upon the State. Yet that is exactly what was done in the case of Arizona and exactly the same as was attempted to be done in the case of New Mexico. Under this act they have issued in Arizona, I think, in the neighborhood of a million and a half of bonds, part of them for Territorial indebtedness, but a large part for local municipal indebtedness. The same transaction has occurred in the case of New Mexico, only there they did not succeed in carrying it quite so far.

In the case of New Mexico in January, 1897, an act (29 Stat. L.) was passed to legalize a large number of bonds—county, town, school-district, and municipal bonds—that had been issued in defiance of the law of Congress and that had been adjudged void by the courts. They succeeded at the instance of the Delegate from New Mexico in having those bonds legalized. Subsequently a bill was brought into Congress at the instance of the Delegate from that Territory, and a bill was finally passed in some form providing for the refunding of those bonds, and providing for the saddling of the entire indebtedness of those local municipalities upon the Territory of New Mexico. The bill was of a general character, on its face, for all the Territories, but its real object was to reach the case of New Mexico.

Here we have two instances to show how prone the people have been in these Territories to violate the inhibition contained in the Harrison Act which I have quoted. We have shown here how quick and ready they are to incur indebtedness—indebtedness for little municipalities, townships, counties, and school districts that are not able to pay it. Then when they have these bonds issued, to make them good, to make money out of them, they saddle them onto the Territory at large. I remember well, for I was a member of this body at the time, when the bill came in here attempting to saddle these local New Mexican debts upon the Territory of New Mexico. I was one of two Senators here who objected to the passage of that bill, and I am glad to say that it was defeated.

In view of what they have attempted to do in the past, notwithstanding these restrictions, what may we not expect in the future if they get a free hand under a State government? We have here an illustration, Mr. President, and we have it in many other instances, as the Senator from Indiana mentioned a while ago and as we had it in Minnesota, of how the people of a new community—in their early and formative stages, before they have become assimilated and have secured a permanent and reliable population, how prone they are to run into debt, and how important it is to have the restraining hand of Congress upon them, and that restraining hand can only remain as long as they are in a Territorial condition.

Hence I say that, outside of the politicians, outside of the railroad and other promoters, it is for the interest of the people of the Territories that they remain Territories until they attain a safe and strong condition; it is for their interest to have the protection of the Government of the United States and of the Congress of the whole nation. The people of a Territory have not only the advantage that we protect them from such methods and schemes, but they have another advantage. While they are in their Territorial condition the Government of the United States pays a large share of their governmental expenses. We pay their governor, their secretary, and their other executive officers; we pay the judges and the officers of the courts; we pay the expenses of the legislature; in other words, we relieve them of a great deal of the tax burdens of government, so that the people of a Territory get double relief—relief against promoters and relief from burdens of taxation.

As a matter of fact, it is no hardship to a people to remain in a Territorial condition. They have well-organized governments; they have their executive; they have their legislative, and they have their judicial departments. They can organize themselves into local political communities, establish townships, establish county governments, create school districts, build roads and bridges, build railroads; in fact, they can accomplish in an industrial and economic way nearly all that the people can in a well-organized State.

We have an illustration of how little an embargo the lack of a State government places upon the energies of the American people, when proper conditions exist, in the case of the Territory of Oklahoma. To-day that Territory has a population of, perhaps, over 400,000, and it has only been a Territory since 1890. Compare that with the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and you can see in the one case there has been great growth and progress, while in the other there has not been; and yet Oklahoma has had no other or greater political advantages than the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and her people have been as much handicapped politically, if any handicap there be, as have been the people of these other Territories.

The question of statehood involves, first of all, the fitness of the people of a Territory in a material, moral, and intellectual sense to become members of the American Union. Is the Territory properly developed, is it so populated, is the character of its population such as to entitle it to statehood and representation in both Houses of Congress? In respect to representation in the Senate, where all the States are on a footing of equality, a Territory seeking admission ought in area, in population, in present and prospective development, and education be on a par with the average of the other States of the American Union. In other words, the equilibrium of the States ought to be preserved and maintained in the Senate. If a Territory falls materially short of this standard it is unjust and unfair to the other States to admit it into the Union on a footing of equality. If a Territory is comparatively undeveloped and in a stagnant condition; if its population is largely illiterate, and if the population is limited, it ought not to have equal representation in the Senate, and hence ought not to be a State. Other conditions being favorable, Mr. President, a Territory to be admitted as a State ought at least to have a population sufficient to equal the ratio required for one Representative in Congress.

Mr. DUBOIS. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow an interruption?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. Can the Senator name a Territory which has been admitted as a State which had at the time of admission a number of people entitling it to representation in Congress?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Utah.

Mr. NELSON. I will say to my friend from Idaho that I have not looked over all of them, but the Senator must remember that the ratio of representation has fluctuated at each census. What is the ratio now was not the ratio years ago nor in the earlier history of the country. Besides, supposing in some instances in the past we have made the mistake in admitting States with an insufficient number of people to give them a Representative, that is no reason why we should continue it in the future; that is no argument in its favor.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will ask the Senator if Minnesota at the time of her admission had enough people to entitle her to representation in the House of Representatives?

Mr. NELSON. Minnesota had in 1860, two years after its admission, 172,023, and the ratio at that time was 127,381, so it no doubt had the full ratio in 1858.

There is another fact I couple with the population qualification. Even if a Territory has not enough people to entitle it to admission, if the condition of its soil and its climate and the character of its people are such that in the near future it is likely to have the necessary population, then no harm is done. But where a Territory, on account of its soil and climate and the character of its people, is in such a condition that it is stagnant and not likely to fill the ratio of population for many years to come, the question is entirely different.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Idaho whether he means to infer that no State which has been admitted to the Union had, at the time it was admitted, sufficient people to entitle it to one Representative in Congress? Is that the meaning of his inquiry?

Mr. DUBOIS. There were very few. I think the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] named about the only one.

Mr. HOAR. Dakota had.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Dakota had two Representatives.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, on the contrary, if that is the assumption of the Senator—and I can see no point to his question otherwise——

Mr. DUBOIS. They were very few—exceedingly few.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On the contrary, Mr. President, the rule was adopted in the case of Kansas, and Kansas was so admitted under that rule, and most of the other States that have been since admitted have been admitted under that rule until there came the panic in favor of the admission of Territories in a bunch. Most of the States have had enough people to entitle them to one Representative in Congress. Vermont, when she was admitted, had people enough; but the case of Kansas was, I think, the first where the rule of enough people to furnish a unit for representation in the House of Representatives was adopted. It was followed in that case and in the case of many other States. I do not think it is large enough, and neither did the framers of the ordinance of 1787 think so.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that the State he so ably represents——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Thank you.

Mr. DUBOIS. Did not have a sufficient number of people, nor did the State of Illinois, from which I came, nor any of those great States in the Mississippi Valley, and with very few exceptions no State has had enough people to give it a Representative in the other House under the apportionment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will not interrupt the Senator from Minnesota further.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that in nearly all the cases he has in mind the Territories have been thrifty, prosperous, growing communities, and in nearly all instances, even where there was a technical insufficiency of population to equal the ratio of representation, they secured that population in a very short period. But here we have the case of two Territories—Arizona and New Mexico—especially New Mexico, that is one of the oldest-settled communities in this country, and yet to-day it has a population, as I shall show before I conclude, barely enough to respond to the ratio necessary for a Representative in Congress.

Mr. President, the importance of this question rests in this: When we admit a Territory as a State we give that Territory here in this body a full representation, equal to that of the largest State in the Union. Under these circumstances it seems to me that such a Territory, when we give it that representation in this body, ought to have a population at least equal to the ratio for one single member in the House before it is admitted into the Union.

In the next place, Mr. President, the people of a Territory seeking admission ought to be so developed intellectually and politically, so grounded in all the essential elements of self-government, that they can be safely trusted with all the functions and duties of statehood; and this is a matter which not only concerns the people of the whole country, the sisterhood of States, but also most vitally concerns the Territory itself.

It is a great injustice to a youth to entail upon him the duties of manhood while he is still in his teens, still in a state of immaturity, and so it is an injustice to a Territory while it is still immature, still in a state of pupilage, still unripe by education and material development, to entail upon it the duties and burdens of statehood. Of this question Congress is better able to judge than the people of the Territory.

If the people of a Territory are largely illiterate; if they are deficient in the necessary elements of self-government; if the resources of the country are but slightly developed or in a stagnant or embryo state; if the mass of the people are in such a condition as to be easily misled by designing and unscrupulous men, then, for its own good, for its own safety, and its own protection the Territory ought not to be admitted into the sisterhood of States, for while it is in a Territorial condition the people are safe-guarded and protected and under the care of the Federal Government, which will see that the people suffer no harm.

Mr. President, after having stated this—these general principles, which I regard as fundamental and which ought to control us in this matter—I shall take up in detail the history of these Territories and show their present condition. As a preliminary I shall refer to a little bit of ancient history in connection with the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, because it furnishes some light and some key to their present condition.

ARIZONA.

First, as to the Territory of Arizona. History relates that it was first crossed by Estovan, a negro slave, and a companion as early as 1539. Coronado, the great explorer of Arizona and New Mexico, crossed the country as early as 1540, and on this journey he visited the so-called Moqui Indian towns in the northern part of the Territory. He returned from his New Mexican trip, through the same country back to Sonora, in 1542. The next explorer to whom history refers is Antonio Espejo, who, in 1583, coming up the Rio Grande, went from thence to the Zuni Indian towns on the border between New Mexico and Arizona, and thence went north to the Moqui towns, and on this trip he found a few Indian tribes raising corn and a few samples of silver and other minerals. In 1598 and again in 1604 Juan Onate entered and explored the country. I might say, Mr. President, in this connection, that he is the one who first colonized and settled New Mexico.

In 1697 Lieutenant Bernal, with a party, gathering at and starting out from near where Tombstone now is, explored the country along the Gila and its tributaries. He found a number of natives, some ranches, irrigating ditches, and some little cultivation. Between 1698 and 1702 a Franciscan friar, Kino by name, came to the Territory, and in 1732—and I call the attention of Senators to this fact—the first Spanish settlement was made under the auspices of two friars. This was on one of the tributaries of the Upper Gila River in the region near Tucson. So you see, as a matter of fact, what is now a part of the Territory of Arizona has actually been settled ever since 1732.

In 1752 a presidio, or fortified camp, of 50 men was established at Tubac, south of Tucson, with some missions. The only settlements in the eighteenth century seem to have been in the south on the Upper Gila and its tributaries, and the region around Tucson. Tucson was first mentioned in 1763; it was made a presidio in 1772 and a town in 1776. Just think of it! It was established as a town as early as the year of the Declaration of Independence. All Spanish and Mexican settlements were within the limits of the Gadsden purchase—the southern part of the country. Father Garces explored the Moqui country in 1777, but was not successful in proselyting or converting the Indians.

The first era of prosperity that came to the country was from 1790 to 1820. After 1822 it entirely disappeared. After the country became a part of Mexico all was demoralized and retrograded. From 1840 to 1846 there is no evidence of any Spanish settlement except at or near Tucson and Tubac. In 1848 Tucson had a population of 750, and Tubac, immediately south of it, had a population of 249 people. In 1851 the first United States Government exploring expedition passed through the country.

From 1858 to 1860 the Butterfield stage line from Marshall, Tex., to San Diego, Cal., was in operation in the Territory. In 1857-58 there were a number of military posts established in the country, but these were all abandoned in 1861 when the Confederates invaded the country. From 1855 to 1860 there was some copper and silver mining in the southern part within the limits of the Gadsden purchase, but it soon subsided.

Gila City, near the Gila River, was once a prosperous mining town which sprang up in 1858, and attained a population of 1,200, but was abandoned and deserted in 1862, and in 1877 it was merely a stage station with a population of 9 people.

In 1861, when the troops were withdrawn, the Apaches were practically masters of the country for more than a year. Nearly all the white settlers were expelled or murdered. The people who were in the country prior to 1861 were regarded by those who were familiar with the facts as a turbulent and lawless set of people, utterly unfit for any kind of orderly government.

In 1856 a convention was held at Tucson, which memorialized Congress for a Territorial government and elected a Delegate to Congress. In 1860 another convention was held at Tucson which adopted a constitution for a State or Territorial government "to remain in force until Congress established a Territorial government." Officials were elected under this constitution, but nothing further was done in the way of maintaining the government under this plan. In 1860 we find that a Delegate was elected to Congress. In 1863 Arizona was finally created a Territory, carved out of New Mexico, of which it had been a part up to that time. When it was created a Territory—and I call the attention of Senators to this point—it had an estimated population, exclusive of Indians, of 6,500, but subsequent censuses show that this was too high and out of all proportion.

In 1861 there was a constitutional convention held at Tucson, which declared the country a part of the Confederate Government and elected Mr. Ouray a Delegate to the Confederate Congress. The Territory was occupied by Confederate forces under Lieutenant-Colonel Baylor in 1861. In 1862 the Union forces from California took possession of the country and expelled the Confederates. In July, 1864, Prescott was founded and made the capital. So you see it is a very old town. A legislature was elected, and Mr. Poston was elected a Delegate to Congress. The legislature met and adopted a civil and mining code. The mining code was based largely upon that of California and the other code upon that of New York.

Territorial censuses were taken. The Territorial census of 1866 showed a population, exclusive of Indians, of 5,522, and the census of 1867, 7,200. Between 1876 and 1884 several Mormon settlements of immigrants from Utah were formed. They are still existing and have been growing since that time.

By the Federal census of 1870 the population was 9,658; 1880, 40,440; 1890, 88,243; 1900, 122,931.

A hundred and seventy years had elapsed since the first settlement in Arizona in 1732, and yet they had a population of only 122,931, and, as I shall proceed to show, a large proportion of those people were Indians.

Arizona has not to-day the population entitling her to a Representative in the House of Representatives. The ratio for a Representative under the last census and Congressional apportionment is 194,182. Under section 2 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, Indians not taxed are not entitled to representation. The census of 1890 shows the total population to be 122,931, and of this number there were Indians not taxed 24,644, leaving entitled to representation only 98,287, and this is only 50.6 per cent of the ratio for a Representative.

The increase from 1890 to 1900 was 34,688. This is at the rate of 39.3 per cent for the ten years' period, or at the rate of 3.93 per cent per year. Allowing the same ratio for the last two years, and distributing the same pro rata among the Indians and whites, the condition now would be about as follows:

Whites	106,012
Indians	26,581
Total	132,593

Or a population entitled to a representation of only 54.6 per cent of the ratio for a Representative. But Arizona, as a matter of fact, has a great deal larger Indian population than the census gives it credit for. Ex-Governor McCord, of Arizona Territory, in his testimony before the committee, testified about the matter of Indian population. He was asked this question:

How many natives—that is, Indians—would you say you have in the Territory?

A. Well, when I was governor I had a census made and we figured it 37,000.

I telephoned the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on this subject, for in the Indian Department it is necessary to have a census of the Indians in order to distribute the annuities and to make the allotments, and I received a reply from him to which I beg leave to call the attention of the Senate:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, December 16, 1902.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Referring to your informal request, by telephone, for certain information, I have the honor to inclose herewith a leaf taken from the annual report of this office for 1901, showing the Indian reservations in Arizona and the area in acres, the total of which you will see is 16,894,437.

But 41,622.65 acres have been allotted to 291 Indians. No other Indians have been allotted in Arizona.

Another leaf taken from the same report is inclosed showing the Indian population of said Territory. It will be seen that, as there stated, the number is 41,139. This includes 20,000 Navahoes; but the Navaho Reservation is partly in New Mexico, and a large number—possibly one-half—of the Navahoes live a greater part of the time at least in New Mexico. If we deduct say 10,000 Navahoes, it will leave 31,139 as the total Indian population of Arizona.

Trusting that this statement will meet your purposes, I am,
Very respectfully, yours,

W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

A total Indian population of 31,139. As Senators who are familiar with the matter know, the Indians do not become citizens till allotments are made. They are not liable to taxation until the land has been allotted to them in severalty, and out of those Indians (31,139) only 291 have received allotments. That will leave a net total of 30,848 Indians, according to the letter and report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to whom allotments have not been made, and who are not citizens and are not taxed and are not entitled to representation.

On this basis the condition as to population in 1901 was this: Total population, census of 1900, 122,933; one year's increase of population, at the ratio from 1890 to 1900, 4.831; total in 1901, 127,764; deduct unallotted Indians, according to the report of the Secretary of the Interior, 30,848, and it leaves a net population in 1901 entitled to representation under the fourteenth amendment of only 96,916, or less than one-half the ratio now required for a Representative in Congress.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. What is the discrepancy between the number reported by the census of 1900 and the number reported by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. NELSON. I think the census made the number of untaxed Indians a little over 24,000, and this, leaving out Indians to whom allotments have been made, makes it over 30,000.

Mr. FORAKER. The recollection of the Senator agrees with my own. I want to ask the Senator how that discrepancy could have occurred unless there was an inaccurate enumeration by the census enumerators.

Mr. NELSON. I can readily see how it comes about, and the Senator can see. When the census enumerator goes around among the Indians and asks the question of the Indians as to who are taxed and who are not taxed, does not the Senator see that it is a question upon which he is not likely to get accurate information? At the Indian Office it is important to maintain an accurate list of the Indians in order that they may know to whom to pay annuities and whom to take care of and what schools to provide and to whom to make allotments.

Now, in the matter of taxation the Senator can readily see the point. Suppose a census enumerator went to the State of Ohio and undertook to enumerate the white people who were taxed and who were not taxed. How liable might he be, although he might have the correct aggregate of population, to make a mistake as to the number taxed and the number not taxed.

Mr. FORAKER. All I desire to do has been accomplished. I understood the Senator to be arguing that these figures, he thinking them more reliable as they come from the Secretary of the Interior, showed that the Census Office figures were inaccurate.

Mr. NELSON. No, sir; I present the two sets of figures, and I am not saying which are inaccurate. I have not yet said that one was inaccurate and the other not. I have simply presented these figures and statements, and I have given the result based on the census and the result based on the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Now the Senator from Ohio, as well as I, can draw his own inference from those figures.

Mr. FORAKER. I wanted the benefit of the opinion of the Senator on the subject, and that is the reason why I interrupted him. I understood the Senator to go to some pains to satisfy me that the figures of the Secretary of the Interior should be regarded as accurate rather than the figures of the census enumerator. I think the Senator is right in that respect.

Mr. NELSON. I have simply put the evidence from these two sources before this body, and the members can judge as well as I can judge. I have not finally——

Mr. FORAKER rose.

Mr. NELSON. I have not finally—if the Senator will give me a chance—figured out the result of these two enumerations.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Interruptions do not bother me a bit.

Mr. FORAKER. I want some information. The Senator appears to have studied this question with very great care. Both sets of figures can not possibly be correct. One or the other is erroneous.

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to ask the Senator which set of figures he thinks is the more accurate—the set given him by the Secretary of the Interior or the set returned by the census enumerator?

Mr. NELSON. I am not prepared to say, absolutely. That is a question which I will submit to the judgment of the Senate. It is my business to give to the Senate facts and arguments rather than my own opinion. My own opinion would not make the thing different one way or the other. Even if I gave my opinion I have not any reason to believe the Senator from Ohio would accept it. If I thought he would accept my opinion about that affirmatively and would be bound by it, I should be more than glad to stretch the point and to give an opinion.

Mr. FORAKER. I have the most profound respect for the Senator and for the Senator's opinion. I thought he was expressing an opinion. I wanted to be sure I understood him.

Mr. NELSON. Like a fair man I was simply aiming to give the Senate an impartial statement, giving the Senate both views in this case, and leaving the Senate to judge which is the more accurate.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to say to the Senator that I am not interrupting him for any idle purpose.

Mr. NELSON. I am not finding fault.

Mr. FORAKER. I have been reading the report of the committee, and they have gone to very great pains to show that they have proved conclusively that the census enumeration was absolutely accurate. I wanted to know if it was possible that a member of the committee, speaking in support of the committee's report, was undertaking to disprove what the committee have shown with great elaboration was just the opposite of what I understood him to say.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the conclusion which the Senator from Ohio seems to draw from the two sets of figures presented by the Senator from Minnesota is correct, it merely shows that the census did not show that there were as many Indians in Arizona as there really are. That is the only conclusion which the Senator can draw.

Mr. FORAKER. We can argue whether the one set of figures is correct or the other. What I wanted to get at was the position of the Senator from Minnesota. I wanted to know whether he was undertaking to satisfy the Senate that the census enumeration was not correct, and in that was flatly contradicting what is contended for by the Senator from Indiana in his very able report.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Even if that were true, the whole extent of the Senator's conclusion is that the census did not give as many Indians in Arizona as there really are; in other words, that there are more Indians there than the census gives.

Mr. FORAKER. The effect of an admission that there is an inaccuracy may be argued at the proper time. I simply wanted to know whether or not there was an admission of inaccuracy in the census enumeration, and I would have followed that with another question, but in view of the sensitiveness of the Senator from Minnesota when I interrogate him, I will wait until he has concluded before I do that. If there should be an inaccuracy in the enumeration of Indians, might there not also be an inaccuracy in the enumeration of white people?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. In other words, are we to be conclusively presumed to believe that there are 5,000 more Indians than the census enumerator reported, and that there is not another white person than those he reported?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, no. There is an inaccuracy on the part of the Senator from Ohio. The difference mathematically is only 4,000. The Senator makes it 5,000 in one minute.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Minnesota said there were about 26,000 reported by the enumerator and thirty thousand eight hundred and some odd reported to him by the Secretary of the Interior. In other words, a difference of about 4,800.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Twenty-six thousand and some hundred, and thirty thousand and some hundred.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Indiana is nearer correct when he says there is a discrepancy of only 4,000 instead of 5,000 than he was in some of the conclusions reached in his report.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The comparative value of the conclusions reached by the report is a question for the judgment of the Senate. The Senator from Ohio makes the point that if there is an inaccuracy in the enumeration of the Indians, and there are really more Indians in the Territory than we have contended for—something we are willing to concede to the Senator—it might also follow that there was an inaccuracy in the enumeration of white people. I think any person will see, even at a casual glance, and will see more clearly as they examine it, that the enumeration of Indians is far more difficult than of white people with settled habitations.

Mr. FORAKER. All that may be true. I was not stopping to argue it. At the proper time I shall have something to say upon that point. All I was seeking to get before the Senate and to get into the RECORD was what it is that the Senator is contending for in this respect; whether he is contending that the census enumeration is correct or incorrect.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We contend that it is correct.

Mr. NELSON. I wanted to present to you both sides of this question in order to give full light, which is more valuable than my own unsupported opinion. I presented the result of the Census Office and the result of the communication with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I hope that when the Senator comes to argue the other side he will be as fair in presenting a mooted question as I have been in this matter.

Mr. FORAKER. I am not compelled to have any opinion as to which is correct, but I have a right, and it is my duty to seek for the benefit of the Senator's opinion. I wanted to know from him which he thought was correct. If he has no opinion, of course I have nothing to ask for.

Mr. NELSON. I have figured out the population on both theories, both on the basis of the census and of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and on the basis of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs this would be the status of the population of Arizona in 1901:

Total population, census of 1900	122,933
One year's increase of population at ratio from 1890 to 1900	4,831
Total in 1901	127,764
Deduct unallotted Indians	30,848
Leaving a net Representative population of	96,916

Or less than one-half of the full ratio for a Representative in Congress. Adding to this one year's increase at the ratio from 1890 to 1901 that brings it up to the year 1902, 3,808, it makes a total population entitled to representation, at the outside, in the year just passed (1902) of 100,724 people, which is 51.8 per cent of the ratio required for a Representative in Congress.

Now I ask the attention of Senators to this: Whether the population entitled to representation be put at 106,012, on the basis of the census, or 100,724 on the basis of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as I figured it, allowing the same ratio of increase as during the last ten years, it is evident that it would be at least fifteen years before Arizona would have a population entitled to representation equal to the ratio for a Representative in Congress at this time.

Now, under the circumstances and on this theory, and in view of the limited number of people in that Territory entitled to representation in Congress, much less than the ratio necessary for a Representative, I submit that Arizona is not entitled to come into the Union.

Now, if we apply the educational test to Arizona, and in this matter I shall refer only to what our census shows, not going into the testimony taken on that point before our committee, because the members of the committee who were on the ground will want to refer to it—in the matter of illiteracy in Arizona, according to the census the percentage is 25.4. The average illiteracy of the country, taking all of the States of this country together, outside our colonial possessions, is 10.9, while in Arizona it is 25.4.

Now, let me read this statement as to illiteracy in the several States, and we can see what a discrepancy there is:

	Per cent.		Per cent.
Maine	6.4	New Jersey	6.9
New Hampshire	7.9	Pennsylvania	7.7
Vermont	7.9	Delaware	14
Massachusetts	6.4	Maryland	12.5
Rhode Island	9.2	District of Columbia	8.4
Connecticut	6.8	Virginia	25.3
New York	5.9

There are a few States—six of them, all old slave States—where the conditions are peculiar, and in those the percentage of illiteracy is high. These are North Carolina, 29.4; South Carolina, 35.1; Georgia, 31.6; Alabama, 33.7; Mississippi, 33.8; Louisiana, 37.6. But we must remember that these States were burdened years ago with a large slave population and that this population has not yet reached the stages of education and intelligence that the white people have, and for that reason it is not fair to compare in illiteracy the conditions prevailing in those States with our own States. But I will resume.

In the State of Ohio the rate is 4.8 per cent; Indiana, 5.6; Illinois, 4.8; Michigan, 5.5; Wisconsin, 5.5; Minnesota, 4.1; Iowa, 2.7; Missouri, 7; North Dakota, 5.4; South Dakota, 5; Nebraska, 2.5; Kansas, 3.4; Kentucky, 18.8; Montana, 6.1; Wyoming, 4.3; Colorado, 4.1; Utah, 3.7; Nevada, 12.8; Idaho, 5.4; Washington, 3.4; Oregon, 4.8; California, 6.2, and, with the exception of those few old slave States, where the conditions, as I have said, are peculiar, you can see that the standard of illiteracy of Arizona is very low. Even taking the whole country at large, the good States and the bad States, the average of all the States is only 10.9.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I desire to ask the Senator how many Indians are included in his computation of illiteracy, whether 26,000 or 30,000?

Mr. NELSON. I do not think the Indians are included in that estimate at all.

Now, if we go from the mere matter of illiteracy to the matter of occupations and industries in the Territory, we find the conditions to be that the principal occupations and industries are mining, stock raising, and agriculture. Agriculture is in a very feeble condition. There is a total of 72,268,800 acres of land in Arizona and of this, according to the last census, there were only 5,809 farms with a total acreage of 1,935,327, of which only 254,521 acres were improved, which is only 0.35 of 1 per cent of the total area of the Territory.

There are some curious figures in connection with this. I want to read them.

Number of white farms, 4,006; total acreage of white farms, 1,889,376; improved acreage of white farms, 225,809, or 12 per cent; number of negro farms, 15; total acreage of negro farms, 1,850; improved acreage, and it seems to be much greater in proportion, 473 acres; percentage of improved acreage 25.6; number of Indian farms 1,770; total acreage of Indian farms, 43,502; improved acreage of Indian farms 26,782, or a percentage of 61.6, the Indians showing the best percentage of all. That is the amount of improvement as compared with the acreage included in their farms. These figures show that in a country which has been settled all these years, with an acreage of over 72,000,000, (and I shall subsequently show the amount of this acreage that is still unappropriated public land), with all this great area of land, there is to-day, after all these years, or was in 1900, only 254,521 acres of improved land.

The great trouble with Arizona in this respect is the desert-like character of the soil and the aridity of its climate. The rainfall is very scant and limited, and is really no help to agriculture. There are only a few localities up in the northwestern mountains, where the timber is in a rocky and hilly country, where there is any rainfall of any consequence, and where crops could be raised with irrigation; but owing to the character of that country, owing to the high altitude, it will never become an agricultural country, so that the question of agriculture is remitted back to the other portions of the country.

It follows, Mr. President, that on account of the desert-like character of the soil, the lack of rain, and the aridity of the climate, the only recourse for agriculture is in irrigation, and that agriculture is practically limited by irrigation. The total amount of land under irrigation in 1899, according to the report of Professor Newell, was only 185,396 acres, and even this land could not all be cultivated because of the want of irrigation and the lack of water. I want to quote in this connection from the testimony of Professor Newell:

The CHAIRMAN. Will you state to the committee, in your own way, the situation in the Territory of New Mexico with reference to the question of aridity?

Mr. NEWELL. The Territory is well within the arid region, and agriculture there is dependent almost entirely upon the artificial application of water.

The CHAIRMAN. By the artificial application of water you mean irrigation?

Mr. NEWELL. Yes, sir; irrigation. The principal source of supply is the Rio Grande and its largest tributary, the Pecos River. The United States Geological Survey has been measuring the flow of the Rio Grande where it enters New Mexico and at various points along its course. We have also measured some of its tributaries, and have measured where it leaves the Territory to form the boundary line between Texas and the Republic of Mexico. We have been making studies of the extent to which that water can be used for irrigation purposes in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you state to the committee the extent to which that water is used at present?

Mr. NEWELL. The usual summer supply is entirely employed, and there is now—

I call attention to this—and there is now a considerable acreage under cultivation for which there is not a sufficient supply of water in all seasons. The spring flow—the floods—in large part go to waste, and water storage is absolutely essential to the future development of the Territory.

Irrigation, as it appears from this testimony and as it appears from the agricultural development and history of the country and from the census report, is now at a standstill and has attained its limit. The irrigation is confined to these few streams that Professor Newell referred to. There is some irrigation in the Verde River Valley near Prescott. There is some irrigation in the Salt River Valley near Phoenix, and some in the San Pedro Valley near Florence, and some near Yuma, and some on the Gila River. I read from a report here which enumerates the different basins that it is possible to irrigate:

Notable among these are the basins of the Gila, the Salt, the San Pedro, the Santa Cruz, the Verde, Bill Williams Fork, and the Hassayampa rivers. The Gila being supplied from the largest and most extensive watershed is in consequence the most important of all streams lying wholly or almost wholly in the Territory. Nearly all other streams mentioned are tributary directly or indirectly to the Gila, and have each irrigated areas of their own. On all can be found available reservoir sites eventually to be used, under the law, for the reclamation of the arid lands tributary thereto.

If you look at the map of Arizona, you will find how far apart these different localities are. You will find how far the Salt River irrigated area and valley is from the Verde River, and the latter from the Pecos River, and that again from the Gila River. It is these few little valleys which have been irrigated, with their population, and with the population of some mining camps and mining towns, which constitute practically the population of Arizona.

In reference to the matter of water supply and irrigation, I ask leave to refer to certain testimony that was taken by the committee which is germane and has an important bearing on this question, the testimony of Henry Hartin:

Q. What was the nature of the occupation of the people out in the country districts which you enumerated?
A. Why, mining and stock raising, and a little agriculture.
Q. Where was the agriculture carried on?
A. Down on the Verde, about the head of the Verde Valley, along the river.
Q. They worked the valley along the river?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you been pretty well over the Territory?
A. No, sir; I have been pretty well over Yavapai County, but not over the Territory.
Q. How far was the irrigation taken from the river in the Verde Valley, of which you spoke?
A. Not at all; it was just along the bed of the river.

By Senator HEITFELD:

Q. How wide is the valley?
A. It was not quite a quarter of a mile; it was not, at the widest place, a quarter of a mile wide.

I read from the testimony of Mr. Sloan. He states, on page 124:

We have had for a series of years a remarkable shortage of water, and for that reason the farmers have not prospered as they did in former years. The amount of land that can be utilized is practically unlimited. The water necessarily is limited. The rainfall is not such as to afford sufficient water for all the land in the Salt River Valley. However, there are possibilities for the storage of water which will be completed. If those works which are now contemplated are completed, that will add many thousands of acres to cultivation.

This is the testimony of Mr. Heard, one of the water-storage commissioners:

Q. In what portions of the Territory which you have named are there irrigation works actually in operation?
A. The principal irrigation in the Territory is in this valley and in the Upper Gila Valley. And there is also quite a small irrigated section just south of Tucson; and there is a splendid irrigated section in the Gila Valley, about 30,000 acres.
Q. How much would you say at the present time is actually under irrigation?
A. In the whole of the Territory?

ACTUAL IRRIGATION.

Q. Yes, sir; in the whole Territory.
A. About 185,000 acres under actual cultivation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In the whole Territory?

Mr. NELSON. In the whole Territory. From this, Mr. President, taking the former conditions in that Territory, taking the report of the census for 1900 in respect to the amount of improved farms, if that census is correct in respect to the total of improved farm acreage, we can see that instead of being an increase there has been actually a decrease.

It is evident from these facts, Mr. President, that agriculture and stock raising are at a standstill. Stock raising is as much affected almost by the lack of water supply and the lack of irrigation as agriculture, for the reason that no matter if the cattle can find pasturage they have got to have some place to get water, and they can not well, as the testimony shows, go to a distance of more than 4 or 5 miles from the ground on which they graze to secure their water. So the grazing area is, like agriculture, though not quite to so great an extent, limited by this lack of water.

Now, under these conditions we can see why Arizona has not been growing and is in a stagnant condition, and it is likely to remain so until a most extensive and most expensive system of irrigation is inaugurated. That will be a work of years and will require thousands of expenditure. We have recently passed legislation by Congress to carry out this work, and until the plan of irrigation provided for by Congress has had a chance to develop itself and show what it can do it will be premature to admit Arizona into the Union.

To my mind, Mr. President, if Arizona is admitted into the Union at this time you would see a rush among speculators and promoters to secure the issue bonds, to incur indebtedness without limit for all species and plans and schemes of irrigation. Let the people be patient. Instead of allowing schemers and promoters to secure bonds and incur a great indebtedness for the purpose of irrigation we had better leave the people in a Territorial condition. We had better leave them so that the Government of the United States can aid them under the act whichwe passed at the last session to secure irrigation without any expense to the people, and to secure it gradually and in a proper way as fast as the needs of the country require it.

Mr. President, no better evidence is to be found that agriculture and stock raising in Arizona to-day are at a standstill than in the limited amount of public-land entries that have been made during recent years.

The total area of Arizona is 72,792,320 acres. Of this area there is appropriated 5,773,941 acres, leaving 67,018,379 acres unappropriated. Now, out of all this mass of unappropriated land there were entered and purchased and secured in various ways under our land laws in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, only 449,175 acres; and in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, there was a total of land entered and appropriated of 151,718 acres. It will be claimed here how enormously Arizona has grown since the census, that the figures are incorrect, that there has been such a growth of that Territory as was never known before in all its history; and yet these land office records belie that contention and that argument. In the two years, out of this mass of unappropriated public land—67,000,000 acres—only 600,894 acres have been entered and appropriated. This, Mr. President, is only 9.5 per cent of what has been entered in Oklahoma in the same period.

Now, let us compare this with Oklahoma and see the difference. The total area of Oklahoma is 24,774,400 acres. There were appropriated, that is, entered, purchased, and secured under the land laws of the United States, at the end of the fiscal year 1902, 17,229,575 acres, and unappropriated, 7,544,825 acres. According to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office there was appropriated and entered during the fiscal year ending 1902, 4,413,557 acres, and during the year 1901, 1,896,587 acres, or in all during the two years, 6,310,144 acres, against 600,894 acres in Arizona, with a much greater area, in the same period. Ten times as much public land was entered in the little Territory of Oklahoma during that period as in the vast domain of Arizona. This shows what a slow progress Arizona is making in settlement and development.

This further appears if we take into account the number of people engaged in the various industries. According to the census of 1900, there were in Arizona 3,055 agricultural laborers and 6,583 who were rated as farmers and planters, or a total agricultural population of only 9,638. In the stock-raising industry the figures were still less. Number of stock raisers, 1,224; number of stock herders, drovers, and those connected with the cattle industry, 2,416, or a total number of persons engaged in the stock-raising business of 3,640. Or, adding the number of people engaged in agriculture and stock raising combined, there was a total of only 13,278 males in the Territory engaged in those two industries.

Now, something will be said about mining. I will come to it later, but in this connection I desire to call attention to the limited number of people engaged in mining, according to the census: Number of persons engaged in coal mining, 12; in gold and silver, 1,968; in mining not specified, and that includes principally copper, 5,439; in quarries—that is, engaged in quarrying stone—33; or a total of only 7,452. If we sum it up, the industrial classes in Arizona in 1900 engaged in agriculture and in stock raising and in mining numbered only 20,730 people.

Aside from stock raising and farming, mining is the only other industry of any consequence, and, as I shall show by figures, with the exception of copper mining, the mining industry in the Territory is very limited and insignificant when compared with that of the other mining States of the Union. How long this mining will last and how much it may be enlarged is uncertain and problematical. Mining towns like Tombstone and Gila City, and many others that could be named, once large and prosperous, have been long since almost abandoned and deserted.

A table which I have compiled from the report of the Mineral Resources of the United States for the year 1901 shows this to be the condition of the mining industry in Arizona.

The total amount of gold mined in the year 1901 was $4,083,000. This was equivalent to 5.19 per cent of the entire gold product of the country.

The production of silver in Arizona in 1901 was 2,812,400 fine ounces, or an amount equal to 5.09 per cent of the production of the entire country.

Coming to the matter of copper, I find a better showing. The amount of copper mined in Arizona in 1901 was 130,778,611 pounds, or equal to 21.7 per cent of the copper output of the country.

When we compare the gold, silver, and copper mining of Arizona with that of some of the principal mining States, we see how insignificant is the mining industry of Arizona. While Arizona produced $4,083,000 of gold in one year, Colorado produced $27,693,500; California, $16,891,400, and Alaska, $6,885,700; or nearly 50 per cent more gold is produced in Alaska than in Arizona.

Take the matter of silver, and compare that with the production of the silver States. Arizona produced in 1901 2,812,400 fine ounces of silver, while Colorado during the same period produced 18,437,800 fine ounces; Montana, 13,131,700 fine ounces; Utah, 10,760,800 fine ounces; Idaho, 5,542,900, and the aggregate production of silver in the United States was 55,214,000 fine ounces.

Now, take the matter of copper. Arizona, as I stated, produced 130,778,611 pounds, while Montana produced 229,870,415 pounds, and the Lake Superior country—that is, Michigan—156,289,481 pounds.

These figures which I have quoted, both as to the output of the mines and as to the number of people engaged in them, show plainly how limited is the scope of the mining industry in Arizona. If you eliminate their copper mining and leave it simply to the matter of gold and silver, it would be very limited indeed.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to a matter in this connection which has a bearing upon the quality and character of the population. We must note the fact that the population in these mining towns is of a transient and migratory character, and not of the highest order of citizenship. They float about from mining camp to mining camp; when they get tired of one camp they go to another. We have an indication of the lawless character that must prevail there in the fact that under the laws of Arizona the saloons, gambling houses, and other resorts are licensed and allowed to run day and night and all night long and all of Sunday; in fact, they are allowed to run continuously. Such a condition can only be appurtenant to what I might call the semilawless elements of mining towns.

Now, when we take into account the limited number engaged in agriculture; when we take into account the character of the mining population; when we take into account the high rate of illiteracy in the Territory, it all tends to show that in the matter of population, in the matter of the development and the character of that population, Arizona is far from being fit for becoming a member of the Union of States.

Where a Territory is in an active, progressive condition, and the indications point to immediate and rapid growth and progress, there may be good grounds for admitting it as a State, even though at the time it is not up to the requisite standard of population, intelligence, and material development. But these conditions do not exist in the case of Arizona. Its past history and its present condition in respect to population, literacy, and material development indicate that on account of the barren soil and the peculiar climatic conditions it is in an almost dormant state, and to admit it now would be of no help to the people, but would simply open the door to political schemers, promoters, and stockjobbers.

In view of these facts, Mr. President, in justice to the people of Arizona, not only on their account, not only on account of the States of the Federal Union, but especially on account of the people who live in Arizona, for their own good and their own protection, I insist that the greatest blessing we can confer upon those people at this time is to still leave them in a Territorial condition in order that, without expense, without cost, and without incurring an enormous amount of indebtedness, they can, under the legislation passed during the recent session of Congress, secure that relief and help which they need, and which is the only help and relief that can at all bring prosperity and growth to that Territory—I mean to secure irrigation under the system and plan provided by the law passed at the last session of Congress.

I have so far argued the case on its merits; but there is another matter to which I desire to refer. My friend, the chairman of the committee, the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], who was there on the ground, will no doubt refer to it more fully and more extensively and demonstrate it mathematically. That part of the bill which relates to the admission of Arizona contains one of the most outrageous and one of the most partisan gerrymandering schemes that I have ever known or heard of in all my legislative experience. The Senator from Indiana will no doubt take that up, and when he takes it up he will demonstrate to the Senate by cold figures that there is an outrageous and a most partisan scheme of gerrymandering in that bill, such a scheme as never ought to be tolerated in any legislation passed by Congress.

Even if Arizona had intrinsic merit entitling it to admission to the Union, Mr. President, on account of that gerrymandering scheme, and on that account alone, that part of the bill relating to the Territory of Arizona ought not to pass.

Mr. President, I have now said what I intended to say about Arizona. I have spoken nearly two hours, and I should be very glad to postpone the further remarks I have to make until to-morrow morning, when, with the permission of the Senate, I shall resume.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 6, 1903, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 5, 1903.

ENVOYS EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTERS PLENIPOTENTIARY.

Charles Page Bryan, of Illinois, now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Switzerland, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Portugal, vice Francis B. Loomis, nominated to be Assistant Secretary of State.

David J. Hill, of New York, now Assistant Secretary of State, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Switzerland, vice Charles Page Bryan, nominated to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Portugal.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE.

Francis B. Loomis, of Ohio, now envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Portugal, to be Assistant Secretary of State, vice David J. Hill, nominated to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Switzerland.

CONSULS.

William R. Estes, of Minnesota, to be consul of the United States at Antigua, West Indies, vice George Sawter, appointed consul-general at Guayaquil.

Hugh Pitcairn, of Pennsylvania, now consul at that place to be consul-general of the United States at Hamburg, Germany.

SURVEYORS OF CUSTOMS.

Thomas C. Elliott, of Illinois, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Cairo, in the State of Illinois. (Reappointment.)

Richard W. Burt, of Illinois, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Peoria, in the State of Illinois. (Reappointment.)

Henry L. Hines, of Massachusetts, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Springfield, in the State of Massachusetts. (Reappointment.)

Joseph W. Dillin, of Tennessee, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Nashville, in the State of Tennessee. (Reappointment.)

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Daniel H. Moody, of Maine, to be collector of customs for the district of Wiscasset, in the State of Maine. (Reappointment.)

Sidney O. Weeks, of New York, to be collector of customs for the district of Patchogue, in the State of New York. (Reappointment.)

Peter Dippel, of New York, to be collector of customs for the district of Sag Harbor, in the State of New York. (Reappointment.)

William D. Crum, of South Carolina, to be collector of customs for the district of Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, in place of Robert M. Wallace, deceased.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

Judge-Advocate-General's Department.

Maj. Harvey C. Carbaugh, judge-advocate, to be judge-advocate with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, December 18, 1902, vice Morrison, deceased.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

J. Duncan Adams, of South Carolina, to be United States marshal for the district of South Carolina, vice George I. Cunningham, deceased.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Commander George W. Baird, to be a captain in the Navy, from the 2d day of December, 1902, vice Capt. Edward H. Gheen, retired.

Lieut. Commander William Winder, to be a commander in the Navy, from the 21st day of November, 1902, vice Commander Richard Inch, promoted.

Lieut. Commander Charles B. T. Moore, to be a commander in the Navy, from the 21st day of November, 1902, vice Commander John E. Pillsbury, promoted.

Lieut. Commander Alfred Reynolds, to be a commander in the Navy, from the 2d day of December, 1902, vice Commander George W. Baird, promoted.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Walter R. Gherardi, to be a lieutenant in the Navy, from the 23d day of September, 1902, vice Lieut. William C. P. Muir, promoted.

Asst. Surg. Richmond C. Holcomb, to be a passed assistant surgeon in the Navy, from the 2d day of December, 1901, to fill a vacancy existing in that grade on that date.

James P. DeBruler, a citizen of Indiana, to be an assistant surgeon in the Navy, from the 3d day of January, 1903, to fill a vacancy existing in that grade on that date.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

James M. Hobson, to be postmaster at Greensboro, in the county of Hale and State of Alabama, in place of James M. Hobson. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1902.

ARIZONA.

Milton Bohall, to be postmaster at Nogales, in the county of Santa Cruz and Territory of Arizona, in place of Albert J. Griswold. Incumbent's commission expired January 12, 1902.

ARKANSAS.

William C. Bill, to be postmaster at Ozark, in the county of Franklin and State of Arkansas. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

John A. Dudgeon, to be postmaster at Corning, in the county of Clay and State of Arkansas. Office became Presidential January 1, 1902.

CONNECTICUT.

Eugene H. Merriman, to be postmaster at East Hartford, in the county of Hartford and State of Connecticut, in place of Eugene H. Merriman. Incumbent's commission expired June 8, 1901.

COLORADO.

Maude E. McLean, to be postmaster at Breckenridge, in the county of Summit and State of Colorado, in place of Maude E. McLean. Incumbent's commission expired May 4, 1902.

GEORGIA.

John A. Crawford, to be postmaster at Dalton, in the county of Whitfield and State of Georgia, in place of John A. Crawford. Incumbent's commission expires January 10, 1903.

IDAHO.

Robert H. Barton, to be postmaster at Moscow, in the county of Latah and State of Idaho, in place of Robert H. Barton. Incumbent's commission expired December 21, 1902.

Orville J. Butler, to be postmaster at Harrison, in the county of Kootenai and State of Idaho. Office became Presidential July 1, 1902.

ILLINOIS.

S. H. Aldridge, to be postmaster at Plymouth, in the county of Hancock and State of Illinois. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

John W. Church, to be postmaster at Marissa, in the county of St. Clair and State of Illinois. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

George C. Roberts, to be postmaster at Greenview, in the county of Menard and State of Illinois. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

Thomas H. White, to be postmaster at National Stock Yards, in the county of St. Clair and State of Illinois, in place of Willet B. Stickney, resigned.

INDIANA.

W. H. Hart, to be postmaster at Huntington, in the county of Huntington and State of Indiana, in place of Scott Cole, resigned.

Laron E. Street, to be postmaster at Brookston, in the county of White and State of Indiana. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

Henry Whitecotton, to be postmaster at Vanburen, in the county of Grant and State of Indiana. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

IOWA.

Spencer H. Carr, to be postmaster at Ireton, in the county of Sioux and State of Iowa, in place of Willis W. Overholser. Incumbent's commission expires January 7, 1903.

Asahel B. Chrysler, to be postmaster at Lake Park, in the county of Dickinson and State of Iowa. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

Arthur S. Colby, to be postmaster at Hawarden, in the county of Sioux and State of Iowa, in place of Will A. Quigley. Incumbent's commission expires January 17, 1903.

E. P. Dalander, to be postmaster at Madrid, in the county of Boone and State of Iowa, in place of E. P. Delander, to correct name.

Nettie J. Dill, to be postmaster at Columbus Junction, in the county of Louisa and State of Iowa, in place of Nettie A. Dill, to correct name.

Daniel P. Ellsworth, to be postmaster at Lohrville, in the county of Calhoun and State of Iowa. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

Francis H. Farley, to be postmaster at Sloan, in the county of Woodbury and State of Iowa. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

Thomas J. Hoffman, to be postmaster at Vail, in the county of Crawford and State of Iowa. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

Isaac Hossler, to be postmaster at Battle Creek, in the county of Ida and State of Iowa, in place of Isaac Hossler. Incumbent's commission expires January 27, 1903.

W. F. Laidley, to be postmaster at Bancroft, in the county of Kossuth and State of Iowa, in place of John B. Johnson, deceased.

William H. McClure, to be postmaster at Fontanelle, in the county of Adair and State of Iowa. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

Simon J. Mak, to be postmaster at Inwood, in the county of Lyon and State of Iowa. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

Moses D. Mosier, to be postmaster at Remsen, in the county of Plymouth and State of Iowa, in place of Moses D. Mosier. Incumbent's commission expires January 7, 1903.

Edwin M. Parker, to be postmaster at Newell, in the county of Buena Vista and State of Iowa, in place of Edwin M. Parker. Incumbent's commission expires January 27, 1903.

KANSAS.

Sydney W. Gould, to be postmaster at Weir, in the county of Cherokee and State of Kansas, in place of Sydney W. Gould. Incumbent's commission expires January 17, 1903.

William C. Palmer, to be postmaster at Jewell, in the county of Jewell and State of Kansas, in place of William C. Palmer. Incumbent's commission expires January 27, 1903.

Caddie Smith, to be postmaster at Lebanon, in the county of Smith and State of Kansas, in place of E. McNall. Incumbent's commission expired January 10, 1902.

Joseph H. Woollen, to be postmaster at Mankato, in the county of Jewell and State of Kansas, in place of Joseph H. Woollen. Incumbent's commission expires January 17, 1903.

MAINE.

John M. Oak, to be postmaster at Bangor, in the county of Penobscot and State of Maine, in place of John M. Oak. Incumbent's commission expires January 10, 1903.

MARYLAND.

George C. Gardner, to be postmaster at Middletown, in the county of Frederick and State of Maryland. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

Thomas R. Green, to be postmaster at Denton, in the county of Caroline and State of Maryland, in place of Thomas R. Green. Incumbent's commission expires January 17, 1903.

Mary J. Perkins, to be postmaster at Hancock, in the county of Washington and State of Maryland. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

MASSACHUSETTS.

John W. Fairbanks, to be postmaster at Westboro, in the county of Worcester and State of Massachusetts, in place of John W. Fairbanks. Incumbent's commission expires January 10, 1903.

Frederick E. Pierce, to be postmaster at Greenfield, in the county of Franklin and State of Massachusetts, in place of Frederick E. Pierce. Incumbent's commission expires January 10, 1903.

MICHIGAN.

Joseph Wise, to be postmaster at Southlake Linden, in the county of Houghton and State of Michigan. Office became Presidential July 1, 1902.

MINNESOTA.

Charles A. Birch, to be postmaster at Willmar, in the county of Kandiyohi and State of Minnesota, in place of Charles A. Birch. Incumbent's commission expires January 19, 1903.

Walter L. Bucksen, to be postmaster at Blooming Prairie, in the county of Steele and State of Minnesota, in place of Walter L. Bucksen. Incumbent's commission expires January 19, 1903.

John Lohn, to be postmaster at Fosston, in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, in place of John Lohn. Incumbent's commission expires January 19, 1903.

Emma F. Marshall, to be postmaster at Red Lake Falls, in the county of Red Lake and State of Minnesota, in place of Emma F. Marshall. Incumbent's commission expires January 19, 1903.

MISSISSIPPI.

Mellicent R. McInnis, to be postmaster at Moss Point, in the county of Jackson and State of Mississippi, in place of Catherine E. McInnis, deceased.

MISSOURI.

Leo W. McDavitt, to be postmaster at La Plata, in the county of Macon and State of Missouri, in place of Edwin H. Babcock. Incumbent's commission expired July 7, 1902.

Albert A. Marshall, to be postmaster at Glasgow, in the county of Howard and State of Missouri, in place of Albert A. Marshall. Incumbent's commission expired January 14, 1902.

MONTANA.

Julia A. Kline, to be postmaster at White Sulphur Springs, in the county of Meagher and State of Montana, in place of Julia A. Kline. Incumbent's commission expires January 12, 1903.

NEW YORK.

Harrison Beecher, to be postmaster at Monticello, in the county of Sullivan and State of New York, in place of Harrison Beecher. Incumbent's commission expires January 13, 1903.

Paul R. Clark, to be postmaster at Auburn, in the county of Cayuga and State of New York, in place of Paul R. Clark. Incumbent's commission expired December 30, 1902.

George D. Genung, to be postmaster at Waverly, in the county of Tioga and State of New York, in place of George D. Genung. Incumbent's commission expires January 13, 1903.

Richard P. Groat, to be postmaster at Newark, in the county of Wayne and State of New York, in place of Richard P. Groat. Incumbent's commission expires January 13, 1903.

Albert S. Potts, to be postmaster at Cooperstown, in the county of Otsego and State of New York, in place of Albert S. Potts. Incumbent's commission expires January 13, 1903.

Benson C. Smith, to be postmaster at Port Byron, in the county of Cayuga and State of New York, in place of Benson C. Smith. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1902.

E. Eugene Sprague, to be postmaster at Carmel, in the county of Putnam and State of New York, in place of Bryant S. Palmer. Incumbent's commission expires January 31, 1903.

Matthew Taylor, to be postmaster at Schenectady, in the county of Schenectady and State of New York, in place of Matthew Taylor. Incumbent's commission expired December 15, 1902.

Carlton D. Wing, to be postmaster at Attica, in the county of Wyoming and State of New York, in place of Carlton D. Wing. Incumbent's commission expires January 13, 1903.

NEBRASKA.

John A. Anderson, to be postmaster at Wahoo, in the county of Saunders and State of Nebraska, in place of John A. Anderson. Incumbent's commission expired July 1, 1902.

James H. Logan, to be postmaster at Ponca, in the county of Dixon and State of Nebraska, in place of James H. Logan. Incumbent's commission expires January 7, 1903.

Will A. Needham, to be postmaster at Bloomfield, in the county of Knox and State of Nebraska, in place of Will A. Needham. Incumbent's commission expires January 19, 1903.

William A. Rodgers, to be postmaster at Gibbon, in the county of Buffalo and State of Nebraska. Office became Presidential July 1, 1902.

Ira E. Tash, to be postmaster at Alliance, in the county of Boxbutte and State of Nebraska, in place of Richard W. Montgomery, removed.

NORTH CAROLINA.

General W. Crawford, to be postmaster at Marion, in the county of McDowell and State of North Carolina, in place of General W. Crawford. Incumbent's commission expires January 19, 1903.

OHIO.

Erwin G. Chamberlin, to be postmaster at Caldwell, in the county of Noble and State of Ohio, in place of E. G. Chamberlain, to correct name.

John M. Gallagher, to be postmaster at Quaker City, in the county of Guernsey and State of Ohio. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

James Medford, to be postmaster at Brookville, in the county of Montgomery and State of Ohio. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

J. W. Prine, to be postmaster at Ashtabula, in the county of Ashtabula and State of Ohio, in place of James M. Wilcox, deceased.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Anna B. Beatty, to be postmaster at Cochranton, in the county of Crawford and State of Pennsylvania. Office became Presidential January 1, 1903.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which I sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15449) to increase the efficiency of the Army.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established a general staff corps, to be composed of officers detailed from the Army at large, under such rules as may be prescribed by the President.

SEC. 2. That the duties of the general staff corps shall be to prepare plans for the national defense and for the mobilization of the military forces in time of war; to investigate and report upon all questions affecting the efficiency of the Army and its state of preparation for military operations; to render professional aid and assistance to the Secretary of War and to general officers and other superior commanders, and to act as their agents in informing and coordinating the action of all the different officers engaged in carrying out their orders; and to perform such other duties as may be from time to time prescribed by the President.

SEC. 3. That the general staff corps shall consist of 1 chief of staff of the Army, with the rank, pay, and allowances of a lieutenant-general, 1 major-general and 1 brigadier-general, to be detailed by the President from officers of the Army at large not below the grade of brigadier-general, and who while so serving shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of the grade to which detailed; 4 colonels, 6 lieutenant-colonels, and 12 majors, to be detailed from the corresponding grades in the Army at large, under such rules for selection as the President may prescribe; 20 captains, mounted, to be detailed from officers of the Army at large of the grades of captain or first lieutenant, who while so serving shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of captain mounted. All officers detailed in the general staff corps shall be detailed therein for periods of four years, unless sooner relieved. While serving in the general staff corps officers may be temporarily assigned to duty with any branch of the Army. Upon being relieved from duty in the general staff corps officers shall return to the branch of the Army in which they hold permanent commission, and no officer except a general officer shall be eligible to a further detail in the general staff corps until he shall have served two years with the branch of the Army in which commissioned, except in case of emergency in time of war.

SEC. 4. That the chief of staff, under the direction of the President and Secretary of War, shall have supervision of all troops of the line and of the several administrative staff and supply departments, and shall perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the President and Secretary of War. Duties now prescribed by statute for the Commanding General of the Army as a member of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification and of the Board of Commissioners of the Soldiers' Home shall be performed by the chief of staff or other officer designated by the President. Acts and parts of acts authorizing aids-de-camp and military secretaries shall not apply to general officers of the general staff corps.

SEC. 5. That inspections of troops necessary to insure their discipline, instruction, efficiency, and welfare shall habitually be made by the general or other officer under whose command they are. Inspections of the Army at large, which may be necessary from time to time to determine its efficiency in whole or in part, particularly as to equipment, discipline, and instruction, shall be made by officers of the general staff corps. The inspection of money accounts heretofore made by officers of the Inspector-General's Department shall be transferred, as soon as practicable, to the Treasury Department, and thereafter such inspections shall be made by expert accountants of that Department at such intervals as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary: Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to establish such regulations as may be necessary for the disposition of unserviceable and useless articles of public property heretofore acted upon by the Inspector-General's Department.

SEC. 6. That officers holding permanent commissions in the Inspector-General's Department may be detailed as above provided to duty in the general staff corps or to any other duty which the interest of the service may require, and they shall be eligible to detail, irrespective of rank, to any grade in the general staff corps. Officers serving by detail in the Inspector-General's Department not selected for detail in the general staff corp or other staff department shall be relieved and returned to duty with the branch of the Army to which they permanently belong. So long as any officers holding permanent commissions as inspectors-general remain on the active list they shall be promoted according to the established rules of seniority up to and including the grade of colonel, and when all the inspectors-general holding permanent commissions shall have been separated from the active list the Inspector-General's Department shall be discontinued as a separate organization and bureau of the War Department.

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act shall be construed to reduce the numbers or grades of general officers now provided by law for the line of the Army.

The following amendments, reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, were read:

Section 3, page 2, line 3, strike out beginning with the word "that" down to and including the word "detailed" in line 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the General Staff Corps shall consist of one Chief of Staff and two general officers, all to be detailed by the President from officers of the Army at large not below the grade of brigadier-general."

In line 13, page 2, strike out the word "mounted."

In lines 5 and 6, section 4, page 3, strike out the words "several administration staff and supply departments" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Adjutant-General's, Inspector-General's, Judge-Advocate's, Quartermaster's, Subsistence, Medical, Pay, and Ordnance departments, the Corps of Engineers, and the Signal Corps."

Strike out all after the words "General Staff Corps," in line 14, section 4, page 3.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I can not think that a bill of this importance ought to be considered by unanimous consent. Therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HULL. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments as read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I shall demand a second; and I want to ask the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands a second.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I wish to raise the question of order whether the committee has directed this bill to be brought up in this way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this is individual suspension day, but the Chair was advised——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the Chair recognize the gentleman for this motion in his individual capacity or as chairman of the committee? The Chair addressed him as chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so referred to the gentleman in announcing the request for unanimous consent. Of course, the recognition is now an individual recognition.

Mr. HULL. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that I have already interviewed the majority of the committee, and they gave me consent to call this bill up as chairman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I could not hear whether the gentleman made this motion as an individual or as chairman of the committee. I demand a second.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No; I can not agree to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] as tellers.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What will be the parliamentary status of this bill in the event that a second is ordered and the motion of the chairman of the committee prevails? Will it be open to any further amendment?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Iowa, if it prevails, will pass the bill with the amendments as read. If the motion should be rejected, the bill will go to the Calendar. No other amendments will be in order except by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Tennessee will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 51.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa for twenty minutes.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised that there is any opposition to this bill, as the committee, both in its minority and majority——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me a moment?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Not out of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not want the gentleman to take judgment by default.

Mr. HULL. I am not going to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have not opposed the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. HULL. I do not. He has as much time as I. I say that the bill as reported from the committee had the unanimous indorsement of both the minority and majority members. There was some difference of opinion as to the amendments, but after it was once completed the minority members suggested that even in the report it be submitted as a unanimous report.

Mr. Speaker, the bill is not a complex one or hard to understand. It is simply for the purpose of creating a body of men without additional rank for the purpose of coordinating all the different staff corps and, in place of each one running in its own groove, reporting to the Secretary of War, and putting upon him the burden of passing on each of the questions affecting each staff corps, to have a trained body of officers take up all of these questions and report to the Secretary of War through its chief of the general staff. For instance, since the beginning of the Spanish war, with each of the staff corps an independent body, you have the Quartermaster and the Commissary and the Ordnance and the Engineers and all the supply and administrative departments acting in a sense as independent bureaus.

The Secretary of War, of course, has control over all, but it throws a volume of work on the Secretary of War and is impossible for anyone to properly and efficiently discharge the duties thereby imposed upon him. This coordinates all these departments. It provides for a detail of officers from the line of the Army or from the staff, from the Army at large, to take into consideration all these questions of administration, and in the event of war all questions of the efficient discharge of the duties of the supply, administrative, and executive departments of the War Department. It seems to me that the experience of the Government has demonstrated positively the necessity for such a body of men as this. As originally introduced it provided for an increase of rank for the chief of staff and the two assistant chiefs of staff, one of them, while acting, to have the rank, pay, and allowance of lieutenant-general and the other two the rank, pay, and allowance of major-generals.

That has been stricken out, so that now if the bill passes, as is proposed by the committee and as is moved by me, it will require the President to detail, if he so desires, the Lieutenant-General to act as chief of staff, but it gives no additional rank if he selects a brigadier-general to act as chief of staff. He simply takes the rank that he holds while discharging these additional functions. There is but one class of men which secures any additional rank. That is where a first lieutenant is detailed to act. He gets additional pay while so acting, and the reason for that, it seems to me, is apparent to every member of this House, that while he is called here to perform these duties his expenses are increased to an amount more than equal to the additional pay. It makes the increase only a minimum. The Lieutenant-General may be detailed as chief. But if some man of exceptional ability other than the Lieutenant-General is desired by the Secretary of War to fill this position, the detail can be made, but the officer gets no additional rank or pay.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I care to take the time of the House longer, and will reserve the balance of my time until I learn what opposition there is to the measure.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question for information about the bill?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Illinois who has just addressed the Chair?

Mr. HULL. I yield first to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia did not address the Chair.

Mr. HULL. Then I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BARTLETT. The Chair is mistaken about that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman. Will the gentleman from Illinois suspend a moment?

Mr. BARTLETT. "The gentleman from Georgia" has not violated the rule, and is not subject to the criticism of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair apologizes to the gentleman from Georgia, if the gentleman from Georgia addressed the Chair. The Chair did not hear him, and the gentleman from Georgia will understand that it is necessary to follow the rule, in order that the business of the House may be transacted in an orderly manner.

Mr. BARTLETT. There is nobody who is more mindful of the rules of the House than myself, and I am not justly entitled to receive the criticism of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa if the provision on page 3, beginning at line 14, with the words "duty now prescribed" and ending on line 18 with the words "designated by the President," will not in effect make a new commanding general of the Army, and displace the present commanding general of the Army, the Lieutenant-General?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, in answer to that I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia, and the members of this House, that the commanding general of the Army, under our form of government, is a mere myth. The President of the United States, by the Constitution, is the Commander in Chief of the Army; and the Secretary of War is and will remain the officer through whom all these orders will emanate; and in place of taking anything away from the general of the Army, outside of being president of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, and president of the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home, this bill does not affect him in the slightest degree. He is to-day called by law general of the Army, and yet every man on this floor knows that as a matter of fact he has no command, and has no right to issue commands to the Army except as directed by the President and Secretary of War.

I should imagine that if this bill passes it will have the effect to harmonize the Army administration in this, that the Lieutenant-General of the Army will have the highest command, where it is an actual command, the Department of the East, and that the friction which has been so long continued in this country, dating from General Scott, at least, down to the present time, will be obviated in the future.

The bill recognizes in law what is recognized by the Constitution—that there is no commanding general of the Army except the President of the United States.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I complete my inquiry?

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. From the gentleman's statement it appears that if this bill passes you will have two commanding generals of the Army.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no.

Mr. BARTLETT. One performing the duties and one pretending mythically to perform them.

Mr. HULL. No, sir; Mr. Speaker, I do not concede any such thing. I concede that we have but one Commander in Chief of the Army, and that is the President of the United States, just as he is to-day.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that as well as the gentleman does, but——

Mr. HULL. And that this does not change the relations of the Lieutenant-General, with the exception of the provision as to who shall preside over the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home and the Board of Ordnance and Fortification.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I trespass on the time of the gentleman to ask another question on this subject? Then we will have two commanding generals of the Army drawing two salaries for the same work?

Mr. HULL. No, sir; we will not. We do not increase the officers by a single man. We do not give a single additional rank to anybody except the first lieutenant. As I said before, that part of the bill creating a new Lieutenant-General has been stricken out and that part creating additional rank has been stricken out. This chief of staff issues no orders except as orders are issued to-day, by direction of the President and authority of the Secretary of War. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I notice that section 4 of this proposed bill provides "that the chief of staff, under direction of the President and Secretary of War, shall have supervision," etc. Then, lower down, "and shall perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the President and Secretary of War."

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. WARNER. Does not that make two commanders of the Army?

Mr. HULL. It does not.

Mr. WARNER. Does it not require both of them to jointly agree as to the policy? Say that the President and Secretary of War should tie.

Mr. HULL. In that case the President governs.

Mr. WARNER. Not according to this bill.

Mr. HULL. And he has the power to make a new Secretary of War whenever they do not get along together harmoniously.

Mr. WARNER. Say you have a Secretary of War who does not agree with the President.

Mr. HULL. It follows the usual course.

Mr. WARNER. Then you want to have one more. You ought to have three, instead of two, in case they tied.

Mr. HULL. There will never be a tie. The President is supreme in commanding the Army.

Mr. WARNER. The other man is not a free moral agent, then.

Mr. HULL. The President has power to give an officer any assignment he pleases. He can not make him serve under any junior officer. He would not succeed in doing that; but he could put him on waiting orders. He could assign him to duty in the Department of the East, if he desired to do so. He could do that now.

Mr. WARNER. So as to have that question before the House, I move to amend it by striking out the words "Secretary of War" wherever they appear.

Mr. HULL. It is not subject to amendment as it is now before the House.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Would the chairman of the committee intimate the nature of the amendment of the committee that is offered?

Mr. HULL. I simply offered the committee amendments. I have offered no amendment personally.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is willing to accept another amendment, to be offered by a member of the committee?

Mr. HULL. I can not. I can not go beyond what the committee authorized me to do.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman desires to, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to state to him what that amendment will be.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that the bill was fully considered by the committee, after extensive hearings; and after the action was taken upon the bill I will not take the responsibility of accepting or offering any additional amendment to the bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, as a possible means of keeping the waters calm, I would like to suggest to the gentleman what the amendment is, and I think it entirely probable he might be willing to accept it.

Mr. HULL. I can not accept any amendment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. By unanimous consent it could be accepted.

Mr. HULL. Of course. Offer it, and ask for unanimous consent, and I will make no objection. What is it?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment which is proposed to be offered is to amend section 2, by clarifying the language, by making it so simple and plain that anyone can understand it where it does seem vague, and where the main purpose of the bill is made more perfectly clear. It is to amend section 2 by striking out, after the word "commanders," on page 1, in line 12, certain unnecessary and vague language, as I think, after the word "commanders," in line 12, page 2, down to and including the word "orders," line 2, page 2, and inserting after the word "duties," on page 2, line 2, the words "not otherwise assigned by law."

Mr. HULL. You do not strike out the other language.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do. I think that language is unnecessary.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that he is striking out certain things not necessary for the purpose of his amendment. I think the gentleman's amendment is simply to insert in page 2, line 2, the words "such other duties as not prescribed by law." It is not necessary to move to strike out those other words.

Mr. SLAYDEN. My suggestion, Mr. Speaker, is to strike out the language on line 13, page 1, of the bill: "And to act as their agents in informing and coordinating the action of all the different officers engaged in carrying out their orders," and inserting after the word "duties," in line 2, page 2, the words "not otherwise assigned by law." The purpose—if I may be indulged a moment—in striking out this language is simply to remove unnecessary verbiage of the bill and make its purpose perfectly clear.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will modify his request, simply to insert those words after the word "duties," I have no objection to it, because I do not believe it makes any difference; but by striking out the other language it does.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will indicate the proposed modification of his amendment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will modify my amendment so as to insert after the word "duties," in line 2, on page 2 of the bill, the words "not otherwise assigned by law."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to its consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 2, after the word "duties," insert "not otherwise assigned by law."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to its being considered as pending to be voted upon with the other amendments? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HULL. I do.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. In this connection let the Chair state that when gentlemen address the Chair and ask permission to interrupt they must wait for the Chair to get the consent of the gentleman having control of the floor.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, in order to preserve the symmetry of the bill it is necessary to insert in section 4, line 12, the same language which the chairman consented to accept——

Mr. HULL. After the word "duties," in line 12?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; in line 12, on page 3.

Mr. HULL. There is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Let the Clerk report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 12, after the word "duties," insert "not otherwise assigned by law."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to that being considered as pending with the other amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me for a question?

Mr. HULL. I will.

Mr. BINGHAM. Assuming this proposed legislation is enacted into law, what will be the duties of the Lieutenant-General?

Mr. HULL. Practically the same as now. He will probably be assigned to the command of Governors Island. He may be appointed chief of staff. The President has unlimited discretion as to the chief of staff, provided he does not go below the grade of brigadier-general.

Mr. BINGHAM. He will have no distinct command?

Mr. HULL. He has none now, only nominal. But if he should not be assigned as chief of staff he would probably be assigned to Governors Island as the highest command of the Army in actual importance.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has only one minute remaining.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, when I objected to the request for unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill I had not had an opportunity to examine it or any of its provisions. It did not follow that because I objected to unanimous consent that I was opposed to the bill. When the gentleman moved to suspend the rules under the rules of the House and pass the bill, and I demanded a second, it did not follow that necessarily I was opposed to the passage of the bill; the usual formula was followed by me in order that we might have a debate and an explanation. But the gentleman from Iowa saw fit to take offense and plunge off in his able address in advocacy of the bill by an ex cathedra statement that I was opposed to the bill.

I may or may not be opposed to it; I certainly had not developed, up to that time, opposition to the final passage of the measure. When I appealed respectfully to the gentleman to permit me to make a statement that I had not opposed the bill, I was ruthlessly waived aside. That is all right if it comports with his idea of proper treatment of his colleagues on the floor.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the bill is a very far-reaching one. It makes radical changes in the management, control, and command of the Army. I did not believe then, nor do I believe now, after listening to the able argument of the gentleman, that such a bill should be called up and passed by unanimous consent. When unanimous consent is given for the passage of any measure and it is taken up and passed, it may be assumed that every man on both sides of the Chamber favors its enactment into law. I did not think a bill of this magnitude should be considered and passed under unanimous consent. I did not think twenty minutes' debate on a side is sufficient, with no opportunity to amend it, and for that reason I did not think the bill should be passed under a suspension of the rules. I think when a bill affecting the United States Army from top to bottom is considered and passed by Congress it should be considered in such method and after such fashion as to permit members on either side of the Chamber to offer amendments in order that the measure may be perfected.

Under the pending motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill no amendment can be offered from either side by any gentleman except by unanimous consent. I say this is a far-reaching bill. It may be wise to pass it. It starts out by the establishment of a general staff corps, something heretofore unknown in this country under our law, and provides for a chief of staff. Then it directs what this general staff corps shall do. First, it shall prepare plans for the national defense and for the mobilization of the military forces in time of war; it declares what this general in chief of the Army, or chief of staff, shall do. He is to investigate and report upon all questions affecting the efficiency of the Army and its state of preparation for military operations, to render professional aid and assistance to the Secretary of War and to general officers and other commanders, and so on.

The bill then provides how this staff shall be organized. I read from it:

That the general staff corps shall consist of one chief of staff and general officers, all to be detailed by the President from officers of the Army at large not below the grade of brigadier-general.

Mr. Speaker, if this bill passes it puts it in the power of the President to name a brigadier-general as chief of staff. He may not name a brigadier-general, but the bill puts it in his power to do so and confers upon such chief of staff great powers, some of which I have enumerated, as set forth in the first section of this bill.

It may be right to displace the Lieutenant-General; it may be right to displace his corps of assistants—major-generals in command of the different divisions of the Army; it may be proper to do these things and more, but it did not seem to me, and it does not now seem to me, that a bill with such provisions ought to be passed in this hurried fashion.

What shall this chief of staff do? The bill provides who shall compose this staff corps, but the chief shall be not less than a brigadier-general in rank.

The chief of staff, under the direction of the President and Secretary of War, shall have supervision of all troops of the line—and not only all troops of the line, but of the—

Adjutant-General's, Inspector-General's, Judge-Advocate's, Quartermaster's, Subsistence, Medical, Pay, and Ordnance departments, the Corps of Engineers, and the Signal Corps.

All these important branches are put under this brigadier-general as chief of staff. I imagine, Mr. Speaker, that with a lieutenant-general, full fledged, in commission, and with half a dozen or more major-generals in command of the line, anywhere in the United States, or elsewhere, where war may prevail, it would hardly be the proper thing to put this chief of staff, a brigadier-general, in charge and in supreme control, under the direction, of course, of the President and Secretary of War. I imagine that a man who has reached the high grade of Lieutenant-General of the Army would be the best man in all of the command—a man of more experience—the best man in the Army to take supreme control, and he should be such, it seems to me, if he measures up to the high standard of Lieutenant-General of the United States Army.

These being my objections, it seems to me that we ought to have something more than the mere statement of the gentleman from Iowa that this bill ought to pass. I confess that I am weakened somewhat in my opposition to the bill by the fact that the minority members, gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, who constitute a part of the Military Committee, seem to favor its passage. My friend from Virginia [Mr. HAY], my friend from Texas, and my friend from Illinois say the bill should pass. That being true, while I can not see the demand for the bill, I am inclined to make less violent opposition to its passage than I should otherwise make.

Mr. Speaker, that is about all I care to say. I yield to my friend from Virginia [Mr. HAY] five minutes, or longer if he wants it.

Mr. HULL. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HULL. Let me say, then, to my friend from Virginia that if such is the desire of the gentleman from Tennessee—and I want to assure him that I have no intention of discourtesy—that further debate should be had on this bill, I will ask unanimous consent that the debate be continued for forty minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman has consumed his nineteen minutes, and he seemed to prefer the course he has taken. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I have only a very few words to say in regard to this bill. There seems to be some confusion in the minds of gentlemen as to the powers of the Lieutenant-General of the Army. That officer has no powers except such as may be conferred upon him by the Commander in Chief of the Army, the President of the United States.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Would it not answer all the purposes stated by the advocates of this bill if we should simply confer these powers upon the Lieutenant-General of the Army?

Mr. HAY. No; it would not.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Why not?

Mr. HAY. Because, for instance, the Lieutenant-General of the Army can not perform all his own duties as general of the Army and also those which the chief of staff is called on to perform.

Mr. KLUTTZ. What duties will this bill leave for the Lieutenant-General of the Army? Will it not leave him a mere myth, as has been suggested?

Mr. HAY. Not at all. The Lieutenant-General of the Army will still be the Lieutenant-General of the Army——

Mr. KLUTTZ and others. In name?

Mr. HAY. And the chief of staff will be in a position to coordinate and bring together all the different staff departments.

We all know the trouble that we had during the Spanish War. We all know that immense supplies were taken to Florida, and that by reason of the differences in the orders issued from the various heads of departments it was impossible, sometimes for a week at a time, for the soldiers to be supplied with rations and quartermaster supplies.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Was not that due largely to differences between the Lieutenant-General of the Army and the Administration?

Mr. HAY. Not at all.

Mr. KLUTTZ. And not to any intrinsic weakness in his position?

Mr. HAY. Not at all. There was no difference between the Lieutenant-General of the Army and the Administration at that time, so far as I know of, in regard to supplying the Army with what it needed. There was no difference at all. This bill simply does by a Congressional act what the President can to-day do if he chooses to do it. As Commander in Chief of the Army under the Constitution of the United States he can call here a staff and put a man at the head of it and assign to him the various duties which are assigned to him under this bill.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask the gentleman if this bill does not practically eliminate the Lieutenant-General from the Army? In other words, would it be possible under this bill for the commanding general of the Army in time of war to have his headquarters out of Washington? The chief of staff by this bill must be in Washington, and the commanding general of the Army is chief of staff?

Mr. HAY. No; the commanding general of the Army is not chief of staff. This bill authorizes the President to detail any officer he pleases as chief of staff, and he can detail him back to the line at any moment, if he wants to do it.

Mr. STEELE. But he is to serve here?

Mr. HAY. Of course he is to serve here, but in the event of a war he could be detailed to command the Army if the Commander in Chief of the Army chose to detail him.

Mr. HULL. That can be done now.

Mr. HAY. Of course it can.

Mr. STEELE. The President can assign any officer to command the Army now, but all the time subject to this staff corps, to this little coterie, the little petticoat army here in Washington.

Mr. HAY. Do you mean that the President is subject to that?

Mr. STEELE. That is not what I mean.

Mr. HAY. If what the gentleman says is true, what is there to prevent the President, if he chooses to do it, from detailing this staff and putting somebody in charge of it? He could do it under the Constitution now, without any law; but he brings this bill here because he prefers to have the approbation of Congress in inaugurating this general staff.

And I desire to say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] that every military authority in this country, with perhaps the exception of one man, has been advocating a general staff for years, for the purpose of doing what this bill does; that is, to put somebody in a position where he can, in time of war as well as in peace, be responsible for the actions of the chiefs of the different branches of the Army.

There is not a particle of politics in this bill, and there is no harm in it. It does not increase the expenditures of the country a single dollar, and altogether it ought, in my judgment, to be given a trial.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield for a moment?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. PIERCE. If the President of the United States has the authority now which the gentleman from Virginia says this bill will confer, why do we want to pass this bill?

Mr. HAY. Because the President and the Secretary of War prefer to have the impress of Congressional approbation upon it; that is all.

Mr. PIERCE. Under what authority can they now make the appointment—under the Constitution?

Mr. HAY. Under the authority of the Constitution.

Mr. PIERCE. Is not that the very highest authority, and what do we want to make it cumulative for?

Mr. HAY. Well, we do that sort of thing very often. We created the Inspector-General's corps by law. It could have been done by Executive order just as well, but the President prefers to have Congressional approval for this.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes remaining.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HAY. I should like first to answer a question which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] wishes to ask.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman for the purpose of a question.

Mr. DINSMORE. In view of the fact that there has been so little opportunity to consider the bill, I want to call the attention of my friend who has just been explaining its provisions to this part which invests the President with authority, with reference to the duties of these officers, and at the end of section 2 says:

And to perform such other duties as may be from time to time prescribed by the President.

Which has been amended so as to read:

And to perform such other duties not otherwise assigned by law as may be from time to time prescribed by the President.

I should like to ask my friend if he thinks that that is altogether a safe provision? If by this bill the President of the United States has authority to assign these officers to duties to which they may not already be assigned by law, which may be inconsistent with their profession, it seems to me that the scope of the provision is to enable the President to assign them to any duties whatever—duties not military in their character.

Mr. HAY. In my judgment that amendment was not necessary to the bill.

Mr. DINSMORE. Does not the gentleman think this bill gives the President the authority to assign these officers to duties which are not military in character?

Mr. HAY. No; I do not. The President can not assign a military man to perform civil duty under a statute already passed by Congress.

Mr. DINSMORE. Yes; but does not this change that law in that respect?

Mr. HAY. Not at all; but the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas, which has been accepted, relieves that of all doubt.

Mr. DINSMORE. Not being so well informed on matters of this kind as the gentlemen on the committee, I wanted to call attention to this fact, because it seemed to me to be a rather dangerous provision, and it appears also in another place in the bill.

Mr. HAY. That has also been amended.

Mr. DINSMORE. The gentleman knows the fact to which I called the attention of the House. It authorizes the President to assign this officer to any duties not military.

Mr. HAY. The existing law prevents that, and so does the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DINSMORE. Then this does not change the existing law?

Mr. HAY. No; it does not, but other gentlemen think it may, and therefore they offer the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], retaining one minute for myself.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will say to my friend the gentleman from Arkansas that with the amendment which was offered I think the bill protects absolutely the recognition and enforcement of the existing military statutes, built up into a code of military laws through the wisdom of Congress for a long period of time. I believe it was essential, and the amendment which the gentleman has consented to accept guards against the contingency which the gentleman has in mind.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe as amended this bill ought to pass. Its purpose is to increase the efficiency of our small Army. It is the desire, I believe, of all political parties in this country, and certainly a great majority of the people of the country, to have a small army. But if we are to have a small army, which is intended in times of crises to protect this great country, we must have the most efficient army in the world. And believing from the evidence and the arguments submitted in the committee by different gentlemen well informed in military science that this bill will promote the efficiency of the Army and at the same time entail no increased cost upon the people, I give it my hearty support.

The differences of opinion heretofore existing between the general commanding the Army and the Executive have been referred to. My information is that there has been but one exception in a great many years when that difference did not exist, and then it was recognized by the general commanding, General Schofield, who frankly admitted its existence, but being of an adjustable temperament, he so arranged the administration of the duties of his office with those of the War Department as to obviate all trouble. This bill is intended to and will largely have the effect of curing that difference. Whenever the differences do exist the President by Executive order can bring them to a speedy conclusion.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has raised the question of whether or not the President can control this matter by Executive order. That question was asked the Secretary of War, a very able man, a very skillful lawyer, when addressing the committee relative to the enactment of this bill. He said, in replying to a question put by Mr. STEVENS, a member of the committee, that he supposed the President could do all this by Executive order now, but that it would be open to certain objections. And these objections were such as commanded my respect. It is the desire of the President and of the Secretary of War to have the legislative approval for a scheme which in the main is uniformly indorsed by the best informed military men. While it may be done now by Presidential order, it is better to have the consent of Congress, and in my judgment every Democrat and every Republican ought to prefer that it be done with the knowledge and consent of this body.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. In the one minute remaining, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I do not believe the House is prepared to pass this bill. A vote against the bill now does not defeat its final passage. If the vote is against suspending the rules now and passing it, the bill simply goes back to the Calendar, and it can be called up on a call of committees and passed, if a majority of the House desire to pass it, after amendment and debate.

Now, I know that there are gentlemen on that side who are opposed to the bill, because they said so as they passed through the tellers on the motion to order a second to suspend the rules. I know there are gentlemen on this side of the House who are not ready to vote for this bill. I am shaken in my judgment against the bill by the statement of my friend from Virginia and the gentleman from Texas, and I might support the bill if it came up under the rules. Now, as a vote against this bill at this time does not defeat it, but simply gives an opportunity for its full discussion and consideration, I hope it will be voted down this morning and let it go back to the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee certainly knows that this bill can not be reached on the Calendar and get consideration at this session of Congress, and it must either be considered in this way or under an order reported from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. You have got the Committee on Rules and the organization of the House.

Mr. HULL. I would not have made this motion this morning in regard to the matter if I had had any idea that there was to be such opposition; but, Mr. Speaker, every military body of the United States indorses it, and all the great newspapers of both parties say that such a bill as this ought to pass, and all the administrative officers of the Army desire to see it get through so that it may become law. It is shown that some action of this kind ought to be had, and it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Tennessee, with his ability to comprehend——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why can not it come up under the call of commitees?

Mr. HULL (continuing). With his ability to comprehend the proposition, will now understand why the bill can not be called up.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why can not it be called up?

Mr. HULL. Because it does increase the pay of a first lieutenant when he is acting as captain.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understood the statement to be made that it did not increase the expenditures. That statement was made by Mr. HAY of Virginia.

Mr. HULL. I said the only place it increased the expense one dollar was where a first lieutenant should be detailed, and then he should have the pay of a captain while so acting. And to offset that, I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee and members of this House, that if this bill becomes law and we have trouble in the future, it will save millions of dollars to the people of the United States and give better care for our soldiers, as well as improve the efficiency of the Army. We have every argument on earth for its passage and not a single argument against it as it is reported with the amendments which are to be agreed to. It eliminates confusion, it harmonizes action, it reduces expense, and promotes efficiency. This governing body can make proper plans for the mobilization and development of the Army.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired and debate has expired. The question now is on the suspension of the rules and passing the bill with amendments.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee) there were 61 ayes and 41 noes.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 59, answered "present" 4, not voting 183; as follows:

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 109, the nays 59, answering "present" 4—total 172, 6 short of a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms will bring in absentees. The roll will be called. Those favoring the pending motion will vote "aye," those opposed will vote "no," those not desiring to vote will, as their names are called, answer "present." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was again taken; and there were—yeas 101, nays 51, answered "present" 11, not voting 192, as follows:

A bill (S. 6752) granting an increase of pension to John Smith; and

A bill (S. 6753) granting a pension to Florence Arnold.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 6754) authorizing the city of Batesville, Ark., to draw water from the pool of Dam No. 1, Upper White River; which was read twice by its title, and re-referred to the Committee on Commerce.

M. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 6755) correcting the military record of Simon P. Rinehart; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6756) granting a pension to John C. Cummins;

A bill (S. 6757) granting a pension to James O. Lawlis;

A bill (S. 6758) granting an increase of pension to Nelson Purcell; and

A bill (S. 6759) granting an increase of pension to John A. Seiss.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 6760) for the relief of the county court of Berkeley County, W. Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DOLLIVER introduced a bill (S. 6761) for the establishment and organization of a nurse corps of trained women nurses in the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6762) granting a pension to Michael Fitzpatrick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6763) granting an increase of pension to Hiram W. White;

A bill (S. 6764) granting a pension to Helene E. Warrens; and

A bill (S. 6765) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Broadman.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 6766) making an appropriation to pay the Ottawa and Chippewa Indians of Michigan certain moneys due said Indians; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. QUARLES introduced a bill (S. 6767) granting a pension to F. Heinemann; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 6768) to authorize the free importation of commodities covered by trusts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 6769) to increase the limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Indianapolis, Ind.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DIETRICH introduced a bill (S. 6770) for the relief of A. Frederick Benjamin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6771) granting an increase of pension to Simeon Billings; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6772) granting an increase of pension to John B. Fisk; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

EARLY MISSIONARY WORK IN OREGON.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 2,500 additional copies of Senate Executive Document No. 37, Forty-first Congress, third session, the same being a letter from the Secretary of the Interior to Hon. Schuyler Colfax, President of the Senate, of date February 8, 1871, directing the Secretary of the Interior to furnish any information in the possession of his Department pertaining to the "early labors of the missionaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in Oregon, commencing in 1836."

SPONGE FISHERIES.

Mr. TALIAFERRO submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate information regarding the sponge fisheries of foreign countries, the condition of such fisheries, regulations and methods of fishing, prices and markets for sponges, together with a report upon the feasibility of transplanting the best grades of oriental sponges to the waters of Florida.

SAFETY APPLIANCES ON RAILROADS.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, yesterday when I was not in the Chamber the Chair laid before the Senate a resolution introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] asking for certain information from the Interstate Commerce Commission. That resolution was agreed to on the 20th day of December, the day the holiday recess was taken. The Senator from Colorado was absent and had asked me to look after it. The resolution came up, and you will find in the RECORD at page 487 that the resolution was agreed to at that time. It is no longer before the Senate. It will be found in the RECORD, page 487, near the bottom.

Mr. FORAKER. I will inquire of the Senator if that is the resolution which was under consideration yesterday for a few moments?

Mr. BERRY. It is the same one, but it has already been passed by the Senate. It was agreed to on the 20th of December. I was looking after it for the Senator from Colorado. I remembered it, and referred to the RECORD, and the action of the Senate adopting the resolution will be found on page 487.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that tomorrow morning, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall ask to have the militia bill laid before the Senate.

ANTHRACITE COAL.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that Senate bill 6659 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is obliged to lay before the Senate at this time a resolution which came over from yesterday, if the Senator from Massachusetts will allow that to be done.

Mr. HOAR. I thought that had been disposed of by the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered yesterday by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] later in the day by unanimous consent. The resolution will be read.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. VEST was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to prepare and report a bill amending "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, so that the tariff duty shall be removed from anthracite coal and the same be placed on the free list.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I understand the question before the Senate now to be on the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], to refer this resolution to the Committee on Finance. This is the first time in my parliamentary experience that the chairman of a committee which it is proposed to instruct in regard to a measure moves to refer that instruction to his own committee. It seems to me very much like the defendant in a law suit asking the court to refer the whole matter in litigation to him and his attorney.

The question to be determined by the Senate is whether the Finance Committee shall report back certain legislation to the Senate. Mr. President, I should say frankly——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make a suggestion to the Senator. I do not know what his convenience may be, and I surely would not wish to interfere with it in the least. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] who made the motion is absent at this moment, and I had myself given notice that at the close of the routine morning business I would wish to submit some very brief remarks on the trust question. I desire to ask the Senator whether it would be wholly agreeable to him to postpone his remarks until that Senator comes in and let me finish mine. If it is not absolutely agreeable to him, I will not press the suggestion.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I desire to be entirely courteous to the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Rhode Island, but my physical condition is such that I prefer to say at this time what little I intended to say.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I beg the Senator's pardon. I do not wish to interfere with him.

Mr. VEST. I shall say nothing which I would not desire the Senator from Rhode Island to hear, and I would be very glad if he were present. I shall violate no rule of courtesy in speaking of his committee. I am a member of that committee and as a matter of course I shall not say anything even in criticism of him or of any member of the committee.

Now, Mr. President, why should this resolution go to the Committee on Finance? Is there anything that committee can inform us of not already known to every intelligent schoolboy in the United States? Do we not all know and realize that this is no longer a partisan question as to the duty on anthracite coal, but a question of absolute humanity? We are not upon the verge of a crisis in regard to the coal question; we are in it. Women and children are freezing to death. The whole country was shocked within the last ten days by the statement that a poor woman and her child had frozen to death in a tenement house in the city of New York in the midst of wealth and luxury. Under the shadow of this Capitol within the last ten days a child 11 years old was frozen to death while luxurious vehicles were rolling across its asphalt streets and people were preparing for the festivities of Christmas. It is no longer a question of what party can be benefited. It is no longer a question of finance or political economy. It is a question of absolute humanity.

The citizens' committee appointed to see why it is that coal is now at such a price as to be beyond the reach of the poor and middle classes, sent a special agent, a gentleman of high character, to the anthracite coal region. After making a tour through all that region and closely examining the conditions, he reports that there are but two modes of relief to the seaport cities, and, in fact, to the people of the whole country. One is to procure soft coal, now selling at $8.50 a ton; the other is to take the duty off of anthracite coal and permit it to come into this country where it can be laid down at $8 a ton. If 67 cents per ton tariff duty is deducted from the $8 we would receive coal here from Wales and Canada—anthracite coal as good as that in Pennsylvania or better—at $7.33½ per ton.

Mr. President, let us deal in facts. I do not know, nor do I care, whether the price of coal is now being enormously increased by the coal dealers or by the owners of anthracite railroads and coal mines. As a consumer and representing consumers, my only solicitude is how to find a remedy for this disgraceful and outrageous condition of affairs. I know that the consumers are being plundered day by day and hour by hour. I attempted to buy a ton of coal yesterday, and the lowest price for indifferent coal was $12 a ton. I bought a ton of coal some weeks ago and paid $14 to a dealer whom I had traded with for twenty years. He allowed me to have a ton for $14 as a matter of personal kindness. After that I tried to buy three tons more, and was asked $20 a ton. When I concluded to buy coke here in the city of Washington, they asked me $16 a ton, when the normal price of coke is about $3.

The coal dealers say that they can not sell coal for any less because the mine owners have put the price up for them. The mine owners declare that the coal dealers are heartlessly robbing the people and making an enormous profit upon all the coal they get from the mines. One of the independent coal operators was taken unwillingly before the board of arbitrators last week and he swore that he was under contract furnishing his coal to the Lackawanna Railroad at the mines for $2.50 a ton. And we are charged $12 a ton in the city of Washington.

What would be thought of a State legislature that sat silent and inactive when the people of the Commonwealth were being robbed after this fashion? And yet we are the legislature of this District, to go no further and to consider this question simply as one applied to this District, and here we are silent, dumb, either afraid or unwilling to take any action and answering the appeals of these poor, freezing women and children with a party cry, "Stand pat; stand pat." Nothing is to be done to this sacred white elephant, the Dingley tariff act; and yet the President of the United States tells us in his message that the remedy is to take the duty off of anthracite coal. The Secretary of the Navy has publicly announced that to be the remedy. The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] yesterday applied a homeopathic dose of the same medicine and proposed to suspend the duty for three months. If it is a good medicine for three months, it is the allopathic medicine that ought to be administered according to the prescription of Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, if this resolution goes to the Committee on Finance it goes to the parliamentary tomb of the Capulets and it will never be heard of again. What chance has this resolution with the known opinions of the dominant party of this Chamber and the dominant majority of the Finance Committee of being considered, much less of being adopted?

One distinguished member of the Finance Committee yesterday told us that there was no duty upon anthracite coal, and he says this in the face of the declaration of the President of the United States, who wants to remove that duty. He says it in the face of the declaration of the Secretary of the Navy, who has declared that this duty was put into the Dingley bill in a cowardly and sneaking manner and ought to be repealed at once. He says it in the face of the bill proposed by the junior Senator from Massachusetts to suspend this duty for three months. He says it in the face of the quasi judicial action of the board of appraisers in New York, who, after considering the whole question, declared that anthracite coal coming from Wales to this country under the provisions of the Dingley Act bore a duty of 67 cents a ton.

Mr. President, circumstances show that this resolution would never be even considered in the Committee on Finance. It would be strangled; and we know from experience how easily that can be done by a hostile majority in any committee.

In the Fifty-sixth Congress, at the first session, it will be remembered that a bill passed the House of Representatives amending what is known as the antitrust or Sherman law of 1890, making its provisions more drastic and punitive. That bill passed the House with but one dissenting vote, Democrats, Republicans, and Populists voting for it. It came over to the Senate three weeks before the adjournment of the first session of that Congress, and the Democrats proposed its immediate consideration. The Republican leaders opposed it on the ground that it was too important a question to be determined in the short time remaining of the session, and proposed to refer the bill to the Judiciary Committee, with the solemn promise that when we met in December, after the Presidential election in November, the bill should be taken up immediately and be disposed of by the Senate. On a yea-and-nay vote the bill went to the Judiciary Committee, and it was never heard of afterwards.

McKinley was elected in November. The trusts contributed liberally to his election. The entente cordiale was preserved between the trusts and the Republicans. We met in December, and after waiting for three weeks, with not a murmur from the Judiciary Committee, not a movement from any direction, the chairman of the national Democratic committee, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], moved to discharge the committee and bring the bill before the Senate. Our Republican friends opposed that motion. They forgot their promises before the election and declared that the short session was not the time in which to consider so important a question, and upon a yea-and-nay vote it was determined by the Senate that the bill should not come before the committee; and there it stayed, and lingered, and languished, and died.

Now, with that object lesson before us, do we not know what will become of this resolution if it is sent to the Finance Committee? Do we not know that we send it to the executioner?

All I want, Mr. President, is for every Senator to put himself upon record, directly if possible, indirectly at any rate, for or against the relief which the President has suggested for the present condition.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to one significant fact. It is contended by those of us who are opposed to the tariff wall which protects the trusts and combinations with the high duties of the Dingley Act, to reduce those duties or to remove them upon all trust-produced articles, so as to allow the only remedy that can by any possibility relieve the consumers of this country, and that is competition.

Now, what does the President of the United States propose as the remedy for the present condition of affairs in regard to anthracite coal? There is a fuel famine in this country to-day, not confined to the seaboard cities and to New England, but extending far west to my own State. In the third city of Missouri, St. Joseph, four days ago anthracite coal was selling at $15 a ton, and not a stick of wood could be bought by the cord in the whole city. In Mexico, a flourishing town in the interior of Missouri, situated in one of the wealthiest counties in the State, the county of Audrain, coal could not be had at any price, and the schools were closed and the factories shut up, and the people threatened, with the winter coming upon them in that inclement latitude, with all the horrors that must attend a coal and wood famine.

Now, confronted by this evil, which he attempted to avert, the President deliberately tells us that the remedy is not to remove the duty upon anthracite coal for three months or three years, but to take it off absolutely, in order—now mark the words—in order to meet such crises as may occur in the supply and price of coal. If that be the remedy as to coal, why is it not the remedy as to all the articles that are covered and protected by the high duties of the Dingley Act and placed under the control of trusts? If the bill the Senator from Massachusetts introduced yesterday is correct in principle, why not apply it to all trust-produced articles in this country?

Mr. Dingley, the author of the Dingley bill, declared that the duties in that act were too high, and that they were put there in order to form a basis or margin for the formation or creation of commercial arrangements with foreign nations in the way of reciprocity. Yet when reciprocity is suggested it is opposed by a large portion of the Republican party; and there is no more chance to-day, in my judgment, to reduce a single duty in the Dingley Act, as parties now stand in Congress, than for me to carry off this Capitol upon my shoulders.

I have had occasion to say, and I repeat it deliberately, the tariff is an interdependent mutuality of greed. When you once establish it it is established for all time to come, never to be reduced if it is possible to prevent reduction. The protected industries are like a brood of English sparrows. When one gives a cry of distress, the air is darkened with the whole brood rushing to its rescue. When you attack the trust upon peanuts, you must encounter the trust on salt, lumber, iron, meats, and all the necessaries of life.

We are told that trusts exist in free-trade England as they do in the United States. I deny it. I demand the proof. I challenge the truth of that assertion. It is impossible to create a trust as to a great necessary of life produced in all of the countries of the civilized world, because it is impossible to raise enough capital to create such a trust and make it effective.

William L. Wilson went to England, as he told me and as he stated in the House of Representatives, in order to investigate the truth of this assertion, and after a six weeks' sojourn he returned and declared that it was not true. He cited one object lesson to show that it was not true. It was proposed some years ago, just before his visit to England, to create a paper trust. So soon as this was known the London Times and the other great newspapers of the Kingdom immediately brought into England and Scotland paper from the Continent and the United States duty free, and the trust did not survive forty-eight hours.

But, Mr. President, I do not propose to go into details in regard to this subject. All I want is a vote by yeas and nays. All I desire is that every Senator shall take his individual responsibility for his action in regard to this question. If it is to be a question of raising money for the next campaign for President, that is the end of all discussion. I saw the other day in a country newspaper same doggerel verses, not as majestic as the lines of Homer, but still with a great deal of truth. It will be remembered that in 1892 a distinguished Senator from Kansas, then living and a member of this body, in speaking of the necessity for campaign funds said that if he had his way he would fry the fat out of the wealthy manufacturers of Pennsylvania and make a campaign fund for the G. O. P. that would sweep the country. This country newspaper said, adding to the battle cry of the Republican party for 1904:

Stand pat,
Then pass round the hat,
And the G. O. P. will fry out the fat.

[Laughter.]

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance, and on that question the Senator from Missouri demands the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, it was my misfortune not to have heard the first part of the interesting statement of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and I am not sure, therefore, whether he bases his extraordinary demand upon the Senate upon the novel and swift interpretation of the Constitution announced yesterday by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] or upon some other ground. My familiarity, however, with past tariff discussions in this body leads me to the conclusion that no obstacle, not even the prohibitions of the Constitution, are ever permitted to stand in the way of attacks upon the protective policy of the country by Senators upon the other side of the Chamber.

Of course, it will be necessary to reply to some of the statements made by the Senator from Missouri; but, in view of the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has announced that he intended to occupy the floor at this hour, I desire to ask the Senate that this matter may go over until to-morrow without prejudice.

But in the meantime I want to deny as explicitly and as emphatically as I can that the late chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, Mr. Dingley, ever at any time or anywhere made the statement attributed to him by the Senator from Missouri, that the rates in the Dingley tariff act, so called, were fixed higher than they otherwise would have been with a view to being subsequently reduced by reciprocity arrangements.

The fact is—and it should be known to the Senator from Missouri and every other Senator who took part in the discussion of the bill—that the reciprocity provisions of the Dingley Act, to which the Senator referred, were inserted in the Senate of the United States months after the bill had been prepared and the rates had been fixed by Mr. Dingley and his committee and the bill had passed the other House. I simply make this statement as a matter of justice to Mr. Dingley's memory.

Mr. NELSON. I want to ask the Senator a question for my own information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. I should be glad to know whether the provision relating to anthracite coal in the tariff bill was inserted in this body or in the other House?

Mr. ALDRICH. In this body. The provision was inserted at the instance of a Senator from the Pacific coast.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I simply want to make a remark in answer to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

The Wilson tariff law, which was passed in 1894, put a duty of 40 cents a ton upon soft coal and placed hard coal—anthracite coal—upon the free list. The Dingley bill in 1897 came from the House to the Senate with the same provisions as those contained in the Wilson law. After the bill came to the Senate, the majority of the Finance Committee instructed the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to move an amendment in the Senate increasing the 40 cents per ton duty on soft coal to 67 cents, and then inserting these words: "Upon all other coal having less than 92 per cent of fixed carbon, 97 cents per ton."

A debate followed, which covered seven pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In that debate it was admitted on both sides, as the RECORD will show, that the words "less than 92 per cent fixed carbon" included anthracite coal. I have before me now the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing that debate and showing the vote taken in the Senate on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa. There were 31 votes, all Republican but one, in the affirmative and 24 votes, Democrats and Populists, in the negative.

I assert here now that, in my opinion, every Senator who voted upon that question knew he was voting for or against a duty on anthracite coal of 67 cents per ton. It has so been construed ever since, and the debate in 1897 proceeded on that assumption.

That is the true history of the present duty upon anthracite coal. The leaders of the Republican party have remained silent under the charge—the appropriate charge—made by the Secretary of the Navy that the duty upon anthracite coal was put into the Dingley bill in a cowardly and sneaking manner.

I am not thrusting myself into this debate between these distinguished gentlemen, who are far more capable than I am to defend themselves. I simply allude to this fact to show that the "stand-pat" policy has overridden everything else, and the Republican leaders leave that statement of a member of the Cabinet unanswered rather than permit an assault upon a single provision of the Dingley bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I now ask that the resolution may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks that the resolution go over until to-morrow, retaining its present position as a resolution offered on a previous day.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Rhode Island or any other Senator wants to discuss the resolution, I have no objection; but I do not expect to be in the Senate to-morrow, and I should like to have a vote upon his motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the resolution can go over until some time in the future convenient to the Senator from Missouri, when he can be here. I am not anxious about it coming up to-morrow, but I think the Senator will recognize the fact that, in view of the last statement he has made, it will certainly meet a denial on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. VEST. Very good.

Mr. ALDRICH. We can not discuss it at the present moment.

Mr. VEST. Very well; let the resolution go over until to-morrow, with the understanding that it shall then come up and be voted upon.

Mr. ALDRICH. There can be no understanding except that the resolution be taken up, so far as I have any influence over it, at some time when the Senator from Missouri can be present.

Mr. VEST. I shall be present to-morrow.

Mr. ALDRICH. All right.

Mr. VEST. I want a vote on the resolution to-morrow.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no understanding except that the resolution shall go over.

Mr. VEST. Of course I can not control the Senator's understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Rhode Island? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

REGULATION OF TRUSTS OR CORPORATIONS.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I now ask that the bill I named a little while ago be laid before the Senate. I do not ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6659) for the regulation of trusts or corporations engaged in international or interstate commerce.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I suppose that nearly all thoughtful men in this country are agreed that some legislation, State or national, ought to be had for the regulation and control of what are called "trusts," and of large masses of capital, whether that term "trust" may be properly applicable to them or not, accumulated by corporations or artificial persons holding property and conducting business without individual liability. I suppose, in general, when men speak of trusts they mean a combination of such corporations, commonly with each other, although sometimes with natural persons, for the purpose of controlling some manufacture or some carrying trade or commerce, and of driving competitors out of the field. It is possible that this may be accomplished, however, by a single individual or a single corporation. So the remedy, if one be needed, to be wholly effectual must to a considerable extent be applicable to trusts, technically so called, to single corporations, and in some few cases to private copartnerships or individuals.

There is no doubt that there is a general feeling of insecurity and alarm about this matter. The great political parties have promised a remedy in their platforms. Candidates for office have discussed it all over the country. The President has called attention to it in his message and in his speeches. The Attorney-General of the United States has lately made to the public a careful statement, in which he told the people of his attempts, which have met certainly with gratifying success, to put down great combinations. One was a combination to control the price of a prime article of food. Another was a combination to control the carrying trade in a food product in a great section of the country. Another still was to control the general carrying trade of another large section of the country, by a combination of great railroads.

As yet, Mr. President, there has been only alarm and apprehension, without serious injury. With the very serious and important exception of the recent coal strike, the country has not suffered from this evil in any way to affect the general prosperity. Our manufacturing and producing and exporting power has increased of late as never before. Our foreign commerce is 1,382 millions, as against 1,363 millions of Great Britain, 1,113 millions of Germany, and 804 millions of France. Our domestic commerce is said to be more than twenty times as great as that with foreign nations. Our national wealth has grown nearly one-half in the last ten years. We have a larger national revenue than any other country in the world, except two. Our export of manufactured articles, which is still behind that of Great Britain and Germany, has increased in ten years 155 per cent, while the exports of Great Britain of manufactured articles have increased less than 18 per cent, those of Germany less than 30 per cent, and those of France less than 10 per cent.

We are foremost among the nations of the world now in the three great elements of national prosperity—agriculture, manufacture, and commerce. We now produce more for our own consumption than any other nation; we are now the best customer to other countries, and, if there be no interruption to our progress, shall soon be the largest seller to foreign nations on the face of the earth.

There is no doubt, also, that in general the condition of our workmen everywhere is on the whole better not only than that of other countries, but better, too, than our own at any previous period of our history.

So it is for the future more than for the present that the wisdom of our legislators is called upon to take thought. And, Mr. President, the condition of that country is unhappy whose legislator does not take thought for the future even more than for the present. Happy is the people whose statesmen foresee and prevent grievances, instead of waiting to experience them to cure them. In dealing with this trust problem and the danger of vast accumulations of wealth in single private hands we are seeking to lay down beforehand the law of a healthy life and not to grope after a cure for a deadly sickness.

Yet I wish to submit to the judgment of the Senate that we are dealing with a real peril and not with a fancied or imaginary danger. Mr. Webster predicted in 1820 that the law in France that provided for the division of lands among all the children, instead of primogeniture, would overthrow the French monarchy. He lived to congratulate himself that he had seen the prediction fulfilled. Now, if the accumulation of large real estates in single hands under primogeniture were the fortress and bulwark of monarchy and aristocracy and the division of lands among all the children were sure to bring with it republican liberty, is it not equally true that the accumulation of vast fortunes in individual hands, that the holding of great landed estates, or the subjecting of great masses of wealth and great industries to individual control by means of corporate power will have a corresponding effect to destroy, or overthrow, or at least to limit and impair, republican liberty?

I have been told, I have no doubt truly, that there is one individual in this country whose private fortune amounted, some years ago, to a thousand million dollars. There are others who are said to reckon their fortunes by the hundred million. I do not wish to speak of individuals; but I will say that I have been told that these gentlemen, who are supposed to reckon their property by the hundred millions, are believed—I am sure truly—to be possessed of great private virtues. They are—nearly all of them—men of public spirit, of sagacity, of patriotism, and of large civic wisdom. Their neighbors and their countrymen respect them, and I believe they are worthy of that respect. I do not speak of them as public dangers in themselves; but I refer to them only as examples of what may be possible in the future.

Beside these vast accumulations, undoubtedly, each of these gentlemen controls a large aggregate of capital, with which he is connected, to an amount nearly or quite equal to, sometimes far exceeding, that which he possesses himself.

Now, Mr. President, suppose it be true that the fortunes to which I have referred have, as I believe, been accumulated almost wholly within a period of thirty years. Suppose they happen to pass to a single heir. Is there anything to render it unlikely that if one of these vast fortunes has grown from a hundred thousand to a hundred million or a thousand million in thirty years that if the country grow as we expect, still more, if it grow as we all think possible, that in the hands of the next possessor in another thirty or fifty years the hundred million may become a hundred thousand million, or the thousand million a thousand thousand million? Is there anything to stop the accumulation of these snowballs? Can not the same power and business ability that can control one or two branches of commerce or trade or manufacture, or one product of the earth, control others? Can not the capital that can control all the petroleum in the country by and by control all the coal? Can it not control the railroad and the ocean carrying trade? Can it not buy up and hold in one man's grasp the agricultural and grazing lands of new and great States, and the coal mines and silver mines and copper mines?

But, Mr. President, the natural man dies. He can not control his property, except for a life or lives in being and a little time thereafter. His estate is quickly scattered. It must be brought, commonly, into the light of day. It must be distributed by law, inventoried, and accounted for, and the public exact such a share of it by way of succession tax as may be thought reasonable. Once in twenty-five years the whole individual wealth of the country goes through the probate court.

There are few great estates that survive, where there is no primogeniture, for more than two or three generations.

But the corporation is an artificial being. A corporation that engages in commerce with foreign countries or among the several States is the creature of another power than that of Congress. The law of its being is given to it by another power than ours. It is regulated and controlled by another power than ours. It never dies. It is never wound up. It is not like a partnership, which must be settled when the individual dies, or grows old, or wants to go out of business. It never goes through the probate court. Its internal transactions are kept secret. It is not zealous for its own honor or reputation, except so far as its honor or reputation is essential to its getting money. It has no soul and no conscience. In general, the men who are most powerful in its management can, if they see fit, avoid responsibility to public opinion. They always expect to avoid personal liability for obligations.

Now, as I have said, these powers may be in good hands now, in general. But suppose they happen to be in bad hands? The military power of the United States in our times of trial, happily for us, was in the hands of Washington and Grant. But suppose some Napoleon had got control of it; suppose some Napoleon of finance and business happen to get a thousand million dollars. Is not that possibility a real and terrible public danger? I shall be told that the American people will be left, and will be able to take care of themselves. That is true. I am talking to the American people about a way to take care of themselves. I think the best way to take care of ourselves is to prevent the danger, and not to encounter it in its full strength. I have no doubt the American people will be competent to overthrow any tyrant or despot that may get possession of the powers of our Government. But I think it a better way to arrange matters so that no tyrant or despot will ever get hold of them. Why, Mr. President, think of this money power which I have so imperfectly described. Is there another power likely to be so dangerous politically? You will not trust the best man in the United States to be President more than four years; or to be governor of a State more than one or two or three years without submitting himself to a reelection. You will not let a member of the House of Representatives keep his seat beyond two years, or a member of the Senate more than six years. An unwritten law has provided, and so far it has been executed, that no President of the United States, if he were another Washington or another Lincoln, shall hold office, even by reelection, more than twice. Yet this power that I have spoken of may last for a lifetime. If the genius and capacity continue in the same family, as the genius of politics has continued in some of our families in this country and in England, it may last, growing and enlarging and accumulating for generations, or even for centuries. Can not one of these colossal fortunes, as I said just now, buy up every railroad in the country? Can it not control every line of transportation by sea or lake? Can it not control the coal fields and the gold mines and the silver mines? Can it not get possession of the lands in the new States? Can it not buy up legislatures and nominating conventions and electorates? Can it not make great parties dependent on it for success in great elections?

Such a power as I have just described is greater than the power of many States. It is greater than the power of any nation, except ours, on this continent. It can make wars or it can prevent wars, as was said of the Rothschilds. It can threaten a community with a coal famine or a wheat famine and it can execute its threat. Thirty years ago, or more, when these things were in their infancy, an eloquent orator said—and it was hardly an exaggeration when he said it—that "Tom Scott traveled across the continent from San Francisco to New York, and with every sweep of his garment knocked down a legislature."

The chief evils of the trust are:

1. Destruction of competition;
2. The management of local industries by absentees in the interest of absentee capital;
3. Destruction of local public spirit;
4. Fraudulent capitalization;
5. Secrecy;
6. Management for the private benefit of the officials;
7. The power to corrupt elections, and in some cases to corrupt the courts;
8. The want of personal responsibility to public sentiment;
9. The absence of personal liability for contracts or wrongdoing;
10. The holding of vast properties in mortmain—in the "dead hand," if we may use the ancient phrase of the English law. But it has life enough for all purposes of power to serve the will that wields it. It is dead only to the influence of any nerve which comes from the brain or heart of the people.

Every Senator can find in his own experience plenty of illustration of what I am saying. I hope I have learned something from my own.

I chose for my abode in my youth a little city of less than 15,000 people. When I went there there were but two rich men in it, as we now count wealth. There was, I believe, but one man who kept a span of horses and a carriage for the service of his household. But it was a marvelous example of American genius, growing and expanding in the air of American liberty. It was the very center and home of invention. Within 12 miles of the spot where I live was born Eli Whitney, the inventor of the cotton gin, who doubled the value of every acre of land in this country on which cotton can grow. Six miles in another direction was born Erastus Bigelow, the inventor of the carpet machine. Six miles in another direction lived Blanchard, the inventor of the machine for turning irregular forms, perhaps the most important single mechanical invention that had been made in the country down to his time. Eight miles another way was born Whittemore, inventor of the card clothing machine, that marvelous mechanism which, when it makes a mistake, rings a bell and calls for help. Twelve miles another way was born and lived Elias Howe, the inventor of the sewing machine. When the war broke out Mr. Howe enlisted as a private. When in its embarrassment in the summer of 1861 the Government could not pay its soldiers, this private soldier drew his check for all the arrears due his regiment of a thousand men for some months. In the town itself lived the inventor of the envelope machine, and the two men who, in the beginning rivals and competitors, brought the loom to its perfection. In that town also the modern plow was brought from a rude instrument, a mere knife to cut the soil, to its present condition of unrivaled excellence. There also the great wire industry, which, begun by pulling the heated iron through a hole in a bit of steel with a pair of pinchers by hand power, in a blacksmith's shop, has grown until one establishment employed 7,000 workmen, supporting 35,000 people, and was the largest and most profitable wire manufactory in the world.

All around me there are homesteads, some bordering my own, owned by inventors, foremen, and skilled workmen, who have acquired fortunes in this honorable service, so beneficent to mankind and so honorable to their country. There was no water power there, no fertile prairie, no seaport, no mine. They bring their material from across the continent to work it up into their products, and send it back again across the continent to be sold in the very market from which their material came. It was not water power or steam power or electricity; it was man power, it was brain power, that wrought this miracle.

Not only Americans of mechanical genius have gathered there, but men who seek honorable employment come from across the sea. The Irishman within little more than a generation has come there in large numbers to learn the lesson of American citizenship. He has sent home his wages to father and mother and brother and wife and child, affording an example of generosity and of rapid growth in the best elements of character unexampled, I venture to say, in human history.

The Scandinavian and the Norwegian have come there to contribute an element to our citizenship not surpassed in the sterling qualities of integrity, good sense, of industry, and of love for the Republic by any other class of men, native or adopted. The Frenchman also has brought his industry, his thrift, his charming nature to temper the general being with his delightful quality. The little town has grown to be a mighty city. It has grown to a city of 130,000 people. It is the very home and paradise of well-paid labor.

I have in mind one instance, a neighbor, a friend of mine, belonging to that Scandinavian race, of which my friend from Minnesota is so admirable a representative. He was one of the best workers of iron in his class in Norway. He used to get $4 a week in his native land. When he got to Worcester he spent the first night in an empty freight car. He had no money to pay for his lodging. He could not speak a word of English. He went up street in the morning, and met a countryman who took him to the shop where he himself was employed. He was instantly hired at $1.50 a day, which was more than twice as much as he got at home. In a few weeks his wages were raised. In a year or two he became foreman of a room where 40 or 50 men were employed. Before he died he was himself at the head of an establishment of his own. His name was known throughout the country, having, I believe, seven or eight hundred men in his employ.

Now, Mr. President, these men were interested in Worcester. They took a pride in her noble history. They saw her grow. They helped her grow. They were the leading men in the churches and the schools and the organizations of charity. Her houses and schools and colleges and shops were the pride of her people. They were as jealous of her honor as of their own. They were the managers and directors of every institution of education or charity. They subscribed to her libraries and her colleges and her polytechnic school. The wealth which had come down upon them like the dew or the rain of heaven they gave back to the city of their love in streams of charity large as seas. When the war came they gave their lives, or their sons gave their lives, to save the country. They knew the great American secret, the secret of local public spirit. They knew that the man who loves his city and his town best loves also his State and his country best.

Now, Mr. President, what is to happen to these American communities, of which the one to which I have alluded is but a single example among thousands? If the present tendency keeps on, the industries of Worcester and every like community are to be owned and controlled by absentee capital. Whether an enterprise shall be undertaken in Portland or Bridgeport or New Haven is to depend on the opinion, in the end, of somebody in New York or Chicago or St. Louis.

Not only local competition, but individual competition is gone. The skilled workman who is conscious that he can do his work better than anybody else can not offer himself to two or twenty or one hundred competitors, each seeking the advantage of his skill. There is one central power alone with which he must deal and one dominant will to which he must submit. There may be a little help for him by joining a labor union, where he gets the advantage of associated strength on his side, but the labor union knows no difference between excellence and the reverse. The inefficient man and the lazy man and the dull man must stand on one dead level with the brightest and keenest and most ingenious of his comrades.

What would have become of all the inventors to whom I have alluded if they could have offered their inventions, to whatever branch of manufacture they related, to but one single customer and had been compelled to accept his terms?

What is to become of our local communities, of our local public spirit, of our local charities, of our local institutions of religion or education? Must we depend on a man in San Francisco or Albany, N. Y., or New York City if a church in Worcester be in need, or if a widow of an honored citizen come to poverty in her old age?

Mr. President, there are other evils in these great combinations of capital. Some of them will be more than counterbalanced by the corresponding advantage. I confess I like to see Pierpont Morgan buying up great lines of ocean steamships. I like to hear of foreign potentates and principalities and powers bowing down when he visits the Continent of Europe. I do not object if the knees of the Old Lady of Threadneedle street tremble and strike together when he visits London. We need great strength. We need great individual power if we are to rival foreign nations in the great matters which they also control by individual power. We must, if we can, look out in protecting ourselves not to destroy them or to cramp them. We can give them a law which will not impair their strength and not check their natural and rightful growth, and that, I hope, is all we mean to do. But it will be a bad bargain if we buy the dominion of the Continent or the empire of the sea at the cost of American local public spirit.

We are to have a close wrestle with the back hug with foreign countries for the commerce, the manufacture, and the carrying trade of the world. We mean to try to have the accounts of mankind some time settled in New York or Chicago, as they are settled now in London. We mean to get the superiority of the carrying trade by sea, which we had before 1860 in the day of the clipper ship and the packet. You, Mr. President [Mr. DEPEW in the chair], though a young man, can remember, I think, that in those days, when John Bull came in with a ship freighted with the crop of the season to a port in Asia or the Mediterranean, he found Uncle Sam on the wharf smoking his pipe, with his feet dangling over the water, with his cargo all sold, and the money in his pocket.

I like, as I just said, to see the great American financiers buying up foreign lines of steamships. I like to hear of American engineers building foreign railroads and of American architects putting American iron or steel girders into great buildings in foreign capitals. For this great capital and great combinations are essential. I do not grudge the men that do it either their wealth or their power.

It is said that the tariff fosters these trusts, and that one way to check them is to put every article manufactured by a trust upon the free list. That, I do not think, would help matters much. Certainly it would not reach carriers or dealers in the natural product of the country, like the Standard Oil Company, or the dealers in cotton or wheat, or the owners of mines. The railroad and the steamboat companies would thrive by bringing in the foreign products. Beside, as was well said the other day, I think by my colleague, if you put the product of the trust on the free list—unless the trust have an absolute monopoly of the article—you will kill out all of its weaker competitors and give it the whole domestic field; and you give an advantage to the foreign trust over the individual domestic manufacturer.

There may be some weight and value to the suggestion, and the remedy may be worth thinking of, if there be any case where any article is wholly controlled and monopolized by a trust. I can easily understand the impatience and indignation of the gentlemen who have made this proposition when they think of an artificial being, with an artificial capital and an artificial stock, crushing out all domestic competition by an adroit and illegal artifice and getting control of the home market. So I do not wonder that that remedy has occurred to some good men, but I do not believe it will bear examination. At any rate, I think I can find a better one and, as I believe, that will not destroy the policy by which this country has gained its present prosperity.

I spoke just now of these great corporate powers, whether exercised in combination or by single corporations, as compared with the frequent return to the people of all powers of government, State and national.

Mr. President, Mr. Calhoun, I think it was, said that when the patronage of this Government should have so increased that the party in power could appoint and control a hundred thousand officials it could never be dislodged. They would be, as he thought, too strong for the people. He overrated, undoubtedly, the strength of the officeholder. He underrated the strength of the men out of power who desire to become officeholders, and he underrated the wisdom and patriotism of the American people and its capacity to take care of itself in time. We have protected ourselves against that danger in part by our civil-service laws, just as we will protect ourselves sooner or later against the danger from aggregate wealth without a revolution, and, I hope, without social disorder or the overthrow of our institutions or interfering with our form of government.

Just consider how comparatively trifling is the power of an Administration so far as it depends, or ever depended, upon its officeholders compared with that of a great aggregate of corporations or great accumulation of wealth such as I have described.

You will elect your governor only for one or two or three years, and your President for four, and your Senator for six, and your Representative for two. All your executive officers are removable, and most of the important officials, State and national, go out of power with the party with whom they came in. They have moderate salaries. The Senator gets less salary, and the Representative gets less salary, not only than the mayors of important cities, but less than fashionable tailors pay their cutters.

Now, these great corporations can appoint their agents for life, or as long as they do the bidding of the central will. In every town or village where there is a shop or an agency or a depot the corporation has one of the most skillful or influential men in the community for its life officer. It can bid successfully against the Government when it wants the great lawyer for judge of the Supreme Court of the United States or Attorney-General. It can pay for a single fee not only more than a public officer can save for his old age, but more than the aggregate compensation of his life. I had two friends and intimate companions in my youth at the law school. One of them died lately, in the great office of judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, known and honored as one of the great judges of the world, leaving behind him a simple and modest competence (I suppose he had gained that before he went upon the bench) after his nearly forty years of illustrious service. The other, also dead, is said by his biographer to have received one single fee of a million dollars.

Not only this, Mr. President, but these great powers can put their hand on a village or a town or a city and it will grow and flourish or it will dwindle and wither, according to the edict of an outside and irresistible will.

The great railroad or the great manufacturing establishment holds in its hands the fate of cities and of States. If Massachusetts undertake to curb or regulate a corporation at Lowell or Fall River, and the president in New York does not like it he can move it to Indianapolis or Chicago. The State undertakes to pass its laws regulating the hours of labor, or the sanitary conditions, or the employment of children in the factory in Massachusetts. What has happened? The trust moves its factory to Rhode Island—that is all.

Now, what is the consequence? The workmen must combine for self-defense. They also catch the spirit of monopoly and unlawful combination. The edict of their boss must be obeyed also. The workman who does not submit his individual will to the edict of the trade union can neither work himself nor teach his children to work. The whole manufacture of the country in any branch on one side and the whole labor of the country in that manufacture on the other are to be controlled by two great corporations, by which, as between the upper and the nether millstone, the liberty of the individual, which has made alike the glory and the strength of the Republic, is gone.

But the owner says, "Have I not a right to do what I will with mine own?" You have not the right to do what you will with your own when you get wealth in such masses that it becomes a menace to the State. You have not that right when you are a corporation deriving all your powers from the State or nation. While you are an artificial being, created by the State or nation, into whom the State or nation has put the breath of life and given the law to its being, you are absolutely subject to the State or nation. The State or nation has the right to impose a law upon your being which shall make you healthful and not hurtful to the community. The State created you. It gave you your immunity from personal responsibility for debts. It commits to you, if you are a railroad or if you are a manufacturing corporation using water power, its own great right of eminent domain. Congress has the right to say that no such artificial being shall engage in interstate commerce except on certain conditions. One of those conditions will be the personal liability of your individual members for contracts and for wrongs, unless you comply with its commands. You have got your power from the public. Your property would be valueless but for the agencies and powers which have been committed to you by the State. The State has delegated to you its power of eminent domain, the right to take private lands, and to cross highways and navigable waters, and to lay your track in some cases along the highways. The State has as much right to compel you so to use your powers that you shall not be an injury to the individual engaged in lawful commerce as it has to require you so to manage your locomotive that you shall not be a danger to men lawfully traveling on the highway or to the passenger whom you carry.

Now, Mr. President, do not let me be misunderstood. I am sounding no note of despair. I am not even sounding a note of alarm. I am not afraid. The American people are not afraid. The spirit of American liberty, and the strength of American law, the power of the American Congress, the power of the American people in its legislatures, State and National, the firmness and justice and strength of the American courts, will be our safety against this danger, as they have been our safety against others. Nobody is afraid. We can capture this fortress easily enough. But the engineers must understand precisely its situation and its strength. The imperial power of the Republic which can call a halt to the whole world in arms, against whose impenetrable shield no knight, no king, no emperor is hardy enough to launch his spear, is not be frightened from its propriety by a few manufacturing or railroad corporations, or a few men, however rich or however powerful. I am only pointing out what they can do if we do not stop them in time. There is not the least fear that we can not or that we shall not stop them in time.

Mr. President, let me not for a moment be understood as denouncing, or reproaching, or harshly judging men who hold the great fortunes in this country to-day. They have, with few exceptions, I believe, acquired these fortunes by lawful and by honest means. They have been men who have been, in general, examples of private virtue. They have owed their success to the great American qualities of enterprise, sagacity, and industry. They are, in general, men of a large public spirit and a lofty patriotism. One of them, perhaps the most famous of all, has declared that he holds it a disgrace to any man to die rich, and is distributing his vast wealth wisely and generously to the abundant blessing of the country he has adopted and of the noble country of his origin. Another, to whom I have already alluded, I am told, quietly and without ostentation, is also distributing his large benefactions for the advantage of his countrymen.

I can truly say more than that. In the acquiring of these great fortunes their owners have been large public benefactors. Large industries have been created which, but for them, would not have existed. The employment they have given to many workmen, skilled or unskilled, but for them never would have been given to anybody. To the great corporations they have created have been due the prosperity of great towns and cities and also the comfort and content of many an American home.

Still further, I believe of the men to whom I have alluded that many of them are now themselves busy with the great problem which we have to take up, of protecting the people from the danger of great corporate wealth. We are to owe, I think, to their farsighted humanity and patriotic feeling valuable help and counsel in this direction. I see already, within a few days, that the great American Steel Company is considering the question of taking its workmen into its partnership everywhere and making the thousands and hundreds of thousands of their workmen joint owners with them, thereby accomplishing what we all hope to accomplish—the longed-for marriage between labor and capital, so that there may no longer be enmity or rivalry between the two great wealth-producing elements of the State. There are men in the Senate to-day who themselves are reputed to have gained great fortunes in the development of great industries, to whom the American people look confidently for counsel, that we may deal wisely with this momentous question. That expectation, I think, is not to be disappointed. Indeed, it has, to some extent, been fulfilled already.

It will be found, I am sure, whatever individual examples there may be to the contrary—and such examples will be found under all forms of government—it will be found true that there is no class of men in the Republic to whom, as a class, the welfare of the Republic is not dearer than any personal or selfish desire. In settling future relations between labor and capital, or between capital and the State, or between labor and the State, the capitalist and the laborer are to be, I hope and believe, our best advisers and leaders.

I am opposed to the Government ownership of great labor-employing industries. I am opposed to the Government ownership of coal mines or of railroads. I do not see why, if the Government is to prevent a famine or scarcity of fuel by ownership, it should not own the sources of food supply, that it might prevent scarcity of food, or the woolen or cotton factories, that it might prevent a scarcity of clothing. If the Government is to be the great employer, the wages of labor must be fixed by law. Wages can not be fixed by law, except on a scale which shall apply equally to every workman. The energetic and the slothful and the intelligent and the dull; the man of enterprise and of inventive genius and the man whose fingers are all thumbs must stand on the same dead level. Besides, if wages are to be fixed by the lawmaking power, then the question of wages becomes a question of politics. The two parties must compete with one another by outbidding each other for the votes, and paying for the votes in increased wages. No government but a despotism can control and supply the great necessaries of life.

I am talking to-day of trusts, and of the abuse of corporate power, as it may be engaged in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States, and of vast and dangerous accumulations of wealth. You can not separate either of these things from the other. The trusts make use of corporate powers to accomplish their lawful purposes, or their unlawful purposes, so far as their purposes be unlawful. These purposes are accomplished in order that the men who manage the corporations and control the trusts may, if they be so minded, get for themselves these vast private accumulations. We are dealing with a trinity, and we can not reach one without the others.

When you try to deal with the evil which threatens us, you have to protect yourself not only against those combinations which are popularly called trusts, but against the abuse of power by large aggregations of capital wielded by single hands or single corporations. Your legislation must control both.

There has not been, so far as I know, any correct definition of the word "trust," which has of late come into a common although a new use. But we know very well in general what we mean by it. We mean, I suppose, a combination or aggregation of individual manufacturers, or of separate corporations, formed for the purpose of breaking down all competition by unlawful or improper means, and of monopolizing manufacture or other forms of production or trade in cases where competition is healthy and desirable for the public. When we speak of these things as unlawful, we do not necessarily mean that they are criminal or prohibited by express statute. There are many things held by the courts to be contrary to public policy, so that contracts to do them will not be enforced, and combinations to do them will be held to be punishable as conspiracies, where the act itself could not be reached by criminal process, and sometimes, perhaps, where it can not be reached by the civil remedy of injunction. These things may be done by a combination of corporations to do them. They may be done by a single corporation. So they may be done by a powerful individual. The bill I have prepared does not undertake to prohibit them when done by an individual. It may be well to do that separately. But the individual power is limited by the life or wealth of one man. It can only be exercised by such power as one man can wield. It is restrained by the personal liability, civil and criminal, to which one man must be subjected. So if we can strike down these evil practices so far as they are due to corporate strength and wealth, we have made a great advance toward curing the evil and protecting the people.

I have no sympathy with any attack on wealth honorably acquired and lawfully used. I have no dislike for great corporate powers. I think, in general, it is better that they be wielded by private and individual combination than by the Government. They are necessary to national greatness. We can not maintain our equality among the nations of the earth and we can not achieve the supremacy now easily within our grasp without them. We may as well be jealous of gunpowder, or dynamite, or of steam, or of electricity, or of the power of gravitation, or the current of Niagara. So long as these are our servants and we are their masters we are safe and healthy and great. But it is service and not mastery that Aladdin expects of the magician. Let the great railroad corporation span the continent and girdle the earth in the service of the American people. But it must never forget that it is the slave of the ring and that the American people is the Aladdin. Let the steel company, if it will, light up every valley and mountain side of the continent with the light of its furnace fires. Let the American Steamboat Company do the carrying for the world; but it must be content to be to the American people in the relation of slave of the lamp and not of master.

What is called socialism, Mr. President, will never cure or prevent the evil I have described. That, also, will be destructive of the great principle of emulation and individual excellence. It will be quite as bad, in my judgment, as the power of great corporations. The latter can be curbed, and it will in some way be broken when it becomes too dangerous. But a general reducing of mankind to a dead level, such as must happen when the State manages and owns the great industries and wages are fixed by vote at the elections, would, if it were possible to succeed, be destructive of everything which makes life worth living or manhood worth respecting. But there is no permanent danger, I think, from socialism. The Socialist, whether he be a dreamer in some college hall or some idle and restless agitator, fails to take into account one important and essential thing in making his calculation; that is, human nature. Socialism may do for China or for Turkey, but it will never be a Yankee remedy.

I do not think the remedy of the Socialist will help us. I have no belief in the Government ownership of lands, or of wheat fields, or of railroads, or of factories, save as a last and desperate resort, to which I am sure the American people never need to come.

If the Government is to own the coal, it must by the same reasoning, when the times are hard, take possession of the manufacture of shoes, of woolen cloth, and of cotton; and on the same principle it must take possession of other manufacture and trade on which men are depending for any necessary of life. The men who ask for wages will have the same desire and the same right to an increase of their wages and to better their condition. But then the difficulty will be that in every election the question of wages and of hours and of convenient conditions will become political questions, and the men who aspire to political power will seek to win the support of the wage-earner on the issue of fixing their wages. Under Government control no distinction could be made between skill and enterprise and intelligence and sluggishness or slackness. Ambition and emulation, from which everything valuable in achievement comes, will be gone. The Socialist, when he proposes his social schemes, fails, as I just said, to take into account one essential consideration, that is human nature. The Socialist's remedy preserves the worst evil of the abuse of which we complain, and that is the destruction of individual ambition and emulation.

It is well known to students of history that the English people at a very early day were compelled to limit with great strictness the power of holding lands in mortmain and in trust or upon uses, or for the use of other than their legal owners.

One great evil, of course, was a monopoly of the lands of the realm in a few hands, a monopoly which primogeniture also tended largely to foster.

But the evil of holding lands in mortmain by incorporated persons was not merely the aggregation of great estates in single hands, but also that these estates were never, in the course of law, brought under public authority for settlement, as in the case of inheritance, or of the personal property of ordinary subjects. This latter evil and danger exists here to-day in the case of every powerful and wealthy corporation. The corporation does not die. Its business is not settled and wound up whenever one partner dies or goes out of business or is unwilling, except so far as the State may see fit, to regulate them; and there are many corporations too powerful to be regulated by the States that create them. Their transactions, although they control so largely the business of the country—even the necessaries of life—are conducted in secrecy and without control by State or national authority. There is no power in this country strong enough to deal with them, save the national power alone. We have many such corporations more powerful than many single States, and more powerful than many countries now existing. Their powers are imperial within their own domain, and their domain is imperial also. We, and we alone, can subject them to imperial restraints.

So we must remember that we are dealing with the most important question that has come up for legislation for a long time, or is likely to come up for a long time to come. We are to deal not only with foreign commerce, but with that compared with which our foreign commerce and the foreign commerce of the world are but a drop in the bucket—the domestic commerce of the United States. No statistics can measure it. No imagination can grasp it. No human intelligence can comprehend it. I have no doubt it is greater than any other commerce on earth. I incline to believe that it is greater than that of all the domestic commerce of the world put together. That commerce is conducted largely by these artificial beings called corporations and joint stock companies. It can not be conducted with convenience or safety in any other way. It must necessarily be conducted as all great business is conducted, by large aggregations of capital. We can not help it if we would. We would not help it if we could. The public can not get along without them, unless we would turn the United States into another Siberia. I remember very well, Mr. President, when the railroad that extends from Albany to Buffalo was owned by seven different corporations, each having its own separate mechanism, and each having no connection with the others. If there came a great snow storm one road would clear its track in a day, but those on each side of it might take a week. The passenger got his ticket for each road, and the shipper dealt with seven separate, different carriers. Now the railroad is under one management and crosses the continent from one ocean to the other, and it will soon cross the continent under the same ownership. So we must, in devising our remedy, go cautiously and slowly. "We must calmly bear the ills we have rather than fly to those we know not of." Our engineering must be conducted like that wonder of the engineer's art which some of us remember to have witnessed when the foundation of the Washington Monument, originally designed to support a structure 80 or 100 feet high, was removed from under it by a great engineer, and another substituted to support the structure of 555 feet in height, and there was not a crack, or a leaning, or a sinking by a hair's breadth in the whole operation. We can do the same thing in protecting our commerce and our country from the danger I have described if we will approach our task in the spirit of statesmanship, and not in the spirit of party, and will settle these questions with our judgment and brains, and not with our angers and prejudices.

We have taken already two steps wisely and carefully to protect the people against these great combinations of capital. One has been by the establishment of the Interstate Commerce Commission, conferring on it large, though limited, powers. That has been due largely to the sagacity of my honorable friend from Illinois, lately chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I understand that he thinks it desirable to clothe that Commission with further power, and especially to enable it to enforce its own decrees as far as, constitutionally, may be done without recourse to the courts. I hope the Senate will follow his lead in that matter.

The other step is one with which I had more to do personally. That was the statute of 1890, commonly called the Sherman anti-trust law. It was so called, I suppose, lucus a non lucendo, because Mr. Sherman had nothing to do with it whatever. It was the singular fortune of that eminent statesman that two important laws should be called by his name, the anti-trust law and the Sherman silver law, to one of which he certainly was very much opposed, and by the other we adopted a remedy for the existing evil totally different from that he had thought of or proposed.

The law of 1890 has accomplished more, I believe, than was expected of it when it was passed. We undertook by law to clothe the courts with the power and impose on them and the Department of Justice the duty of preventing all combinations in restraint of trade. It was believed that the phrase "in restraint of trade" had a technical and well-understood meaning in the law. It was not thought that it included every restraint of trade, whether healthy or injurious. It was not expected that two men could not go into partnership, each of whom should be restrained by contract from conducting the business in which the partnership was engaged on his private account or from conducting it in any manner contrary to the articles of partnership. It was not expected that two rival carriers could not agree not to do business in competition with each other or that a business man or corporation could not sell out his or its good will and agree not to carry on business in a particular locality.

It was not expected either that it would wholly or even largely remedy the existing evil, still less that it would be an absolute security against all threatened dangers. The Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate when they reported it, and the two Houses when they enacted it, were well aware of the gravity of the matter with which they were dealing, and that they should not do anything to cripple or break down the business of the country. They expected that there would grow up under it a body of decisions in which the court should expound it reasonably, and when these decisions were promulgated that other and additional remedies would be provided by law.

We were disappointed in one particular. The court by one majority, and against the very earnest and emphatic dissent of some of its great lawyers, declined to give a technical meaning to the phrase "in restraint of trade," and held in one important case that if trade were restrained by an agreement it was no matter whether it were injuriously restrained or no.

We did not put into our bill the words "unlawfully and improperly restrained," because we were afraid it would be objected that we were giving the court a legislative power to declare what was improper. We supposed the court would interpret the law, and that these things which had been by the established and recognized law held to be contrary to public policy, like oppressive agreements, agreements clearly wicked, though not prohibited by existing law, agreements which were to destroy the purposes for which the aggregate powers had been created, would be held to be within its prohibition. We supposed that that phrase would be construed by the court in a manner like that in which the analogous term "conspiracy" had been construed. A conspiracy is not held to be every agreement or combining together; but conspiracy is held to be the combining together of two or more persons to do an unlawful act by lawful means, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. But the unlawful act and the unlawful means are everywhere held to include such acts and such means only as are contrary to settled public policy, whether prohibited by express law or no. So we supposed that a contract of partnership, though it restrained the persons from trade beyond the limits of a partnership, would be held perfectly lawful; and that in a contract where two corporations, who were both ruining themselves by undertaking to do business for too large a territory for their resources, agreed to divide the territory between them, the agreement would be held to be perfectly lawful; while a conspiracy to get a monopoly of the market by tricks or devices of subterfuge would be held unlawful.

This whole distinction and the whole doctrine on which the committee proceeded is simply and well summed up in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, certainly a high authority in all matters of local phraseology and definition.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE.—Contracts operating for the restraint of trade are presumptively illegal and void on the ground of the policy of the law favoring freedom of trade, but the presumption of illegality may be rebutted by the occasion and circumstances (2 Pars. Contr., 870. See 7 C. C. App., 15). Thus in agreements for the sale of the good will of a firm, or the formation or the dissolution of a partnership, provisions operating in restraint of trade are frequently inserted. Their validity depends upon whether the restraint is such only as to afford a fair protection to the interests of the party in whose favor it is imposed (Leake, Contr., 633: 49 N. J. Eq., 217). Whatever restraint is larger than is necessary for the protection of this party is void; therefore the restraint must be limited in regard to space (5 M. & W., 562; L. R. 15 Eq., 59). An agreement reasonable in regard to space may be unlimited in regard to the duration of time provided for, but where the question is as to whether the space is unlimited, the duration of the restraint in point of time may become an important matter (Leake, Contr., 634; 2 M. & G., 20). It has been said generally that where a covenant in restraint of trade is general—that is, without qualifications—it is bad, as being unreasonable and contrary to public policy. Where it is partial—that is, subject to some qualification either as to time or space—then the question is whether it is reasonable, and if reasonable it is good in law (1892, 3 Ch., 447).

There are cases where an unlimited restraint is justified; e. g., the sale of a secret process of manufacture of an article in general demand, which it is agreed shall be communicated for the exclusive benefit of the buyer. (See L. R., 9 Eq., 45; 131 U. S., 88.) So of the sale of a patent right, the restraint may be unlimited while the patent continues (1 H. and N., 189).

But, Mr. President, in spite of that disappointment, the measure has, in my opinion, accomplished all, and more, than its friends expected. The Attorney-General's speech at Pittsburg, with which all Senators are familiar, and to which I have already referred, shows a part only of what has been achieved.

Attorney-General Knox well says in his late speech at Pittsburg:

If Congress under its power to regulate interstate commerce may utterly destroy a combination and forfeit its property in interstate transit, as the Sherman Act provides, it seems reasonable to say that it can in the exercise of the same power deny to a combination whose life it can not reach the privilege of engaging in interstate commerce except upon such terms as Congress may prescribe to protect that commerce from restraint. Such a regulation would operate directly upon commerce and only indirectly upon the instrumentalities and operations of production.

I am glad that the opinion I have long entertained, as to the way to reach this evil, seems to be fortified by so high an authority.

I desire to say in this connection that the Attorney-General, while he states so clearly and correctly the limitations and defects of the existing law, has already been able to accomplish more, I think, than its framers expected with the limited and imperfect means at his command.

He tells us what the Government has already accomplished:

It has destroyed the combination known as the Addystone Pipe Combination, upon the ground that it was a conspiracy among independent producers of pipe to restrain its sale and distribution among the States. He has also broken up a combination of the six largest meat-packing concerns in this country, known as the Beef Trust, who were in combination with each other and with many great railway lines, whereby they secured large secret concessions in rates for the transportation of their products, which enabled them practically to monopolize the fresh and cured meat industry of the United States. He has brought 14 suits in equity against a combination of railroads, and got injunctions which are still in force, restraining them from making any rebate or granting any preference whatever to any shipper. He has also broken up a pooling arrangement between the Southern railroads which denied the right of the persons interested in the cotton product of the South—the shippers—to prescribe the route over which their goods should pass, and put an end to that illegal proceeding. He also brought a suit in equity for preventing the operation of a proposed merger of sundry transcontinental railroads as competing lines, which had been effected by a combination and accompanied by a large inflation of the stock.

So he has gone far already under the existing law to break up a monopoly which affected the whole freight and passenger traffic of the Northwest, another affecting the cotton traffic of the South, and another the price of beef, a prime article of food.

In the course of this litigation already important decisions have been made by the courts, which throw very much light upon the whole subject, and are important guides, as well for future legislation as for future Executive action.

The power of Congress to pass the present bill depends upon the principle I have just stated in the language I have just quoted from the Attorney-General's speech. I laid down the same proposition as well as I could in a speech made in Boston early in the late campaign.

The bill I have drawn is an exceedingly imperfect one. It is but one step further. I adhere to the opinion I entertained when the present law was drawn—that we should go very slowly and carefully, taking one step in legislation at a time; and then waiting for the exposition of the courts, and until some practical trial has taught the law officers of the Government what is practicable and what is needful. It was with that expectation that the law, commonly called the Sherman antitrust law, was fashioned. Our late friend and colleague, Mr. Sherman, had the singular good fortune of having named for him two measures, with neither of which, as they took their final shape, he had anything to do, and to both of which he was exceedingly averse. These measures are what were known as the Sherman silver law and the Sherman antitrust law.

The present bill, as I have said, goes but a little way. It is tentative and experimental. I think it is entirely safe. Of course new views on some of its provisions, or all of them, may present themselves. It will undoubtedly require modification and improvement. But it is all I have to offer to-day.

It depends for its constitutionality and its accomplishment upon one simple consideration, which I think enables it to steer clear of the constitutional difficulties and perplexities which have surrounded other attempts to deal with this subject.

Natural persons have their constitutional rights, with which we can not interfere, if we would. There is a boundary for commerce, although not always capable of the most exact definition, between the jurisdiction of the State and that of the nation. The courts have held that the fact that an article is manufactured with the expectation that it will be sold from one State to another, or be transported from one State to another, or that it is sold in a State to be sold again from one State to another does not make the manufacture or the sale a part of interstate commerce and so subject it to the jurisdiction of Congress. But I suppose it is well settled that every State or country may prescribe the conditions on which the artificial beings called corporations or joint stock companies, who ordinarily carry on business without personal liability of their stockholders for their debts, may engage in business within their jurisdiction. The corporation created by one State holds property or carries on commerce in another State merely by comity. No State in general can prescribe conditions on a citizen of another State which it does not impose on its own. But it may require of that foreign corporation any reasonable condition that it may think fit. It may require it to have an agency which shall accept service in the State courts, to make returns to the State treasurer, and to deposit attachable property where it can be reached by State process, for security. I suppose there can be no reasonable doubt that Congress can impose upon a corporation created by any State such obligations as it shall think fit and reasonable as a condition for its being permitted to engage in commerce with foreign nations and among the several States at all. That is the theory upon which this proposed legislation is based.

Congress can refuse to permit any corporation whatever to engage in interstate or international commerce. It may reserve the power to create such corporations to itself exclusively. It can not regulate commerce unless it can regulate and control the instrumentalities of commerce. This bill, I believe, only exercises powers for such regulation as are familiar in the legislation of all well-ordered States—requiring proper returns; showing the strength and condition of the corporation; requiring the prohibition of watered stock; requiring that the stock shall be paid in in full in cash; the prohibition of oppression of citizenship or rivals; the subjection of officers and of members to personal liability absolutely, or on prescribed conditions, are familiar examples of legislative action. No man can charge this proposed legislation with being oppressive or unreasonable, as I conceive, without setting himself against the legislative precedents in every State in the American Union.

If this bill shall become a law and prove effective, no corporation engaging in the commerce which is within the jurisdiction of Congress can keep its condition a secret. No such corporation can do business on fictitious capital or watered stock. No corporation can oppress any rival, whether corporate or individual, by any unlawful practices. If it do, it will be on the condition that every one of its managers become personally liable for its debts, and its torts, and will be liable also to heavy criminal liability. This bill depends for its validity on the constitutional power of Congress to regulate international and interstate commerce.

It exercises that power by prohibiting artificial beings, created by a power other than its own, from engaging or continuing in such commerce except on certain strict conditions.

These conditions are: First, publicity in the conduct of their business and the constitution of their organization; second, the power to stop their business altogether if they violate the laws enacted by Congress; third, strict penalties on them and their officers for such violations; fourth, personal liability for all debts, obligations, and wrongdoings of the directors, officers, and agents unless the laws be fully complied with. This liability is secured by requiring the personal consent to the provisions of this bill and acceptance of all its obligations by such officers, directors, and agents before they enter upon office.

If this bill shall not prove effectual, it will be easy to extend its operation by imposing a like personal liability on every stockholder. That will destroy the power of selling such stocks in the market, and will deter every owner of capital from embarking his property in such undertaking. It is quite likely that this bill may be improved in its passage through Congress. It is quite likely that it will be found defective. A trial in court, conducted by such counsel as represent the Government and as are likely to represent great corporations in danger of punishment for great offenses, is a great sharpener of the wits. The people will get an education within the next few years, in the benefit of which we and our successors will have a large share. It is better, I think, to go carefully, one step at a time; to repair and strengthen our edifice rather than to undertake any rash measure which might bring the whole temple down upon our heads.

During the delivery of Mr. HOAR'S speech,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Massachusetts please suspend for one moment? The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily until my colleague has concluded his speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Massachusetts asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the senior Senator from Massachusetts shall have concluded his speech. Is there objection?

Mr. FORAKER. That is to be done with the understanding that we shall take up the unfinished business after the conclusion of the Senator's speech?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be the unfinished business then. The Chair hears no objection.

After the conclusion of Mr. HOAR'S speech,

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 3708) granting an increase of pension to Nannie M. Kimberly.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, in my remarks yesterday I laid down in a plain, unvarnished, and simple manner some of the general rules and principles that ought to govern us in the matter of the admission of Territories into the Union. Among other things I showed was the great advantage to the several Territories, while they are in a formative state, to remain in that condition for the protection of their own people against the exploitation of politicians, promoters, and stock jobbers. I showed how, in spite of an act of Congress upon our statute book forbidding them incurring debts for certain purposes and beyond certain limits, that they still had in many instances exceeded those limits, and exceeded the conditions of the act known as the Harrison Act; how they had come to Congress to legalize such illegally acquired indebtedness; how they had attempted in a most unusual manner to make the debts of townships, of cities, of counties, and of school districts—mere local debts—the debt of the Territory, and in the case of Arizona had succeeded in saddling such debt on the Territory, and how, in the case of New Mexico, they had attempted to do the same thing, and had actually secured the passage of a bill for that purpose through the House of Representatives, which was afterwards defeated in this body.

Yesterday I took up the case of Arizona and explained the conditions in that Territory. To-day I propose to discuss, in a plain and dispassionate manner, the conditions prevailing in the Territory of New Mexico. I hope to show by the facts that I shall present to the Senate that that Territory to-day is far from being fit to become a member of the American Union. I shall show that some of the conditions which existed there years ago still exist to-day and that in all that pertains to good government, in all that pertains to American institutions, New Mexico is still in a more backward state than any of our Territorial possessions between the two great oceans.

As we approach the consideration of New Mexico, we can not help noticing, in the first instance, as we look into the history of that country and examine the testimony taken by the subcommittee who visited that country, that there is still a Spanish aroma about that Territory and its population which distinguishes it from all our other Territories except some of our recently acquired territorial possessions.

That Territory is really a part of old Mexico injected into the United States. It still possesses many of the peculiar Spanish-Mexican qualities that it had when it first came into our keeping. Where the giant Mississippi enters the Gulf of Mexico, for miles into the sea the muddy and yellow water of the river is clearly distinguishable from the waters of the ocean; and so this stream of old Mexico injected into New Mexico is still clearly distinguishable from all its surroundings and in a great measure still retains its original texture and quality.

Before the advent of the Spaniards it was and for many years had been the home of the Pueblo Indians—a peaceful, quiet, industrious, and partially civilized people, entirely different from the other native races of our country. These people lived in little villages or towns and were cultivating to a limited extent some of the lands adjoining their pueblos. The early explorers found them practically occupying the same region and the same towns that to-day constitute the settled and developed portions of New Mexico.

In Bancroft's History of New Mexico are two maps, one showing the settlements in the country when Coronado first explored it and the other showing the Pueblo settlements at the close of the sixteenth century. If we compare those maps of the Pueblo settlements with the modern maps of New Mexico showing the settlements to-day, we find that there has not been much growth, expansion, or progress; that the settlements to-day are largely confined to the same area, the same territory, the same valleys, and along the same streams as they were in those early days, and many of the most prosperous towns there to-day are located upon the ancient Pueblo sites that were there when the Spanish invaded the country.

Among the earliest settlements made by Europeans in this country were those of the Spaniards in New Mexico. It is curious and interesting—and I ask pardon of the Senate for going into it—to read a brief summary and history of these early explorations. Among the earliest explorers from whom we obtain any authentic information—there were a few preceding, but nothing definite is known of their history—was Coronado, who discovered and occupied the Territory in 1540. He found at that time the Pueblo Indians located principally in the valley of the Rio Grande and the valley of the Pecos and on some of the upper tributaries of the Gila River.

The Spaniards were tempted to explore the country by reports of its fabulous wealth, of the great amount of gold and silver that was supposed to be in the country, but when they got there they found nothing but small, peaceable settlements of these Pueblo Indians who were carrying on agriculture and stock raising in a small and feeble way.

The first permanent settlement that was made in New Mexico was made in 1598, three hundred and four years ago. That settlement was made by Juan Onate. He started with a large expedition, composed of 400 men, 83 wagons, and 7,000 head of cattle. It is a remarkable fact, we discover as we inquire into the history of that ancient country, that the best account of that expedition and its results is to be found in a Spanish poem by Captain Villagra, of the Army. It was one of the earliest settlements within the limits of the United States, earlier in fact than that of Massachusetts, earlier than that of Virginia, and, indeed, as early as that of Florida.

While that country was settled at as early a day as the earliest settled portions of our country in the East or Southeast, yet it is curious to compare the progress of the different localities. Massachusetts was first colonized in 1620. It has an area of 8,315 square miles, and, according to the census of 1900, it had a population of 2,805,346. Virginia was first settled in 1607. It has an area of 42,450 square miles and it had a population in 1900 of 1,854,184, while New Mexico, which was settled in 1598 and has an area of 122,580 square miles, in 1900 only had a population of 195,310, and quite a number of that population was composed of Indians, as I shall subsequently show.

If we compare the age of the towns that were first settled in this country, we find that St. Augustine was settled in 1565, Jamestown in 1607, Santa Fe in 1615, and Plymouth about 1620.

By 1680—almost a hundred years after the first settlement by Juan Onate—there was in New Mexico a resident Spanish population of only 2,400. In that year a great insurrection broke out on the part of the Indians under the leadership of Pope, a San Juan Indian, when 450 Spaniards, including 73 soldiers and 21 missionaries, were massacred, and 1,950, including 155 soldiers and 11 missionaries, escaped. Subsequently 3,000 Indians laid siege to Santa Fe. They destroyed and burned all of the town except the plaza, church, and convent, and finally cut off the water supply, forcing the Spaniards to retreat. They continued their retreat until they reached El Paso, on the Rio Grande, a town that was founded in consequence of that retreat in 1681.

In the fall of 1681 Governor Oterim, of New Mexico, attempted a reconquest of the country, but he utterly failed in the effort. In 1692 De Vargas, another Spanish governor, opened a campaign for the reconquest of the country, and finally, by 1695, succeeded in entirely quelling the insurrection and restoring law and order. At that time, or about two years subsequently, there were said to be 1,500 Spaniards in New Mexico. Albuquerque, one of the old towns, was founded in 1706. In 1742 the Spanish population, exclusive of soldiers and their families, was estimated at 9,747. Slight progress was made in agriculture and stock raising under Spanish and Mexican rule, and mining, notwithstanding all that has been reported to the contrary, was wholly in an experimental and exploring state. The Spanish population in 1760 was estimated according to Spanish records at 7,666; in 1793, at 16,156, and in 1798, at 16,065.

In 1799 the Spanish population had grown to 18,826. After the period of two hundred years from the time Juan Onate first settled the country with his expedition, New Mexico had a Spanish population of only 18,826.

Lieutenant Pike was one of the first Americans who entered New Mexico on his return from the exploration of Colorado. He entered that country and was made a prisoner, and finally was sent back within the American lines in 1807. In 1821–22 the famous overland Sante Fe route was established, and for many years there was a great trade carried on by that route, first by means of pack animals, afterwards by means of wagons, mules, horses, and oxen. An immense trade grew up in that country with the people of it, and yet in spite of that immense trade the growth of the country was very slight.

At this time, when the Santa Fe route was opened, there was estimated to be a population of something like 20,000 Spaniards. There were at that time no public schools, no places outside of church schools, conducted by the friars, where the people of the Territory could procure an education.

In 1841 history relates that the Texans, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel McLeod, made an invasion and an attempt to capture the country, but the expedition proved an entire failure, and they were driven back. The Spanish population of New Mexico at the time of the Texas raid was estimated at about 60,000. In 1846 the American Army, under Kearny and Doniphan, for the first time entered New Mexico, and the country remained under military rule until 1850 or 1851, when it was first created into a Territory, together with what is now the Territory of Arizona, substantially. There have been some changes in the boundary, but they are not material for the purpose of this discussion.

In 1847 there was an insurrection started among the Indians, led by the Spanish-Mexicans, Ortez and Archuleta, but the insurrection was of a limited character and was soon suppressed.

In the fall of 1848 a convention was held which petitioned or memorialized Congress for a Territorial government. In September, 1849, another convention, of delegates, was held, which elected a Delegate to Congress and adopted a plan for a Territorial government. In 1850 another convention was held, which formed a constitution for the "State of New Mexico." The constitution was submitted to a vote of the people and ratified by a large vote, and State officers were provisionally elected; also a legislature and a delegate to Congress. This legislature thus elected under that constitution met, and they elected two United States Senators, but the military governor declared the whole proceedings null and void and refused to recognize any of the officers, and the government thus established perished from its own weight and disappeared. In 1850 Congress by an act passed that year first created it a Territory, and in 1851 it was duly organized into a Territorial government.

It is a curious part of the history of that country that in 1861 the Confederates invaded the Territory, but by the end of 1862 were expelled entirely from the Territory and never came there again. It is to the credit of the Mexicans that during the time of the Confederate invasion and during the great civil war most of them were either loyal or passive. Very few of the Mexicans, except a few of the leading families, were disloyal to the Government of the United States.

Now, while negro slavery never existed in New Mexico, they had two other systems of slavery in that Territory, that existed in that country from the time of the settlement of the country down to 1865. They had one form of slavery known as peonage, where they held men for debt. Then they had another system of slavery which consisted in the enslavement of Indian captives. Both systems were very deplorable, especially in the matter of peonage. While it was not a slavery akin to the slavery in the Southern States, yet it was a slavery where they practically held the people for life, and also held their posterity. These two systems of slavery to which I have called the attention of the Senate were not abolished until 1865 by the proclamation of the President, afterwards supplemented by an act of Congress in 1867.

From the first legislative assembly in 1851 down to the twenty-seventh legislative assembly—that is, from 1851 to 1886—nearly all the members were Mexicans with Spanish names, all the proceedings and all the business was conducted in the Spanish language. I read in this connection from the historian Bancroft, from page 634, on this subject. At the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], I will state what Bancroft—it is Hubert Howe Bancroft. He states:

> The first legislative assembly convened at Santa Fe on June 2, 1851. A large majority of the members of council and house were naturally native New Mexicans. I append a list of members of this and the later assemblies down to 1863.

In another place he appends another list of members down to and including the 22d general assembly. He continues:

> About twenty family names include a very large majority of the membership of the whole period; and, indeed, a few wealthy and influential families in each county, in connection with the few American residents, natural-born politicians, controlled the election of representatives and all other matters of Territorial government, with only the slightest interest or action on the part of the masses.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. NELSON. From Bancroft.

I again read from the same historian on the same subject. He says on page 706:

> Next is appended a full list of the members of the legislative assemblies from the thirteenth to the twenty-sixth session. It will be noted that the preponderance of Spanish names is even more marked than in the assemblies of earlier years. Indeed, until the last sessions, almost the whole membership was made up of native New Mexicans, all business being transacted in the Spanish language, so that the journals and laws had to be translated into English for publication.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator please state what he is reading from?

Mr. NELSON. Bancroft's History of Arizona and New Mexico—1530–1888.

Mr. FORAKER. What page?

Mr. NELSON. From page 706 to 709, inclusive.

Mr. FORAKER. And as to what period is that?

Mr. NELSON. That covers practically the time from the date when New Mexico was organized as a Territory down to 1885 or 1886.

A few prominent families in each county still controlled the elections, though perhaps in somewhat less degree than formerly.

This shows, and I call attention to the fact, that in all that period from 1851, when the Territorial government was first organized, down to 1885 or 1886 nearly all the members of the legislative assembly had Mexican and Spanish names. That in itself was not anything to their discredit, but all the proceedings of the legislature, the journals, and everything else were in the Spanish language, and a few leading families controlled the elections in the different counties.

I have called attention to this fact because the same conditions now exist. An examination of the testimony taken before the committee will show that to a large extent the elections to-day are controlled by a few leading families, and that the masses of the people take little interest in them and are guided and controlled by a few prominent families or a few prominent leaders.

In 1850—and I want to trace the growth of the Territory to show how it has progressed in the matter of population and also in the matter of education—New Mexico had a population, exclusive of Indians, of 61,547; of these over 50,000 were Spanish Mexicans. In 1860 the population, exclusive of Indians, was 80,000, and of these more than 60,000 were Spanish Mexicans.

Of the population in 1850—and this illustrates the low standard of education—there were 25,085 adults who could neither read nor write. Of the population in 1860, ten years subsequent, there were 32,785 adults who were in the same condition and could neither read nor write. There were practically no public schools in the Territory at that time.

In 1870 New Mexico had a population, exclusive of Indians, of 90,573 and in 1880 of 109,793. Education at the time of the census of 1880 was at a very low ebb. Let me give an illustration. In 1880 there were in the Territory only 162 schools, with an attendance of 3,150 pupils. The historian, Bancroft, from whom I have already quoted, says:

The mixture of language and religion, with a great preponderance of Spanish and the Catholic faith, have been the great obstacles.

Referring to education in that Territory, while there was some legislation during that period looking to the establishment of public schools, no material results were reached prior to 1888. It was not until that year that a Territorial act establishing a public system of education was first passed. In this connection I beg leave to quote from the testimony on this subject. It is the testimony of Governor Thomas Hughes.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. From what page of the testimony is the Senator going to read?

Mr. NELSON. I read from page 64 of the testimony. Governor Hughes says:

In 1887 I had the honor of introducing into the legislature the first public-school bill. It was beaten, but the next session it was passed.

According to the last census there were 599 schools in the Territory, with a school population of 69,710—that is, of persons within school age—and the attendance was only 28,672.

In 1891, according to the report of the Commissioner of Education to the Secretary of the Interior, based on Governor Otero's report, the number of schools was 726, the school population was 62,864, and the attendance only 29,821.

In 1900 the average percentage of attendance for the entire country, exclusive of our outside possessions, was 51.2 per cent of the school population, while for New Mexico at the same period it was only 41.1, a difference of more than 10 per cent less in New Mexico than the average of the country.

The census report shows the rate of illiteracy to be very high—28.3 per cent, higher than that of Arizona, and on a par with that of Alaska; it is only exceeded by that of a few of the old slave States: and if the illiteracy was measured by a knowledge of the English language, over 50 per cent would be classed as illiterates.

As to the population of New Mexico, it is claimed that lately it has grown very much. The total population in 1900 was 195,310. Of that which the census reported there were 2,937 Indians not taxed. So the total population entitled to representation was at that time 192,373—a little less than the ratio necessary for a Representative in the other House of Congress.

Governor Otero in his last report estimates the population at 234,000, which is out of all reason, as I shall show by the growth of the Territory in the period from 1890 to 1900. He estimates the population to-day, as I have stated, at 234,000, and then out of this he estimates the Spanish-Mexican population at 144,000 and the American population at only 90,000. Applying this ratio to the census of 1900, there would appear to be 118,000 Spanish-Mexicans and 74,000 Americans in the Territory.

From 1860 to 1870, according to the census reports, the population really decreased, and from 1890 to 1900, while there was some increase, it was of quite a limited character, the increase from 1890 to 1900 being only 3,500 per year.

According to the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs there were in 1901 19,284 Indians in New Mexico. Deducting from this the Pueblo Indians, to whom allotments of one kind and another have been made, 8,005 in all, and the other Indians to whom allotments have been made, 845 in all, it makes a total of 8,850; and it leaves 10,434 Indians, not taxable, not citizens, and not entitled to representation. Deducting this from the total population it leaves a population of 184,876 entitled to representation.

In this connection, on the subject of Indian population in the Territory of New Mexico, I beg leave to read the following letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, December 22, 1902.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON, United States Senate.

SIR: Referring to your letter dated the 22d instant, requesting information in regard to Indian reservations and Indians in the Territory of New Mexico, there are inclosed herewith excerpts from the annual report of this office for 1901, showing the Indian reservations in said Territory, their area, the number and areas of the allotments, and the Indian population by tribes.

The total area of the reservations is 1,793,798.35 acres. Of this quantity 129,513.35 acres have been allotted to 845 Indians of the Jicarilla Apache Reservation. There are no other allotments in New Mexico, strictly so called. However, the Indians of the several pueblos (Pueblo tribe) have most of their lands divided up among themselves, in accordance with tribal laws and usages which have obtained for many generations.

The Indian population of said Territory is 9,234. In this connection attention is invited to my letter of the 16th instant, respecting Indians in Arizona, in which it was stated that possibly 10,000 Indians of the Navaho tribe live the greater part of the time in New Mexico. All the Navaho, however, are counted in the total population of Arizona. Strictly speaking, therefore, the Indian population in New Mexico is about 19,284.

Very respectfully, W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

Deducting from this total the Pueblo Indians and the other Indians to whom allotments have been made, aggregating 8,850, that leaves, as I have already said, 10,434 Indian population in New Mexico.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, this portion of the speech of the Senator from Minnesota, like all that has gone before, is important and interesting, and I notice the absence of many Senators, possibly occasioned by lunch, but a notable absence of many who are reputed to be in favor of the omnibus bill. I think that this speech should be heard, and I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum and ask that the roll be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Cockrell,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.
Allison,	Cullom,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, N. Y.
Bacon,	Depew,	Kean,	Quarles,
Bard,	Dillingham,	McCumber,	Scott,
Bate,	Dolliver,	Mallory,	Spooner,
Berry,	Dryden,	Martin,	Tillman,
Beveridge,	Dubois,	Morgan,	Turner,
Burrows,	Fairbanks,	Nelson,	Vest,
Clark, Wyo.	Foraker,	Perkins,	Warren.
Clay,	Hanna,	Pettus.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is no quorum present. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is nothing to do but to wait for a quorum, should that be the pleasure of the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the absentees be sent for.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is no objection to that.

Mr. BATE. Call the absentees.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I ask that the names of the absentees be first called, and then that absent Senators be sent for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks that the Sergeant-at-Arms request the presence of absent Senators.

Mr. FORAKER. The request is that the names of absentees be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The names of the absentees will be called.

The Secretary read the list of absentees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair desires to state that his colleague [Mr. HEITFELD] is detained at home unavoidably and can not be present.

Mr. BATE. My colleague [Mr. CARMACK] is not well enough to be present. He is suffering from his eyes and can not be out. He is necessarily absent.

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. FORAKER. There is before the Senate a request which, I think, takes precedence of that motion. I asked that absent Senators, except those for whom excuses have been made, should be sent for by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the request of the Senator?

Mr. FORAKER. The request is that the Sergeant-at-Arms ask absent Senators to attend in the Senate—all those except the ones for whom excuses have been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that a motion to adjourn is always in order.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly, a motion to adjourn is in order; I do not question that; but I appeal to the Senator from Alabama to allow action upon the request which I had made before he made the motion to adjourn.

Mr. McCOMAS entered the Chamber, and answered to his name.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to inquire how many Senators are present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty Senators are now present.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Alabama, that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. FORAKER. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPOONER. May I be permitted to inquire what is the question before the Senate? I have been out of the Senate Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama, that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Alabama made the motion to adjourn, and upon it I have called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ELKINS entered the Chamber, and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama, that the Senate adjourn.

The Secretary called the roll; and the result was announced—yeas 9, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—9.

Bard,	Jones, Ark.	Nelson,	Quarles,
Beveridge,	Kean,	Pettus,	Scott.
Depew,

NAYS—31.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Lodge,	Platt, N. Y.
Allison,	Dillingham,	McComas,	Proctor,
Bacon,	Dolliver,	McCumber,	Spooner,
Bate,	Dubois,	Mallory,	Tillman,
Berry,	Elkins,	Martin,	Turner,
Burrows,	Fairbanks,	Morgan,	Vest,
Clark, Wyo.	Foraker,	Perkins	Warren.
Clay,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.

NOT VOTING—48.

Alger,	Dietrich,	Hawley,	Patterson,
Bailey,	Dryden,	Heitfeld,	Penrose,
Blackburn,	Foster, La.	Jones, Nev.	Pritchard,
Burnham,	Foster, Wash.	Kearns,	Quay,
Burton,	Frye,	Kittredge,	Rawlins,
Carmack,	Gallinger,	McEnery,	Simmons,
Clapp,	Gamble,	McLaurin, Miss.	Simon,
Clark, Mont.	Gibson,	McLaurin, S. C.	Stewart,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Mason,	Taliaferro,
Culberson,	Hanna,	Millard,	Teller,
Daniel,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell,	Wellington,
Deboe,	Harris,	Money,	Wetmore.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Several SENATORS. No quorum!

Mr. FORAKER. I renew my request that the absentees be sent for.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BATE. Does not the fact, revealed by the vote, of the absence of a quorum necessitate another call of the Senate?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thought so. I was just about to say, when the Senator from Tennessee rose, that while of course my services in this body and my experience have been very brief, that during that brief time——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the fact that debate is not in order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is not in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate of any kind.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not going to debate any question, Mr. President. I do not know that the request made by the Senator from Ohio is a privileged request.

Mr. FORAKER. There is nothing in order except that request.

Mr. LODGE. Nothing else.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Perhaps that is so. I said I did not know that that was so, and unless the Senator can quote it from the Rules I shall beg leave to doubt it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio, that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the presence of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I still think the Senator from Tennessee is correct in his statement that when a call of the Senate——

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. The point of order is that nothing is in order but the execution of the order of the Senate on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is entirely correct. There is nothing in order until the Sergeant-at-Arms executes the order of the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I serve notice on the Senator from Massachusetts that I will make my observation afterwards.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, a parliamentary question, and it is this: Whenever a vote is taken and that vote reveals the absence of a quorum, it is the duty of the Chair to have the roll of the Senate called. I raise that parliamentary question, and if it be correct, I ask that the roll be called.

Mr. SCOTT. I rise to inquire whether a motion to take a recess is in order at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No motion whatever is in order at this time. Nothing can be done until the order of the Senate is executed by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. NELSON. A motion to adjourn is in order, because business has been transacted since the prior motion was voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion to adjourn is in order.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, am I not entitled to a decision of the Chair on the parliamentary inquiry? My point is, is it not the duty of the Chair, of his own motion, to have the roll of the Senate called whenever any vote reveals the fact of the want of a quorum? I have a right to a decision of the Chair on the inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair will say to the Senator from Tennessee that the first roll call disclosed the absence of a quorum. Then a motion was made to adjourn. On that the yeas and nays were called. That vote also disclosed the absence of a quorum. Then the motion of the Senator from Ohio, in the judgment of the Chair, was in order——

Mr. BATE. That is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without any further call of the roll, because the fact of the absence of a quorum had twice been disclosed. The Chair thinks that nothing is in order——

Mr. BATE. Pardon me. There was a vote taken by a call of the roll. After that had been done and after the fact had been known that there was not a quorum present others came in, as the roll itself will show. Then does it not become the duty of the Chair to have the roll called again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not, because the vote disclosed the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should like to understand the ruling of the Chair, which now I do not quite understand. I understand the point of the Senator from Tennessee to be that when a yea-and-nay vote is taken and the result of the vote shows the absence of a quorum, that of itself and upon its face requires the Presiding Officer to order again a roll call of the Senate to discern whether or not a quorum has arrived since the vote was taken.

Mr. BATE. That is the point.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Do I understand the Chair to rule that that is not the case and that the thing may remain without any action? Is not that a thing which automatically corrects itself? I do not see any answer to the position of the Senator from Tennessee, but I am not as yet skilled in the rules of the Senate. However, I do ask the ruling of the Chair upon that point, so that I myself can understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled once that the previous roll call disclosed the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then a motion was made to adjourn, and on that the yeas and nays were called. That vote disclosed the absence of a quorum, and then the motion of the Senator from Ohio was in order, directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to request the presence of absent Senators. He is now discharging that duty. There is no necessity for again calling the roll. There is now in the hands of the Sergeant-at-Arms a list of the absent Senators.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senate is pursuing a well-known precedent. We have had to-day a great speech from a great statesman and a great orator. While we all may not agree with him in the conclusions at which he arrived, nevertheless the speech itself was one of those efforts which give——

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I make the point of order that no debate is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that no debate is in order.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think the point of order is well taken. That is not debate.

Mr. DEPEW. It is not debate. This is a statement—a statement of fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York can only proceed by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator will proceed.

Mr. DEPEW. It is a statement of fact, and the Senator from Arkansas wants me to state what I am now proceeding to say.

It has been the custom of this body, I understand, though I am not an old member, when a speech of that character has been delivered to adjourn. Most of the Senators who listened to that effort have gone to their various residences for the purpose of thinking over and digesting it. The Senate is in no mood, after an effort of that lofty range and dignity, to attend to the ordinary routine of business at this late hour in the afternoon. We will sit here long and wearily for a quorum, and when we get it the Senate will immediately adjourn without giving to the adjournment the dignity which we can give it now by adjourning, because we are satisfied with the day's proceedings after the effort of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. DEPEW. I therefore move that the Senate now adjourn.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Wisconsin was mistaken when he announced that he did not think there was any debate intended on the part of the Senator from New York.

Mr. SPOONER. I said what the Senator had uttered indicated no purpose of debate.

Mr. FORAKER. What he had uttered up to that point, but it has been made manifest that there was a purpose in it, and it was in the nature of an argument in support of a motion to adjourn.

I rise for the purpose of objecting to the transaction of any further business. Of course, if the Senator sees fit to renew the motion to adjourn, that motion is always in order, but I hope we shall vote it down.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate do now adjourn. Debate is not in order.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not asking for debate, but I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is that in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is in order, pending the motion to adjourn.

Mr. TILLMAN. The vote on adjournment having disclosed the fact that there was no quorum and an order of the Senate having been taken to bring in absentees, I wish to know how, when enough absentees appear, we are to discover that we have a quorum and can do business? How will that be done without a roll call? I think we have a quorum present. I know we have.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the question of the Senator from South Carolina is a pertinent one. If the Chair will look at subdivision 3 of Rule V, I think it clearly contemplates the roll call when it may be demanded, because it says:

Whenever upon such roll call——

That is the one which was referred to and which disclosed the absence of a quorum—

Whenever upon such roll call it shall be ascertained that a quorum is not present, a majority of the Senators present—

That answers the Senator from New York. It is not the Chair's business—a majority of the Senators present may direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request, and, when necessary, to compel the attendance of the absent Senators, which order shall be determined without debate—

That has been done—

and pending its execution, and until a quorum shall be present, no debate nor motion, except to adjourn, shall be in order.

Mr. BATE. But there was business, Mr. President. There was a roll call again upon the motion to adjourn, and it was found that we did not have a quorum. Now, then——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator——

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not yet received an answer to my inquiry. I should like to have the Chair decide how we are to find out whether we have a quorum without a call of the roll.

Mr. BERRY. The Sergeant-at-Arms will make his report, I will say to the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll is being called at the present time, and the Sergeant-at-Arms is out trying to find absent Senators who will answer to the roll call which is now in progress.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the roll call on the motion to adjourn is the one now pending, how did the Senator from Ohio get his order to have the absentees called in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By a majority vote of the Senate, a quorum not being present, the Senate refused to adjourn. The Senator from Ohio then moved that the Sergeant-at-Arms bring in absent Senators. That is entirely correct.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is being done?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is being done now.

Mr. TILLMAN. But when will those absent Senators make their presence known unless you continue the roll call? Are the Senators who are being arrested, or requested, or coerced to come here going to be brought in bodily and presented to us as absentees, or are we going to let them sneak in, so to speak, and escape the punishment which is due them for a neglect of their duties?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Can the Senator from South Carolina comprehend that the roll call is now in progress and has not been completed?

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator thinks he can comprehend that it is not the actual fact, and he doubts very much whether in the opinion of the Chair it is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant-at-Arms was directed by the Senate to bring Senators in to answer to the roll call.

Mr. TILLMAN. In the meantime a motion to adjourn is made, and that is in order according to the rule just read by the Senator from Wisconsin. If we will take a yea-and-nay vote, I think we will discover whether we have a quorum. I therefore call for the regular order, which is the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. FORAKER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion of the Senator from New York to adjourn, the Senator from Ohio asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, the result was announced—yeas 6, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—6.

Bard,	Depew,	Platt, N. Y.	Scott.
Beveridge,	Pettus,

NAYS—32.

Aldrich,	Cockrell,	Hanna,	Morgan,
Allison,	Cullom,	Hoar,	Perkins,
Bacon,	Dillingham,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.
Bate,	Dolliver,	Kean,	Spooner,
Berry,	Dubois,	McCumber,	Tillman,
Burrows,	Elkins,	Mallory,	Turner,
Clark, Wyo.	Fairbanks,	Martin,	Vest,
Clay,	Foraker,	Mitchell,	Warren.

ABSENT AND NOT VOTING—50.

Alger,	Foster, La.	Kittredge,	Proctor,
Bailey,	Foster, Wash.	Lodge,	Quarles,
Blackburn,	Frye,	McComas,	Quay,
Burnham,	Gallinger,	McEnery,	Rawlins,
Burton.	Gamble,	McLaurin, Miss.	Simmons,
Carmack,	Gibson,	McLaurin, S. C.	Simon,
Clapp,	Hale,	Mason,	Stewart,
Clark, Mont.	Hansbrough,	Millard,	Taliaferro,
Culberson,	Harris,	Money,	Teller,
Daniel,	Hawley,	Nelson,	Wellington,
Deboe,	Heitfeld,	Patterson,	Wetmore.
Dietrich,	Jones, Nev.	Penrose,
Dryden,	Kearns,	Pritchard,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary state of affairs now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum is present, the Chair is compelled to announce.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Chair rule that that state——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair directs the Secretary to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY. That is all wrong.

Mr. ALDRICH. It does not strike me that that is necessary at this stage of the proceedings. The order of the Senate that the Sergeant-at-Arms should request the attendance of absentees is being carried out, and pending that it is not necessary to again disclose the want of a quorum. We are now proceeding upon the theory that there is no quorum of the Senate present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Rhode Island that the Chair has so ruled distinctly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Therefore, I think it is not necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not necessary at all.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is not necessary to do what?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not necessary to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON. May I make an inquiry of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. There are some Senators, I think, who voted on the last call of the roll who are not on the roll previously called. I should like to know how those Senators can be counted upon the original roll call when the want of a quorum was disclosed?

Mr. COCKRELL. Is my name on that roll?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask if Senators who have answered on the last roll call are enrolled on the original call, when the want of a quorum was disclosed?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not unless they answered to their names, or unless they have called the attention of the Chair to their presence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They must rise in their seats and address the Chair and have their names recorded.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what I supposed. I merely——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not the invariable custom of the Senate, as of the House, that when the Sergeant-at-Arms is directed to request the attendance of absent members after a roll call discloses the want of a quorum that when the absent members come in, if they choose, they address the Chair and answer to their names as they are called?

Mr. ALLISON. That is always the case if they answer to their names.

Mr. HOAR. If they choose.

Mr. ALLISON. But suppose they do not report themselves, and afterwards, on a motion to adjourn, for example, they vote; they still do not appear on the original roll call where the want of a quorum was disclosed. We do not know how many who were absent on the original roll call are now present.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. I do not know much about parliamentary law.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is quite in accord with me in that respect.

Mr. SPOONER. Suppose, on the roll call upon the motion to adjourn——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will take their seats and be in order.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to put this question for information to the Senator from Iowa, who is an expert on parliamentary law; Suppose the roll call on the motion to adjourn had developed the presence of a quorum in the Senate, would it not have been in order to move to dispense with further proceedings under the call?

Mr. ALLISON. Manifestly.

Mr. SPOONER. Then every Senator would not have been obliged to rise and address the Chair when he had actually shown his presence by answering to the roll call?

Mr. ALLISON. But the situation suggested now by the Senator from Wisconsin is not the present situation. That is the difficulty. I was calling attention to a situation where on a roll call the want of a quorum was disclosed, and afterwards a Senator steps in pending a roll call on a motion to adjourn and votes.

Mr. SPOONER. Then he is not here, although he votes. Is that it?

Mr. ALLISON. He happens to be here, but he does not happen to be recorded on the roll which is being called for the purpose of developing the presence of a quorum. That is the situation, as I understand it.

Mr. FRYE entered the Chamber, and answered to his name.

Mr. PROCTOR. I voted on the motion to adjourn, but I believe I am not recorded, not having answered on the original roll call.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am in the same fix as the Senator from Vermont. I voted against the motion to adjourn, but I did not vote on the original roll call.

Mr. MCENERY entered the Chamber, and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is now present.

Mr. HOAR. I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the order that the Sergeant-at-Arms request absentee Senators to appear in the Senate be now discharged, it having been announced that there is a quorum present.

Mr. HOAR. I understand my motion to be the proper one, as well as the only one in order, which is to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized, and moves that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so ordered.

Mr. FORAKER. I beg the pardon of the Senator from Massachusetts. I did not know he had taken charge of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] will proceed.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, when we come to the matter of the language of the country we find peculiar conditions existing. Far more than one-half of the people there are Spanish-Mexicans. Mr. Marron, a witness called by Delegate RODEY, said that the population is composed of 100 Mexicans to 60 Americans, and that the Mexicans speak mostly the Spanish language. The testimony from which I shall quote makes this perfectly clear.

I read from the testimony of Mr. Foraker, the marshal of that Territory:

Q. In the country districts what is the nature of the population with respect to what language is used and as to what is called down here Mexican and American?
A. Well, the country population is principally Mexican.
Q. What language do they speak?
A. Principally the Spanish language.
Q. Have you been out in the course of the political campaigns down here and observed the political campaigns in the country districts?
A. Yes, sir; a great deal.
Q. What is the fact as to the use of an interpreter at the meetings, or how are those conducted?
A. They always have a Spanish interpreter.
Q. Have you been in the conventions?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What is the fact as to the use of an interpreter in the political conventions?
A. They always use an interpreter.
Q. Is that true here in Albuquerque?
A. Yes, sir.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. NELSON. Page 74 of the testimony taken by the subcommittee. Here is the testimony of Mr. Marron in reply to a question proposed to him by Senator BURNHAM:

Q. Is it not a fact that the Mexicans, as a rule, in their own homes very largely use the Spanish language?
A. That, I think, is the fact, Senator. There is no question about that. There is no information that I can give you that would not be cumulative evidence.

Then the witness was asked:

Q. Mr. Marron, what do you think is the proportion throughout the Territory of the Mexican population as against the American, by which I mean all others than Mexican?
A. I believe that the Mexican population predominates in New Mexico, the proportion of Americans to Mexicans being probably 60 and 100.

I next read from the testimony of Mr. Hopewell on page 91:

Q. Is it the habit of the Mexican people to continue the use of the Spanish language in their own homes?
A. Yes, sir; to a very large extent. In fact, I would state it was almost universal.

I read from another witness—Allen J. Papen:

Q. How long have you been postmaster?
A. About five months.
Q. Do you speak Spanish?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. The people who come to your office—you can speak to them in English or Spanish either?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do people come to your office from the country districts?
A. Yes, sir; for 4 or 5 or 6 miles.
Q. The people from the country districts speak what language when they come for their mail?
A. Why, usually Spanish.

Mr. Pablo Ulibarri, a census enumerator, gives this testimony—I read from page 14:

Q. What language is spoken by those whose census you took?
A. Ninety-five per cent speak Spanish.
Q. Of this 95 per cent can any speak English?
A. Sixty-five per cent of this 95 per cent also speak English.

I read from the testimony of another census enumerator—Eugenio Rudolph:

Q. What was the language spoken there?
A. Mexican, most of it.
Q. Were there schools in that district?
A. There were not any at the time I was there. I was there in June.

Here is another witness, J. Francisco Chavez:

Q. What Spanish text-books are used in the common schools?
A. They are Velasquez's grammar and reader.
Q. What else?
A. I forget the arithmetic and geography.
Q. But some Spanish authority?
A. Yes, sir. Probably McGuffey, but translated from the English to the Spanish.

The witness states in another place:

Q. In the counties, taking them in the order you have named, what would you say, as a rough estimate, of the proportion of the native or Mexican population, or what we call down here Mexican population?
A. At a rough estimate, I would say two-thirds are natives.

The testimony, Mr. President, shows further that in the schools Spanish is largely taught side by side and on an equality with the English language. A large number of the pupils speak Spanish, and in some public schools Spanish is exclusively taught.

In connection with and in support of this, I beg leave to quote further from the testimony of J. Francisco Chavez. Here is the question:

Q. What is the case about Spanish being taught exclusively in certain counties of the Territory?
A. There are some districts in which Spanish is taught exclusively. The reason for this is the paucity of teachers.

Not only is Spanish taught in the schools side by side with the English language and on a footing of equality with it, as is shown by the testimony of many of the teachers, but in many of the schools in the country districts only the Spanish language is taught.

When you come to the legislature you find that there both languages are used side by side. Interpreters are employed in the legislature, and the laws are published in the Spanish language. This condition, so far as I am aware, exists nowhere else within our country outside of Porto Rico, one of our recently acquired territorial possessions. In no legislative assembly, Territorial or State, in our country, outside of the Territory of Porto Rico, so far as I am am aware, is any language used in their official proceedings except the English language. But in the legislature of New Mexico they use two languages—Spanish and English—side by side. They have interpreters. The journals, I believe, are kept in both languages, and the laws are published in both languages.

When you come to the courts it is still more odd and unique. In the district courts of the Territory interpreters are used, not only to interpret the testimony of the witnesses, but to interpret the arguments of the attorneys, the counsel in the case, to interpret the charge of the court to the jury, and in some instances interpreters are sent into the grand and petit jury rooms. In this connection I desire to quote from the testimony of the several district judges in that Territory. I first quote from the testimony of Chief Justice Mills, on page 2 of the testimony taken by the committee. Here is the question and here is the answer:

Q. Now, the work of the interpreter consists of interpreting the testimony of witnesses and the arguments of counsel?
A. Yes, sir; the arguments of counsel and instructions of the court to the jury. In Colfax County I have not needed him sometimes; in the other counties I have had to use him constantly. The Americans are busy, and they always like to try to keep off the juries.

On the next page he states as follows:

Q. I understand the use of an interpreter is to interpret the testimony, to interpret the charge of the court to the jury, and to interpret the argument of counsel to the jury.
A. Yes, sir; to interpret everything to the jury that it is necessary for them to know.

I beg leave further to quote from the testimony of the court interpreter, Nepomuceno Segura:

Q. Will you describe to the committee the duties—the nature of your duties in that office?
A. Yes, sir. The nature of my duties are to interpret from English into Spanish all evidence given before the court. There are very many Spanish-speaking people that come before the court as defendants and witnesses, and I have to interpret both ways—from the Spanish into the English and from the English into the Spanish; also the arguments of counsel, both into English and Spanish. That is the amount of the duties of a court interpreter.

Now, here is the testimony as to the jury room:

Q. Now, as to the work in the jury room, your services are not required in the jury room, are they?
A. No, sir; except in very strenuous cases. No, sir; except in very exceptional cases. In two cases I have found that I had to go in the jury room and interpret for them. This was necessary when there was a portion of Spanish-speaking members and a portion of English-speaking members and neither of them speaking the other language, and the courts thought it was proper for the interpreter to go into the room so that they could interpret, and the members of the jury know what was going on.

There are portions of this country where they frequently use interpreters in the matter of witnesses. There are oftentimes foreigners who can not speak our language who are summoned as witnesses, and interpreters are then employed, but outside of the Territory of New Mexico, Mr. President, I know of no place in the United States between the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans where interpreters are used to interpret the arguments of counsel or to interpret the charge of the court; and, more than that, I never heard of such a thing—it is almost inconceivable—as sending an interpreter into a grand or a petit jury room.

I live in one of the growing States of the Northwest where there is a large foreign population. Perhaps one-fourth of the population of Minnesota are foreign born. I have practiced law for many years in various parts of the State, and I have never yet known or heard of a case where it has been necessary to interpret the arguments of counsel or the charge of the court to the jury or of such a thing as an interpreter appearing before the grand and petit jury.

I beg leave to quote from another district judge, Judge McFie.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Has the Senator quoted from the witness who follows Judge Mills—that is, the official interpreter of his court?

Mr. NELSON. I quoted from him a moment ago.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was out of the Senate Chamber for a moment, having been called out to the committee room, and did not hear the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I now quote from the testimony of Judge McFie:

Q. In the counties, taking them in the order you have named, what would you say, as a rough estimate, of the proportion of the native or Mexican population, or what we call down here Mexican population?
A. At a rough estimate, I would say two-thirds are natives.
Q. That would apply to each county?
A. No. San Juan is largely American. Rio Arriba and Taos are largely native.

THE LARGER PER CENT NATIVES.

Q. And Santa Fe?
A. Santa Fe, the larger per cent of the people are native people.
Q. That is the county in which the city of Santa Fe is located?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You hold court in each one of these counties?
A. The United States court is held here in Santa Fe for four months, and then court is held in each of the counties twice a year for Territorial business.

Then he goes on and testifies as to the interpreter's work.

Q. The work of an interpreter is what?
A. He translates English into Spanish and Spanish into English.
Q. He translates the testimony of witnesses to court and jury and translates the arguments of counsel?
A. Yes, sir; and the charge of the court to the jury. The law requires the charge of the court to be in writing, and of course it is in English, and it is then read in Spanish to the native juries, if they are native juries; also interprets the oath of office.

METHODS OF JURY ROOM.

Q. When the jury retires to the jury room what is the nature of the work of an interpreter being required in the jury room to translate for those who speak English and no Spanish and others who speak Spanish and no English?
A. It is very rarely that an interpreter is sent unless requested by the jury. The reason for this is there are many of the natives who speak English and they are required to interpret.

He says:

A. I never allow an interpreter in a jury room unless there is some one in the jury room that can not speak English. This rarely occurs, but then the official interpreter is required.

I now read from the testimony of Judge Baker, another district judge:

Q. The duties of that interpreter are what?
A. Well, he interprets all of the witnesses that can not talk the English, and if he does talk English and there are Mexicans on the jury that do not understand the English he interprets that.
Q. And the arguments of counsel?
A. And the arguments of counsel; yes, sir. Sometimes we have a jury that understands the English.

ONE CASE TRIED WITHOUT INTERPRETER.

Q. Do you have that in this county?
A. Yes, sir; I have had, I think, one of the twenty-four that did not understand the English; and if you get them mixed properly once in a while you have a jury that is all right, and if not if there is one on the jury that does not understand the English we have to use the interpreter.
Q. And in Valencia County?
A. I would think every case.
Q. And in McKinley County how is it?
A. I think in McKinley County the only term I have had there was only two that required the interpreter out of the twenty-four.
Q. Have you had any case since you have been on the bench when the interpreter was not used?
A. I think in McKinley County. That is a new county and they haven't much business.

I next want to quote on this same topic from the testimony of Judge Parker. This is the question:

Q. In the trial of causes, have you a regular court interpreter?
A. We have.
Q. The committee judges from other testimony already before it that the duties of the interpreter consist of interpreting the testimony of witnesses to the jury and to the court, in interpreting the arguments of counsel to the jury, and the charges of the court to the jury.
A. That is correct.
Q. And the interpretation in some cases between the jurors themselves in the jury room?
A. That is the case where there happens to be an American on the jury who does not understand the Mexican language or a Mexican that does not understand the English.

I next want to quote from Judge McMillan on this point. After giving the list of counties in his district and their population, he was asked the question:

Take the other counties—

After having referred to one—

Q. Take the other counties. What is the proportion of American and Mexican population in Chaves County?
A. I do not know what the census shows; it is only what I see about my courts and about the town. The percentage is very, very small there; very small indeed; as far as I have been able to observe, scarcely noticeable. Lincoln County is almost entirely a grazing and mining county, and is largely a Mexican county. The Mexican element predominates there. My juries in Lincoln County will run about from—well, I do not think I ever have less than eight out of twelve that are "Mexicans," and sometimes more than that.
Q. In that county you have an interpreter?
A. Yes, sir; all the work is done through an interpreter. The juries in that county—very few of the Mexican jurors understand the English language at all, and all the work is done through the interpreter; the taking of testimony, the charging of the court, and the summing up of counsel.
Q. When the jury take the case for consideration does it become necessary to have an interpreter in the jury room?
A. Very frequently, yes, sir. The interpreter, the clerk, the stenographer, and the marshal are all sworn, and they all go around with me in all of the courts.

This testimony from which I have quoted—and I have gone over the testimony of all the district judges—shows conclusively an anomalous and most unique condition, unknown anywhere else in our country. All the judges have to use interpreters, and not only interpreters for the testimony, as happens very often in the courts all over the land, but they use interpreters for the arguments of counsel, for the charge of the court, and in many instances, as this last judge from whom I cited says, the interpreters have to go into the jury room.

To show the illiterate character of the country, I beg leave to quote from the testimony of Marshal Foraker, of that Territory.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Minnesota permit me?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before the Senator leaves the question of the use of the Spanish language and the necessity for interpreters, I call his attention to the further fact, supplemental to the use of it in the United States courts, that it is used to a very great extent—one might almost say exclusively—in the justices of the peace courts, and that, further, the political conventions require interpreters.

Mr. NELSON. I was coming to that point.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I beg pardon.

Mr. NELSON. To show the illiterate character of the country,

I beg leave to call attention to the testimony of Marshal Foraker on page 76. This is the question:

Q. I note, in hastily looking over the lists, that some of the jurors signed receipts for their fees with their marks. What has been your experience in this?

A. Some sign by their mark and some do not. I recollect in one case, where there was a grand jury of 21, that 19 of them signed by mark, and in another case a petit jury of 24 where 21 of them signed by their mark.

Now, when you come to the proceedings in the justice courts, a still greater anomaly exists. In most of the justice courts of the Territory the proceedings are entirely in the Spanish language. They use Spanish laws; they have their dockets and everything in Spanish.

I wish to quote in this connection from the testimony on this point and to fortify what I state as I go along by quotations from the testimony. This is the testimony of Jesus Maria Tefoya, a Spanish-speaking witness:

Q. Can you remember the nature of those cases?
A. Well, my book would show; but, more or less, it is about thirty cases, among Mexican and American people.
Q. The cases that you have before you—what language is used?
A. The Spanish.
Q. The people who live in Las Vegas speak Spanish?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Will you be kind enough to take the carriage, or any other conveyance, and go over and get your docket and bring it back?
A. Yes, sir; all right.
And here the witness left the committee room, and returned after some time with his dockets, which were submitted to the committee.
Examination resumed.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you keep this criminal docket?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I see it is all kept in Spanish.
A. Part of it; most of it is in Spanish. The Spanish is kept in Spanish and the English in English.
Q. The last case was November 7, 1902. That is in Spanish; the next case is in Spanish. Is there anything in this criminal docket that is in English?
A. Yes, sir; some in English, down there.
Q. Who wrote this in English for you?
A. I did it myself.
Q. I observe in this criminal docket of yours of 200 pages that practically all are written in Spanish—all entries.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is because of what?
A. Because the Spanish population is in the majority.
Q. Because the cases are in Spanish, with Spanish-speaking defendants?
A. Yes, sir; Spanish-speaking criminals.

Here we have the testimony of another justice of the peace, on page 25:

Q. I see that all of your docket is written in Spanish.
A. All is written in Spanish.
Q. The witnesses whom you hear before you in the trial of cases, are they Spanish-speaking or English-speaking?
A. When they are English I have an interpreter there.
Q. I see here on page 6 of your docket what appears to be a justice of the peace jury. Is that a jury?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What are the names of those jurors?
A. They are Pedro Triego, president; Fabriar Gallegos, Antonio Maria, Pedro Grego, Jose Ulibarri, and Luis Pino.
Q. That is the only jury on your docket, is it?
A. Yes, sir.

I read from the testimony of another justice of the peace, Francisco Anaya, on page 39:

Q. I see this docket is practically all written in Spanish.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Why is it you make it in Spanish instead of English?
A. Because we keep the dockets in Spanish.
Q. I see here that nearly all the names of the parties in running through the docket are Spanish names.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are most of your cases with the Spanish population?
A. The majority of them are Mexicans in my precinct.
Q. In the trial of these cases the witnesses are examined in Spanish. Are the cases conducted in Spanish?
A. Yes, sir; sometimes in Spanish, sometimes in English.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me in order that I may submit a motion for an executive session?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from New Jersey withhold the motion for a moment?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State covering a statement showing the receipts and disbursements of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company for the month of November, 1902, furnished by the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission in pursuance of section 11 of the "Act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory," etc., approved March 3, 1901.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1903.

TELEPHONE LINES IN PORTO RICO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Referring to section 32 of the act approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith an ordinance enacted by the executive council of Porto Rico on December 3, 1902, granting to Benjamin J. Horton the right to construct, operate, and maintain a system of long-distance telephone lines extending through the island of Porto Rico and connecting various cities and towns thereof, together with local telephone exchanges in such cities and towns.

This ordinance was approved by the President of the United States on December 31, 1902.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1903.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 7, 1903, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 6, 1903.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

Judge-Advocate-General's Department.

Capt. Louis B. Lawton, Twenty-sixth Infantry, to be judge-advocate with the rank of major, January 5, 1903, vice Carbaugh, promoted.

Infantry Arm.

Lewis Worthington Moseley, at large, to be second lieutenant, December 27, 1902, vice Wade, Tenth Infantry, promoted.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Artillery Corps.

Lieut. Col. William P. Vose, Artillery Corps, to be colonel, December 20, 1902, vice Hasbrouck, appointed brigadier-general.

Maj. Walter Howe, Artillery Corps, to be lieutenant-colonel, December 20, 1902, vice Vose, promoted.

Capt. Adam Slaker, Artillery Corps, to be major, December 20, 1902, vice Howe, promoted.

First Lieut. Robert H. C. Kelton, Artillery Corps, to be captain, December 20, 1902, vice Slaker, promoted.

Second Lieut. Kenneth C. Masteller, Artillery Corps, to be first lieutenant, December 20, 1902, vice Kelton, promoted.

Infantry Arm.

Capt. Walter A. Thurston, Sixteenth Infantry, to be major, December 29, 1902, vice Howland, Twenty-ninth Infantry, retired from active service.

CONSUL.

Raymond R. Frazier, of Wisconsin, to be consul of the United States at Copenhagen, Denmark, vice John C. Freeman, resigned.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

Sidney O. Weeks, of New York, to be surveyor of customs for the port of Patchogue, in the State of New York. (Reappointment.) This nomination is made to correct error in nomination of the 5th instant, wherein Mr. Weeks was nominated as collector of customs for the district of Patchogue, instead of surveyor of customs for the port of Patchogue.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 6, 1903.

CONSUL.

Raymond R. Frazier, of Wisconsin, to be consul at Copenhagen, Denmark.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Ruel E. Ebersole, of Virginia, to be an assistant surgeon in the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the United States.

Holcombe McRobertson, of Virginia, to be an assistant surgeon in the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the United States.

William K. Ward, of the District of Columbia, to be an assistant surgeon in the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the United States.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

James C. Tawes, of Maryland, to be collector of customs for the district of eastern Maryland, in the State of Maryland.

POSTMASTERS.

KENTUCKY.

William M. Catron, to be postmaster at Somerset, in the county of Pulaski and State of Kentucky.

Samuel G. Hanson, to be postmaster at Berea, in the county of Madison and State of Kentucky.

MAINE.

Jarvis C. Billings, to be postmaster at Bethel, in the county of Oxford and State of Maine.

Charles H. Hooper, to be postmaster at Castine, in the county of Hancock and State of Maine.

Frank B. Purinton, to be postmaster at Fairfield, in the county of Somerset and State of Maine.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Charles D. Brown, to be postmaster at Gloucester, in the county of Essex and State of Massachusetts.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 6, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 5, 1903, was read and approved.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls attention of the House to House joint resolution No. 191, which the Clerk will read by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution to authorize the officer in charge of the new building for the Government Printing Office to pay full wages to per diem employees carried on the pay rolls of said building on September 17, 18, and 19, 1901, when work was suspended out of respect to the memory of the late President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. This seems to be on the wrong Calendar, and the Chair refers it to the Private Calendar.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution of the House No. 370, have had the same under consideration and report the following substitute therefor:

"Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this rule the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15449) to increase the efficiency of the Army, and after not more than one hour of general debate the said bill shall be considered under the five-minute rule."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this rule relates to the bill which was under consideration yesterday and which failed to pass only because of the absence of a quorum. I present the report as a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules. I ask for a vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not take the floor to antagonize the rule at all. As stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], the rule provides for the proper consideration, as I think, of the measure which was pending yesterday, and provides that we may have one hour of general debate. After that the bill shall be read for debate and for amendment under the five-minute rule in Committee of the Whole. This gives ample opportunity for discussion, as I take it, and for full and fair consideration of the measure. That being so, on this side we make no objection to the adoption of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15449) to increase the efficiency of the Army, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

[For copy of the bill see proceedings of January 5, 1903.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I take it that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] would control thirty minutes of the time at least.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to control the time. I am perfectly content that the minority members of the Committee on Military Affairs control one-half of the time. I understand they favor the passage of the bill, but the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] says he will give time to any gentleman on our side who desires to antagonize the bill. That being so, I prefer that the members of the committee shall control the time.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized for only thirty minutes, and unless some one on this side desires to discuss the measure I shall simply reserve my time and allow the opposition to consume its time.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN].

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, the only civilized armies in the world which are not provided with general staffs are those of England and of the United States. England's need for a general staff was emphasized in the South African war. Ever since I have been a member of this House I have never ceased to urge the absolute necessity that exists for a general staff in the United States Army. It was not, however, until the Spanish war that the necessity became apparent to the general public. It is a source of great gratification to me, as it should be to every member of this House, that the War Department and the Committee on Military Affairs have at last reached a realization of the self-evident fact that if we are ever to have an efficient army there must be a general staff corps at its head.

There are two general staff systems in existence: First, the Prussian, by which an officer once a member of the general staff always remains so; second, the French, by which the staff is made up of graduates of the Superior War School, detailed for a term of years, by competitive examination.

I realize that a permanent staff may possibly not be suited to conditions in this country and that a detailed staff may serve us better, because the latter system permits of more readily getting rid of officers who prove themselves unfit for staff duty. The bill before us is supposed to be modeled upon the French system. It only provides for a copy of the French general staff in that the general staff proposed is to be recruited by detail, but the details are to be made arbitrarily, without any provision for graduation from the staff college or competitive examination.

At the proper time I shall offer an amendment limiting assignments in the general staff to graduates of the War College. I realize, however, that there will be but little hope for the adoption of my amendment. As long as members of this House have sons and as long as Senators have relatives who are willing to serve the country details in the Army will be made by selection. [Laughter.]

I do not think the amendment of the committee restoring the Inspector-General's Department strengthens the bill. Ours is the only army that possesses an independent Inspector-General's Department. Local inspections should be made by commanding officers. General inspections should be made by the authority that has the power to correct the mistakes that it discovers and to carry out the recommendations that it may make. The amendment of the committee, however, is of but little importance, for under existing law the Inspector-General's Department performs but one duty which the Secretary of War can not assign to other officers, and that is the inspection of the Soldiers' Homes. After the enactment of this bill, if the Secretary sees fit he can take from the Inspector-General's Department all its functions except the inspection of Soldiers' Homes and confer them upon the general staff. I should, I repeat, have preferred that this amendment had not been reported, but it does not materially injure the bill.

The bill was criticised yesterday on the ground that it deprived the Lieutenant-General of the Army of command. If the President wishes to do so he may assign the Lieutenant-General to any duty he sees fit. There is nothing sacred in the rank of the Lieutenant-General. As a matter of fact, the excellent and gallant officer who is our Lieutenant-General to-day is a member of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification and of the Board of Commissioners of the Soldiers' Home, and otherwise has practically no functions to perform except to command his aids and the doorkeeper who sits outside of his office.

It has been said, and truly said, that with the exception of the provision that makes the chief of the general staff a member of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification and of the Board of Commissioners of the Soldiers' Home, and that which gives first lieutenants detailed to the staff the rank, pay, and allowance of captains, there is nothing in this bill that could not be as well done by Executive order. That is perfectly true. The question is then asked, Why enact this bill? It is for the purpose of answering that question that I have taken the floor.

Despite the shortcomings of the bill, despite the fact that it is anything but perfect, despite the fact that it does not provide for the best possible general staff, I shall vote for it, because I consider that it is a step in the right direction, and that its enactment will greatly improve existing conditions. If we made grave mistakes in the Spanish war, if the Cuban campaign was anything but brilliant, it was not because the officers and men of the United States Army were at fault, for no better or braver soldiers live than ours, but because the system was impossible.

We have in our Army to-day a great number of so-called staff departments the duties of several of which overlap. They are all independent of each other, all more or less antagonistic, without common policy or unity of purpose. It is true that the President can create a general staff by Executive order, but were he to do so it would be equally possible for his successor to destroy it, or for him to reconsider his action and do away with it. If this bill is once enacted, there must be legislation before the principle of the general staff can be tampered with.

The general staff is the brains of the Army. In it is vested in commission the command of the Army. All the noncombatant branches of the service, as well as the combatant, are subordinate to it. It is responsible for the welfare and the efficiency of the Army in time of peace and for the preparation of the Army for possible war. To-day if mistakes are made, if there is a breakdown in any branch of the service, as was demonstrated in the investigation of the war with Spain, there is no possibility of locating the responsibility or of holding any department to blame, for no one branch of the service is responsible. With a general staff, even such a one as is provided in this bill, there will be a head of great power, but also of great responsibility. If with a general staff anything goes wrong, the responsibility rests immediately with the general staff.

I repeat that this is not a perfect bill, but I realize that under our system of legislation everything is a matter of compromise and that this is probably the best bill that the committee could report. It unquestionably improves existing conditions, and therefore I shall vote for it.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, if nobody else desires any time, I will reserve my time.

Mr. HULL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee, when this bill was first presented in its original form I could not give my adherence to it.

The main object of this bill is to prevent the friction which past experience has shown to exist between the various departments of the Government relating to war measures, which fault lay in the system and not in the efficiency or patriotism of the heads of the different departments. But it struck me that the provision of this bill making two lieutenant-generals of equal rank, one as the chief of staff and the other as the general commanding the Army, would tend to increase the friction in the conduct of its operation; and I am glad to say that the bill as it now stands has that objection entirely removed, because the provision has been amended so that we have but one lieutenant-general, and the chief of staff will keep his rank the same as he had before he was assigned to this duty.

This bill is the outcome of close observation of the great advantages that have come by this organization in European countries. Surely we can gain no better information than from the countries of Europe, where the main part of the government is given up to organizing the army and maintaining it in its greatest efficiency. Experience is the best teacher that anyone can have in this world, and the experience that we had in the late Spanish war has convinced everyone who has looked into this subject of the absolute necessity of the institution of this general staff.

It is not necessary to go into the advantages that will be gained, because they have been fully set forth in the various articles and newspaper editorials that have been written on the subject. I congratulate the House that it now has an opportunity to vote on a measure which, in my judgment, will do more toward the efficiency of the organization of our Army in time of peace and in time of war than perhaps any other one measure that could come before this body. I trust that the unanimous report of the committee will meet with the approbation of the House, and that this measure will be placed on the statute book.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I have no further demand for time, and I do not care to occupy any more at this time. If there is no further general debate requested——

Mr. HAY. The gentleman from North Carolina desires some time, and I yield five minutes to him.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Mr. Chairman, I realize the disadvantage at which any member places himself when he antagonizes the unanimous report of a committee to this House. With every confidence in the ability and in the judgment of the minority members of this committee, I beg leave to differ with them as to the advisability of this legislation. In the first place, it is confessedly unnecessary, because the powers which are sought to be conferred upon this to-be-created staff are already in existence and can be exercised by the President and by the Secretary of War, and are now being exercised; and I think, sir, it is a truism that a law which is unnecessary is a law which is inadvisable, undesirable, and which may be vicious.

One of the objections pointed out by the gentleman from Tennessee which occurs to me as most valid is that these great powers may be vested in a brigadier-general. We know, and it is proper, too, the jealousy which exists in the Army and in the Navy, the jealousy of rank and jealousy of control by inferiors. I do not think, sir, that the Lieutenant-General or the majors-general ought to be placed under the surveillance and supervision of officers of inferior rank, as they may be under the provisions of this bill. And then, sir, I do not agree, I can not agree, with gentlemen who think that the creation of this general staff is absolutely necessary for the efficiency of the Army. In time of war I believe the general in the field is better able to judge of the necessity for immediate movements than a board of staff or strategy sitting around a table in the city of Washington.

I believe, sir, that during the war between the States the efficiency of the Army only reached its highest degree when something very like this proposed staff was abolished in Washington and General Grant in the field given absolute and complete power; and only then the armies of the Union were finally successful. I believe we had something very like this board during the war with Spain, when we had a board of strategy sitting around a table in Washington, who undertook to manage by cable the movements of the fleets, and it was only when George Dewey cut the cable and cut off communication with that board of strategy here that he was able to win those great victories in the seas of the Orient. [Applause.]

I believe, sir, we can better trust our generals in the field, as shown by experience in the past, than a board or staff, sitting here in Washington, moving them about like men on the chessboard, without any knowledge of the existing conditions and situation. I believed that our armies reached their highest efficiency in the war between the States when supreme command was given to the general in chief. I believe that in the war with Spain and in the war in the Philippines we have not suffered because of a lack of this board of general staff sitting in Washington. I believe we have reason to be proud of the record of our Army in all the wars in which it has engaged; and I can see no reason for setting aside the lessons of experience for an untried experiment, untried at least in our country and in our Army, and which I believe is contrary to the genius of our land and the genius of our military service. It would set up what might be an oligarchy in the War Department, would cripple the efficiency of forces in the field, and lead to increased jealousies, bickerings, and injustice in the Army. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, and for many others of which they are suggestive, I trust this bill will be defeated. [Loud applause].

Mr. HAY. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the advantages of having a military staff, such as is proposed by this bill, were exemplified in the Franco-Prussian war of 1870. One of the countries engaged in that war went into the conduct of a campaign upon a specially devised plan made by a general staff which sat in the city of Berlin; the other went into that war without the preparation which it might have had had it had the privilege of enjoying the benefit of such a similar staff sitting in the city of Paris.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, but what I am in favor of this bill, but if I am I want to understand it. I would like to know what is meant by this language, and what would be the effect of it. The language commences on line 10, page 1:

> To render professional aid and assistance to the Secretary of War and to the general officers and other superior commanders, and to act as their agents in informing and coordinating the action of all the different officers engaged in carrying out their orders.

Will the gentleman explain what that means?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think, in the first place, I had better refer the gentleman to the address of the Secretary of War, which he can have and probably has on his desk, for an explanation.

Mr. HEPBURN. No; I have not time to read that. I want the gentleman's explanation, if he will kindly give it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The purpose of the staff——

Mr. HEPBURN. That is not what I am asking. I am asking about certain specific language in this bill that, to my mind, is going to result in infinite confusion. What is meant by this language here, that this general staff shall act as agents to certain general officers and other superior commanders in informing and coordinating the action of the different officers engaged in carrying out their orders?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is to gather information and furnish it to the authorities here in Washington, upon which to conduct a campaign or a series of campaigns; to furnish information of local conditions; of which there may be more recent and more accurate knowledge in the Department than can be had in the field.

I will say to the gentleman that I propose to offer an amendment to that part of the section covered by his inquiry, and which I believe will make it so perfectly clear that he will understand it without the necessity for further explanation, and which will prevent any possible confusion arising hereafter in the execution of the law.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks it is wise to provide that some other officer appointed by the agent's authority shall be invested with the power of agency for some other officer to act as the agent of that other officer?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think so.

Mr. HEPBURN. Under what circumstances? If an officer may have an agent, does not that relieve him of responsibility, especially if that agent is appointed by somebody else than himself?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman refer to the bottom line of page 1?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; commencing at line 13.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I was about to say when the gentleman interrupted me that the efficiency of the general staff was so well illustrated by the result of the war between France and Prussia in 1870 that it can not be questioned. My friend from North Carolina [Mr. KLUTTZ] has said that in his judgment the operations of the general in the field should not be interfered with by a board of bureau officers sitting in Washington. It is not intended to take away from any general commanding in the field in the presence of the enemy the right to exercise discretion. The purpose of the staff is to provide him with all the information that it is possible to gather——

Mr. KLUTTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. In a moment—and which will enable him to better exercise that discretion. Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Will not that power be lodged in the general staff to direct him in his command in the field?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is lodged in the President now by the Constitution, and will remain there. I know of no commanding officer, no president, no monarch, who would go against the judgment of a superior officer in command in the field and who was engaged in conducting war in the presence of an enemy.

The necessity for the bill is not very urgent at the moment, except that in time of peace we should prepare for war. But it is the consensus of opinion among military experts that the efficiency of our Army would be promoted by the enactment of such a bill; and as they are better advised on such matters than we are, and as they can not possibly have any sinister design, I am forced to believe that we ought to accept their judgment in such matters.

Objection has been raised to the consideration of the bill and its enactment by gentlemen who say that if the President has the authority to now organize such a general staff we ought not to pass this bill. I say in reply to that, Mr. Chairman, that while the President unquestionably has authority, as was admitted by the Secretary of War in his address to the committee, to establish a staff of advisers, it is desirable in such a matter that he should have the consent of the Congress of the United States. It is a tribute of respect to this body that the Executive authority should come to it and ask them to give their formal consent and approval to the scheme.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Iowa, I would like to say that the provision in line 13, as I understand, is just what is done now. As I understand, every officer in the Army is the agent to inform the President and the Secretary of War about questions that they have knowledge of. The language in the bill is that the general staff shall render professional aid and assistance to the Secretary of War and that general officers and superior commanders are to act as their agents in informing them. That is done now. If a general officer has a staff, his staff officers are his agents in the different branches of the service. An inspector-general, an adjutant-general, and all the different staff officers act as agents to the general in chief to inform him and to help him to coordinate the action of all the different officers engaged in carrying out the orders of the superior officer.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is what I am trying to get at. Whose agent is the staff officer? Is he the agent of the general or the superior officer, or is he the agent of the officer carrying out their orders?

Mr. HAY. He is the agent of the Secretary of War, the President—the superior officers——

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes. Well, now, what do you do with this language?

And act as their agent in forming and coordinating the action of all the different officers engaged in carrying out their orders.

Mr. HAY. The word "agent" means the agent of the superior officer.

Mr. HEPBURN. Simply the superior officer?

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then the superior officer may have an attorney in fact, but the other fellow can not have one.

Mr. HAY. Whom does the gentleman mean by the "other fellow?"

Mr. HEPBURN. Somebody who is less than the superior officer—I do not know who he may be. Of course, they are acting under superior authority. If you, as an agent, send me out as an inspector to report to you, I am acting as your agent.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The general may detail a colonel for some purpose.

Mr. HAY. Yes; the general may detail a colonel or any other officer for any purpose, and that officer is acting as his agent. That has been done ever since there was an army.

Mr. HEPBURN. The staff officer acts as agent?

Mr. HAY. Of course.

Mr. HEPBURN. He is not appointed by them. Now, suppose, as you say, that the general officer appoints a colonel, and that colonel is his agent. Now, then, this bill makes the staff officer the agent of that general officer, according to the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. HAY. I think so.

Mr. HEPBURN. So that the staff and all the rest of them are agents.

Mr. HAY. I am talking about the general staff, with which this bill deals; it only deals with them.

Mr. HEPBURN. But this general of the staff, as one of the gentlemen on your side has said, is in fact the commander in chief of the Army and will have the command of the Army. The commander in chief then becomes the agent of his subordinate.

Mr. HAY. He will not be the commander in chief of the Army unless the President makes him so.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. HAY. Now, the commander in chief of the Army in the field is very different from the commander of the general staff corps.

Mr. HEPBURN. But you say that this officer becomes commander in chief when the President makes him so.

Mr. HAY. I do.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does this bill make him so?

Mr. HAY. No, sir; it does not. It makes him chief of staff.

Mr. HEPBURN. But his duties, as defined in this bill, "shall be to prepare plans for the national defense and for the mobilization of the military forces in time of war." Now, what is that except the exercise of the authority of a commander in chief?

Mr. HAY. Not at all.

Mr. HEPBURN. He has charge of the preparation of plans and the mobilization of the forces.

Mr. HAY. He may do that——

Mr. HEPBURN. Under this bill.

Mr. HAY. And yet not as commander in chief.

Mr. HEPBURN. But under this bill he does it.

Mr. HAY. But if he does it in time of war, he does it for the commander in chief in the field. He does not command the Army necessarily because he prepares plans. Plans may be prepared in the War Department now; but the plans must be acceptable, for instance, to the President.

Mr. HEPBURN. But go a little further. He is to have charge of the mobilization of the forces. Here is a general, we will suppose, out in the West, who has certain forces, and is carrying out a plan of his own. This officer (the chief of staff) is to have the power to mobilize the forces; that is, to take that force away from him and send it to another portion of the country, not by order of the commander in chief, but under the authority of this bill.

Mr. HAY. The Commander in Chief, who is the President of the United States, would not permit an officer under him to do what the gentleman says he would do. The gentleman is imagining an impossible condition. He is stating that if an officer in command of troops in the field should undertake to carry out an idea of of his own, this general of staff might take the troops away from him and send them somewhere else in time of war. That is an impossible proposition; such a thing could not happen.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does not the gentleman know that that is the complaint to-day? The gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] will not say that it is an impossible condition. Is it not a fact that it has been claimed hundreds of times that an army corps that was to be a part, and was a part, of the army of McClellan—the Army of the Potomac—was taken away from him by a chief of staff here in the city of Washington?

Mr. HAY. There was not any such thing as a chief of staff here in Washington.

Mr. HEPBURN. There was in fact, although there was not in name. General Halleck, up to the time that General Grant took command in chief of the Army, served as a chief of staff here in Washington, doing just what it is proposed this chief of staff shall do, viz, making plans for the general defense and the mobilizing the forces of the United States.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman knows as well as I do that at that time General Halleck was in command of the Army.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; but he was simply here as a chief of staff.

Mr. HAY. Well, the gentleman may call him what he please.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is what the gentleman called him, but that is the fact—that he performed the same office that this chief of staff will perform here in the city of Washington.

Mr. HAY. Not at all. He can perform only such duties as are assigned to him by the President of the United States, and if he undertook to do a thing of the sort of which the gentleman has spoken, the President would not permit it.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Is it not a fact that the chief of general staff can be assigned to command the field army?

Mr. HAY. Unquestionably.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit a moment?

Mr. HAY. Very well.

Mr. HEPBURN. I find this confusion in the bill: In section 4 there is the following: "That the chief of staff, under the direction of the President and Secretary of War, shall have supervision of all troops of the line," etc. In section 2, beginning on line 6, I find "That the duties of the general staff corps shall be to prepare plans for the national defense and for the mobilization of the military forces in time of war," not as the aid to the President, not under his direction, but by virtue of the authority of this statute which it is proposed we shall enact, giving him this power of preparing plans and mobilizing forces.

Mr. HAY. I would ask the gentleman if preparing plans for national defense and preparing plans for mobilization is giving orders for the defense and for mobilization? The gentleman wrests from its meaning the language of the bill. He is preparing plans for doing something; he is not ordering something to be done, and in the section to which the gentleman has referred it is provided that the chief of staff must do all these things under the direction of the President and the Secretary of War. Now, there is no question about the fact that it is necessary that there should be a general staff. I am as much opposed as is the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KLUTTZ] to a little board here in Washington undertaking to control a battle. That is impossible. Everybody knows that when any general or admiral fights a battle he does not wait to get a telegraphic order from Washington to put this regiment or that battalion in here or there, or to put that ship in that position or this ship in another position. He has to take the responsibility in the field or on the water at the time, and this bill does not affect in any way the power which a general in the field would have during war.

Now, I believe that the several staff corps have done their duty as far as they could do it in our Army. I believe that they are men of high ability and that they will continue to be; but I agree with my friend from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] that there ought to be some person somewhere upon whom the people of this country and the Congress could lay their hands when disastrous mistakes are made, as they have been made heretofore. For that reason and others which I gave yesterday I am in favor of this bill, and I trust that the members will vote for it, because it is a very great stride in the interest of the efficiency of the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] was recognized for thirty minutes. He has twenty-seven minutes remaining.

Mr. HULL. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire any more time?

Mr. HAY. I do not know of anybody who desires to speak.

Mr. HULL. Then I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to detain the committee long in making explanation of this bill. It has been pruned down until it has received the unanimous voice of the committee. Nor, indeed, after all that pruning will I say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that there is no word in it which can not be criticised. Nevertheless, it may be fairly said to the gentleman from Iowa in discussing at this stage of the debate not the particular words of any section, but the general purpose of the bill, that its purpose can not be objected to. It provides means to inform the Government as to what may be done, or appoints officers for information, for staff duty, for coordination of the various departments. It does not interfere with the management of the armies in the field.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] rightly pointed out that this is not the duty of a chief of staff. It is true that a chief of staff, during our greatest war, did interfere with the movements of our greatest commander until he was called down by the President and told that his duties were those of information to the Commander in Chief and not the issuing of orders on his own account.

This bill is carefully guarded in that respect. By its terms the duties of the general staff are, first, "to prepare plans for the national defense and for the mobilization of the military forces in time of war." Thus, by the bill, the general staff is not to execute plans, but to prepare plans, and the Secretary of War says that they should be alternative plans, that many plans should be submitted to the President, or to the general in command of a particular expedition. The Secretary of War in the hearings said distinctly that if those plans should be approved by the general in command of the expedition, the general would follow them. If they should not be approved, he would not follow them.

The duties of this general staff by this bill are, further, "to investigate and report upon all questions affecting the efficiency of the Army and its state of preparation for military operations." They are to investigate and report—to give information as to where troops can be obtained, whence we can safely call them, how we can safely and well transport them, how we can supply them, how we can get the Transportation Department and the Medical Department and the Subsistence Department to work together, where we shall get our officers, and where we shall get our men. The staff is to investigate and report, and, again, "to render professional aid and assistance to the Secretary of War and to general officers and other superior commanders." They are thus at the service of the Secretary of War, to assist him in the duties of his Department.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PARKER. I should like to be allowed to go on for a little while, and then I shall be very glad to yield to the gentleman, if he wishes me to.

They are to render professional aid. It is the aid now given by an assistant adjutant-general when he is assigned and sent to a general in command. It is the aid now rendered by an assistant inspector-general when he is sent to a general in command. He is under the authority of that general. He renders aid and assistance. Thus the members of the general staff, under the bill, will "render professional aid and assistance to the Secretary of War and to general officers and other superior commanders, and act as their agents," not in any one department, but "in informing and coordinating the action of all the different officers engaged in carrying out their orders." We have agents now to inform and assist in the same way. We have engineer officers, who inform and assist the various commanders, and we have ordnance officers and those in the Adjutant-General's Department. We have assistant inspectors-general, we have a staff under the Surgeon-General. They serve under the various commanders and inform and assist them, as provided for in this bill, but they do not coordinate.

The time of Mr. PARKER having expired, Mr. HULL yielded to him five minutes more, and he continued, as follows:

Mr. PARKER. Now, our great Secretary of War has explained what our difficulty was. When the war with Spain took place we had various departments. We attempted to assemble and send troops. When we wanted to get troops, we wanted to know where we would get them, from what post they could be got, from what States they could be obtained, in what condition of efficiency they would be, where they were to be sent, how they should be sent, by what vessels they should be transported, what vessels we had at our disposal. The reports on all those subjects came in from five separate departments to the Secretary of War, who all alone had to go over those reports and find out for himself what plan was feasible, where troops should go, and how they should be provisioned.

The Adjutant-General could not order the Subsistence Department to send supplies to any particular place. The Adjutant-General had to report to the Secretary of War. The Subsistence Department could not find out where troops were going except by applying to the Secretary of War. All those various reports, from all those different departments, coming to one man, overwhelmed him with work, so that sometimes orders having been issued for troops to go to one place, and those orders being subsequently changed, the subsistence went to the wrong place. There was no body of men to coordinate the work, to go over what had been done and find out what had to be done in order to make the different departments work in harmony, and to submit to the Secretary of War general plans covering all the different branches of the maintenance and transportation of troops, and the orders to go to the Army, so that the Secretary of War could act upon the plans as a whole instead of having to act on all the details that came to him, and which overwhelmed his office.

Mr. STEELE. I want to ask what becomes of the Adjutant-General in all this discussion? We had an Adjutant-General during the Spanish war, who could give all the information, and did it, more promptly than any Adjutant-General we ever had before.

Mr. PARKER. That is true. The Adjutant-General had to take upon himself in the work of preparation much more than the duties of his own department, to assume responsibilities as to coordinating the work, and sometimes to assume and take upon himself practically the functions of commander in chief of this Army under the direction of the Secretary of War, and subject to that direction and that of the President it may almost be said that he practically became commander in chief here in Washington of this Army.

Mr. STEELE. And now you are going to deprive him of that.

Mr. PARKER. Not at all; but the Commander in Chief of the Army is the President. He is entitled to the information from these various departments, so boiled down and condensed that he can act upon it.

This can only be done by the aid of a body of trained men whose duty is to do this, which we now call a general staff. What is more, the President needs their services and opinions as to the situation and the various possibilities that will arise.

The Secretary of War states this well. He said that in giving an order for a campaign the officer must do very much more than merely dictating it to a stenographer. He must have information, and know the fortifications and the forces to be met.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PARKER. He must know the armament and equipment of those forces, the best points of landing, the depth of harbors, the class of vessels needed, the character of the roads, the climate, the sympathies of the people, the means of transportation, what can be got and what can be used, what food can be found, and what diseases there may be met with. Now, this complete information is not in possession of any one department. This body, this general staff, is to get together that information and furnish it to him so that he can act upon it. In framing his orders all these details are conditions on which the orders are based, but neither the commanding general nor the President in the rush of business can go over and dig out all these facts and determine which shall be done. It is therefore made the duty of the general staff to do this, to place these facts in concise form, and prepare alternative plans which will present the advantages and the disadvantages of each so that the President can act upon them.

At the other end of the line the officer in command must know what his resources are, what troops he can get, what transportation, what medical staff, and what material of war. He must have definite information.

Now, this is the information which the general staff are to get; and then they have to act under the Commander in Chief and see that the thousands of men work together. Somebody must see that ships shall meet the troops and supplies and see that there is transportation to get them to the place, and some one else to provide for them when they get there. Thus there are these two great duties of the general staff: First, to acquire the information and arrange it so that an order can be intelligently made; and, second, when it has been made, not to command, but to exercise supervision, inform and advise all the different persons in command and all the members of the various departments, so that they shall work together in doing that work, reporting meanwhile to headquarters, so that the Government can find what has been done. These are the duties of the general staff.

The whole civilized world has found out that a general staff is an absolute necessity. In this country we started under Washington with an Adjutant-General and an Inspector-General. The latter had many more duties than mere inspection. Steuben gave us in our Army our tactics as we first established them, and arranged the organization of a large part of its service. No one man can do this now. In a great nation, such as we have, and a great army, such a we have, the general staff is needed to furnish this information to the Secretary of War.

Mr. STEELE. What becomes of the Adjutant-General?

Mr. PARKER. All the departments have their duties. The other different departments—of transportation and subsistence—are just as important as that which orders where the troops shall go. The Adjutant-General, the Commissary-General, the Quartermaster-General, the head of the Subsistence Department, the Surgeon-General will all report, as they do now, to the Secretary of War, but their reports will be supervised and gone over by the general staff, not in order to command, but for the purpose of seeing whether the various departments are consistent in their action and whether the Army will act as one solid body to do its work and not, alas, as we have seen it act in too many cases, when—in the beginning of the civil war and of the Spanish war—it was without intelligent supervision, because although it had an intelligent head in the great Commander in Chief that has gone from us, that one head found it impossible to do all the work put upon him.

To give him aid which will enable him to do this work is the object of this bill.

Under the leave to extend my remarks, I beg to print an extract from the statement of the Secretary of War to which I have referred and which should have a wider circulation than in the few copies printed for the committee.

Statement of Hon. Elihu Root, Secretary of War.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this bill covers but a single subject, and has but a single purpose. It is the establishment of a general staff corps, to be composed of officers detailed from the Army at large, under such rules as may be prescribed by the President.

The duties of the proposed general staff corps are described in the bill as follows:

"To prepare plans for the national defense and for the mobilization of the military forces in time of war; to investigate and report upon all questions affecting the efficiency of the Army and its state of preparation for military operations; to render professional aid and assistance to the Secretary of War and to general officers and other superior commanders, and to act as their agents in informing and coordinating the acts of all the different officers engaged in carrying out their orders, and to perform such other duties as may be from time to time prescribed by the President."

* * * * * * *

A portion of the members of the corps would be stationed in Washington to conduct the general business falling under the heads enumerated in the description of duties which I have already read, and a portion of them, the larger portion of them, would be assigned to the different departments to serve under the command of the different commanders, but maintaining their relations to the general staff corps and reporting to the chief of staff in Washington, very much as the assistant inspectors-general now report to the Inspector-General, with the difference that the chief of staff and his assistants in Washington would be charged with advising the President or the Secretary of War of the matters in regard to which the reports showed action ought to be taken, and, under the direction of the President or the Secretary of War, seeing to it that those matters received attention.

Let me call your attention for a moment to the reason for asking you to authorize the formation of such a body of officers. We have an Army excellent in its personnel, not surpassed, I believe, anywhere in the intelligence, capacity, and devotion to duty of its enlisted men and its officers. We have the various departments of administration organized each within itself and well enough organized for the performance of its specific duties, and we have at the head of those departments men of capacity and fidelity. The Quartermaster's Department is engaged faithfully and efficiently in conducting the transportation of the Army, in supplying clothing and forage and doing construction work and a great variety of other duties. The Subsistence Department is engaged, with ability and fidelity, in furnishing the food of the Army. The Signal Corps is in like manner and with conspicuous ability performing the duties of maintaining communications, building telegraph lines and operating them, and training men to do signal work.

I can go through the different branches of administration and make the same statements regarding each particular corps, department, and bureau organization. We have a nation with great wealth, willing to spend its money freely for the procurement of arms and munitions of war and supplies of all kinds. Nevertheless, no one can fail to see that there has been in the past in the administration of the Army something which was out of joint. It is not necessary for me to go into the specification of details, for every one of us knows that whenever an exigency has come, confusion has come, and that confusion, while it is not so prominent, while it does not attract public attention to such a degree as in the days when the newspapers were full of scare headlines about the condition of affairs at Tampa, nevertheless exists in the yearly and daily transactions of the business of the War Department. The confusion comes from the fact that our organization is weak at the top. It does not make adequate provision for a directing and coordinating control. It does not make provision for an adequate force to see that these different branches of the administrative staff and the different branches of the line pull together, so that the work of each one will fit in with the work of every other one, and bring out the result which always has to be the result of the conspiring of a great number of people doing a great number of duties.

While I say that the organization is weak at the top, I am not criticising anyone at the top. It is weak at the top because the system is defective, because there is a distribution of powers, and no coordination of the exercise of powers provided for in the system. That coordination can not be done by any one man. It is a vast and difficult work which can be done only by a body of men organized for that purpose and having no other duties to perform, and in all the armies of the civilized world that duty is, and during all our lifetime has been, performed by a body of men who have come to be called a general staff—to be called a general staff because their duties are staff duties and because their duties are general, pertaining to the general conduct of affairs, and not merely to the work of the Quartermaster's Department, as General Ludington's duties are; not merely to the work of the Ordnance Department, as General Crozier's duties are, but pertaining to the entire work.

Let me go into illustration a little. Suppose a military expedition is proposed—the legislative and executive branches of the Government have determined that a particular object shall be accomplished by means of a military expedition. Put ourselves back in the situation that existed in the spring of 1898, and suppose that we are now in the month of April, 1898. An expedition is proposed in the course of the war with Spain to land in the island of Cuba and capture Habana. Now, it is manifest that the expedition can not be made successful except by the conspiring efforts of every branch of Army administration. The President, or the general who is called in by the President to direct the conduct of military operations, proposes to make an order which shall govern the conduct of that expedition. It is a perfectly easy thing to make an order directing 25,000, 50,000, or 100,000 men to proceed to Cuba and to capture Habana.

That is easy, but in order that an order shall be made which has some chance of being executed, the officer making the order must do a great deal more than simply dictating it to a stenographer or signing it on paper. In the first place, he must acquire a vast amount of definite and certain knowledge. He must know what the fortifications are which those troops have to overcome. He must know what is the force they are to meet, and how that force is armed and equipped, in order to send the right kind of forces with the right kind of arms to overcome them. He must know at what point this expedition can best land on the coast of Cuba in order to reach Habana. In order to know that he must know the depth of the harbors. He must know what class of vessels can enter the various harbors along the coast. He must know how those harbors are protected. He must know the character of the country between the different harbors and Habana and the character of the roads. He must know what the climate is likely to be at the time for which the expedition is proposed, whether they are to meet torrential storms or whether they are to meet droughts. He must know what the sympathies and feelings of the people are, whether they are friendly or hostile. He must know what the facilities for transportation are, whether they can get horses or mules, or carts or wagons, the facilities for transporting the impedimenta of an army during the passage from the port of landing to the objective point. He must know what the facilities for subsisting an army are, what food they can get. He must know what the probable diseases are to be guarded against. He must know these things in order to regulate the points where the troops are to land, and in order to determine what the army must take with it to enable it to move and to live and to be ready to fight when they get to the objective point. How is he to get that information?

It is not the business of the Quartermaster's Department, or the Ordnance Department, or the Inspector-General's Department, or the Subsistence Department, or any other branch of our administrative staff to furnish it to him. It is the business of the body of men who are known in the civilized world as a general staff to obtain that information, and to obtain that information requires not the flare of intelligence for a moment, but long-continued, persistent action. It must be collected year by year, so that it will be ready at hand when the exigency requires it to be ready.

In endeavoring to frame an order of that kind there will doubtless be alternative propositions for landing at this point or that, or taking this route or some other route, with a great variety of facts bearing upon the different propositions, some advantages and some disadvantages in each. No general, no President who is charged with the general conduct of so great a business as the direction of a military expedition and the direction of military affairs generally, can take the time to go over and dig out all of the specific facts bearing upon each of these alternative propositions. It is the well-understood duty of the general staff to prepare plans for the conduct of the expedition upon each of the different alternative courses, and to array and present in concise form the advantages and disadvantages of each, so that when they come to the President or to the general, who is burdened with ten thousand things, he can at a glance see what are the advantages and disadvantages and make his determination.

Then, at the other end of the line, that the order made for the conduct of the expedition shall be made intelligently and that it may be possible to execute it, the officer making it must know what are the resources at his command. He must know what troops can be sent upon the expedition, and to know that he must know from whence they are to be drawn, and he must know what are the other uses for which troops may be required, what points ought not to be left undefended, and what other duties there are for them to perform. He must know what should be the relative proportion of the different branches of the service in the expedition. He must know what supply of arms and ammunition, of clothing, of horses, mules, and wagons for transportation, what supplies of medical stores, what supplies of engineer material, what ships for transportation, what lighters, barges, and pontoons there are. He must have definite information as to all the different kinds—the multitudinous kinds—of materials necessary to make the expedition a success, and he must know where those things are and where they are to come from. If, as is almost certain to be the case in a country where war is never expected, there are deficiencies in some respects, he must know how long it is going to take to supply those deficiencies. Otherwise his order will find his troops moving without the material necessary to give them success.

Now, the information upon all that it is the business of a general staff to provide, in order that the officer who makes the order may make it and shape it, and arrange the movement so that it will conform to the means that we have at hand, or that we can get to meet the requirements of success at the other end of the line. Then the order is made and made intelligently, made so that it can be successful, made so that only courage and nerve and intelligence in the conduct of the operations are needed to make it successful.

Then comes the further duty of the general staff. That is to see that all the thousands of men whose work must conspire to the successful conduct of the expedition and the successful execution of the order work together. No one man can do that. Somebody must see that when troops are ordered to a port of departure the terminal facilities of the railroads by which they are to go are sufficient to land them there, are sufficient to land their supplies there; that when they get there the ships that are to transport them shall meet them; that the supplies when they get there shall get there in such a way that they can be found; that as the different organizations go there somebody will be at hand to tell them where they are to go and what they are to do, so that each organization will have its place, the ship that it is to embark upon assigned to it, so that the clothes which the Quartermaster-General is to furnish and the flour and bacon which the Commissary-General is to furnish will get to the proper place in time for the same expedition and will get there when the men get there and when the ships get there and all can move together.

Those are the two great duties of the general staff—first, to acquire information and arrange it and fit it into all the possible plans of operation, so that an order can be intelligently made, and, second, when the order has been made, to exercise constant supervision that does not mean command, but to inform and advise all the different persons who must conspire to the execution of the order of how every other one is going on with his work. It is because we have never had in the American Army a body of men charged with that sole duty that we have seen the great confusion that existed at the time of the civil war and at the outbreak of the war with Spain. A very careful study of the conditions that existed in the spring of 1898 has led me to the conclusion that there never was a more faithful and devoted set of men than were engaged in our administrative staff departments at that time, every man doing his very best, with capacity and with devotion to duty in the performance of his particular work; but there was no adequate force to see that their work went pari passu. That same thing exists to-day in the peace work of the Army. It exists in the preparations that we are making—men doing work of the highest character hindered, delayed, obstructed, having the efficiency of their work decreased for the lack of some one to see that they move together and that one does not have to wait for the other until his opportunity to do the work has passed.

* * * * * * * *

I say to you gentlemen that if we should go to war to-morrow you would find the same kind of confusion which existed at Tampa, and if you do not learn to act upon the lesson that we have had furnished to us by our past experience, whenever we go to war the same kind of confusion will exist; it will cost many thousands of lives and many millions of dollars, and it may cause humiliating defeat.

The waste of money that is involved in having all the different branches of effort under the War Department go on, each by itself, without any coordinating force except the single civilian Secretary of War, is enormous. It is not the business of the Commissary-General to determine what the movement of troops is to be. It is his business to see that they are supplied. Who is to tell him how much bacon, how much flour, how much beef are to be sent across the Pacific, or to the West Indies, or to Alaska, or to any portion of this great country? Who is to give him that information?

It is the business of a coordinating body, commonly known as the general staff, to see that the views of the military authorities who are carrying out the plans of the President—that is, the commanding officers who are carrying out the plans of the President regarding the future movements of troops—are communicated, or their result is communicated to the commissary-general, instead of doing as we have done many a time, having great quantities of provisions sent to places where, with the best information he could get, they would be needed, and finding that the troops had gone somewhere else, and the provisions would have to be ordered back or be lost. It is the same with all branches of supply, that the particular department dealing with the particular kind of supply is obliged, because there is no adequate informing body, to oversupply in order to guard against contingencies.

Mr. HULL. Does the gentleman from Virginia or the gentleman from Texas desire any more time?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me for a moment, so that I may ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that all who have spoken on the subject be authorized to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that would be out of order in committee.

Mr. HULL. I will make that request in the House.

Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed to take up the time of the committee this morning, as I expressed myself fully yesterday, but I do want to say that the contention that this proposition is unnecessary has to my mind no force whatever. I believe it is necessary, for the reason that while the President of the United States can detail officers of the Army to do any specific duty, it does require an act of Congress to give to the body as a whole the effect of law and give them the power to be of benefit to the Army and its organization. There has been some talk here as to the power of Halleck and his chief of staff. There was no law authorizing the appointment of Halleck. There was a general power in the President as Commander in Chief to call to his aid officers on whose advice he would rely and whose suggestions he might carry out. Halleck, himself a general, formulated the war policy on the side of the Union for the first year and a half of the war. The President can do that under this bill, so that that can not be an objection to the bill.

This bill goes further than that. It goes to the extent of creating a trained body of men, not one man, trained in the different branches of the Army, to go over all the different departments and make their investigations and report to the Secretary of War or the President their conclusions as a whole, giving all the details and giving their reasons for their plans and suggestions. To my mind it will destroy the possibility of another Halleck in this country and to my mind that of itself is sufficient to justify the passage of the bill.

There is another thing, Mr. Chairman. There has been talk as to the Adjutant-General's power. It leaves the Adjutant-General with his office; but he never had the training, he never had the experience, he never had the advice, he never had the authority over any of the other bureaus of the War Department. He was not the commander in chief, with all due deference to my friend from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]. He was the man who formulated the orders of the Commander in Chief; the President gave the orders, or the Secretary of War gave the orders, and every order issued by the Adjutant-General was issued through the authority and by the direction of the President or the Secretary of War.

This chief of staff, as has been said by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] and others, does not issue the orders; he coordinates all this information, gives it to the proper authority, and orders are issued by the Commander in Chief, so that it seems to me there is no objection to this bill and there can be no criticism of it on the ground of expenditure. It does not increase the Army by a single man; it does not increase the number of officers in the Army, but it simply goes to the good administration of affairs, and to that alone. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is all I care to say, and I ask for the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no other gentleman who desires to be heard, the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the duties of the general staff corps shall be to prepare plans for the national defense and for the mobilization of the military forces in time of war; to investigate and report upon all questions affecting the efficiency of the Army and its state of preparation for military operations; to render professional aid and assistance to the Secretary of War and to general officers and other superior commanders, and to act as their agents in informing and coordinating the action of all the different officers engaged in carrying out their orders; and to perform such other duties as may be from time to time prescribed by the President.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 2, page 2, by striking out the words "engaged in carrying out their orders," which occur in lines 1 and 2, and insert in place thereof the words "who are subject under terms of this act to supervision of the chief of staff," and by inserting after the word "duties," in line 2, the words "not otherwise assigned by law."

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that read as it will be when amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph as it will read when amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

To render professional aid and assistance to the Secretary of War and to general officers and other superior commanders, and to act as their agents in informing and coordinating the action of all the different officers who are subject under the terms of this act to the supervision of the chief of staff; and to perform such other duties not otherwise assigned by law as may be from time to time prescribed by the President.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert before the word "duties," in line 2, page 2, the word "military;" so that it will read "military duties."

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not object to that.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I did not quite catch the whole of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SLAYDEN. My amendment is to strike out the words, in lines 1 and 2 at the top of the page, "engaged in carrying out their office," and insert in place thereof the words "who are subject under the terms of this act to the supervision of the chief of staff."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The question was then taken on the amendment offered by Mr. SLAYDEN as amended, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the general staff corps shall consist of 1 chief of staff of the Army, with the rank, pay, and allowances of a lieutenant-general, 1 major-general, and 1 brigadier-general, to be detailed by the President from officers of the Army at large not below the grade of brigadier-general, and who while so serving shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of the grade to which detailed; 4 colonels, 6 lieutenant-colonels, and 12 majors, to be detailed from the corresponding grades in the Army at large, under such rules for selection as the President may prescribe; 20 captains, mounted, to be detailed from officers of the Army at large of the grades of captain or first lieutenant, who while so serving shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of captain mounted. All officers detailed in the general staff corps shall be detailed therein for periods of four years, unless sooner relieved. While serving in the general staff corps, officers may be temporarily assigned to duty with any branch of the Army. Upon being relieved from duty in the general staff corps, officers shall return to the branch of the Army in which they hold permanent commission, and no officer except a general officer shall be eligible to a further detail in the general staff corps until he shall have served two years with the branch of the Army in which commissioned, except in case of emergency in time of war.

The following committee amendments were considered and agreed to:

Section 3, page 2, line 3, strike out, beginning with the word "that," down to and including the word "detailed," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the general staff corps shall consist of one chief of staff and two general officers, all to be detailed by the President from officers of the Army at large not below the grade of brigadier-general."

In line 13, page 2, strike out the word "mounted."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I have a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 21, page 2, the words "detailed therein" and insert the following: "graduates of the War College and shall be detailed in the general staff corps."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is perfectly evident. It is to restrict the assignments in the general staff to the graduates of the War College.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to mar my friend's amendment by any suggestion of my own without consulting him. I would like to ask him if he does not think it would be well to insert in addition to graduates from the War College "or some reputable school of medicine?"

Mr. McCLELLAN. I agree with the gentleman. A diploma from a reputable school of medicine is unquestionably to-day one of the chief requirements for high command in the line of the Army. [Laughter.]

Mr. DINSMORE. So my friend recognizes the theory.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I certainly do. I know the War College has not as yet been fully organized, but we are informed that it will be in a short time, and will be in operation as soon as its building is completed.

The general staff can very well wait for a year or eighteen months, until enough officers have been graduated from the War College to fit them for service in the staff. Restricting service in the staff to graduates of the War College will, to a certain degree at least, prevent the assignment of officers to the general staff for no reason whatever excepting political influence. The curse of the United States Army to-day is the fact that very few officers can obtain assignments to the so-called staff department unless there is political influence behind them. This will be prevented by the amendment I offer.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN] is utterly unnecessary and at this time entirely improper. The construction of the buildings of the War College has not even begun; not even the first stone has been laid. It will take some considerable time certainly, if anything like an adequate course of instruction is to be established, to graduate men; and it seems to me that in this case it is a reflection on the President and the Secretary of War to assume that if they can get men of greater education, greater ability for this important duty of coordinating all the great branches of the Army and giving information to be used in time of war, they should be limited——

Mr. McCLELLAN. What is the purpose of the War College?

Mr. HULL. It is, as I understand, to give post-graduate courses to officers; and even when we have any post graduates there—when we have men who are qualified for this position—it seems to me it would be at least fair to assume that for this place, which carries no additional rank or compensation, but does impose additional work, the Secretary of War and the President should be left free to exercise their judgment in this matter. I submit that this would not be a wise amendment even if we had the college now in operation; and without the college in operation, with years to come before we can have a post-graduate class graduated there, it seems to me this House would be foolish to tie the hands of the President in this way and adopt such an amendment as this.

There is one other consideration, just suggested to me by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]. Service in the field is worth something in many branches of this business. In many particulars service in the field is worth more to a member of an advisory board of this character than war-college experience. Under this amendment you would cut out every man, no matter how great may have been his service in the field, unless he happened to have gone through the War College. Let the President have some discretion in the selection of the board; let him at least have the right to select the best men, whether they be graduates of the War College or not. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. McCLELLAN, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the chief of staff, under the direction of the President and Secretary of War, shall have supervision of all troops of the line and of the several administrative staff and supply departments, and shall perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the President and Secretary of War. Duties now prescribed by statute for the Commanding General of the Army as a member of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification and of the Board of Commissioners of the Soldiers' Home shall be performed by the chief of staff or other officer designated by the President. Acts and parts of acts authorizing aids-de-camp and military secretaries shall not apply to general officers of the general staff corps.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 5 and 6, section 4, page 3, strike out the words "several administrative staff and supply departments" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Adjutant-General's, Inspector-General's, Judge-Advocate's, Quartermaster's, Subsistence, Medical, Pay, and Ordnance departments, the Corps of Engineers, and the Signal Corps."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether all the administrative departments of the War Department are included here.

Mr. HULL. They are all included here except the Record and Pension Bureau.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why has an exception been made in that case?

Mr. HULL. For the simple reason that it is an office which has no military duties to perform. It has charge of records, and has been kept up in such a way that to-day you can get an answer to a letter in a few hours, whereas under the old military system you had to wait sometimes six months.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Are there any military officers detailed for service in that Bureau?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has said that there are no military duties to be performed there; still it seems that it supplies places to take care of somebody.

Mr. HULL. The head of the Record and Pension Bureau is purely an executive officer. General Ainsworth was appointed a brigadier-general under an act of Congress creating that office. His efficiency was so great that immediately on the passage of the act his name was sent to the Senate and his nomination confirmed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not a fact that these duties were formerly performed under one so-called staff department most inefficiently?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the performance of those duties was taken away from that department because of that fact?

Mr. HULL. Because——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not reflecting upon the head of that office; but it seems a peculiar thing that but one of these bureaus should be excepted. The gentleman himself says that there are no military duties to be performed in that Bureau.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that there is not any comparison between this office and the other corps put under the chief of staff, because it is just the one line of work—the care of the records, the arrangement of the work of an office, so that you can get your information at once. It has nothing to do with war. It comes in more after a war, getting matters in shape, and I hardly think the gentleman wants that included.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 4, page 3, by inserting after the word "duties," in line 12 the words "not otherwise assigned by law."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer as an amendment to the amendment to insert the word "military" after the word "other;" so that it will read, "and shall perform such other military duties," etc.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas will be considered as amended as suggested by the gentleman from New York. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the adoption of the amendment as recommended.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "and Secretary of War" wherever they appear in section 4 of the bill.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, the section provides that the chief of staff, under the direction of the President and Secretary of War, shall have supervision, etc., in lines 6 and 7, and again in lines 12 and 13, providing that the chief of staff shall perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the President and the Secretary of War. Mr. Chairman, if that section means anything it means that the two officers must act jointly as Commander in Chief of the United States Army, so far as this chief of staff is concerned. I think it is unwise. The answer to that is that the Secretary of War will never differ with the President; that if he will not agree with him, then the President can ask for his resignation. It might be possible, in the course of events, that we would have a gentleman as Secretary of War who would be unwilling to assume the responsibility of agreeing with the President on some measure that he might order or direct in relation to the Army, and, rather than be held responsible for some action he deemed unwise, he would tender his resignation.

Then, if this should be the law, the President would have to wait and the Army would have to be stayed until the President could fish around and find some gentleman to appoint Secretary of War who would agree with him. I do not think it should be double-headed. There might be a time, if you are going to have more than one person act as commander in chief of the Army, where it would be better to have three, so that in case there is a vote there will be a majority and there can not possibly be a tie. Therefore I think the words "and Secretary of War" should be stricken out entirely in this section, and that it should be left with the President alone, where it belongs. While I propose to vote for this bill, its chief merit, in my opinion, is that it does not amount to anything. [Laughter.] It will provide some pleasant and not injurious amusement for some young gentlemen during times of peace, but the moment that a war breaks out—a real war, where the fate of the nation is to be decided—and some man comes forward to win our victories and save our existence, like Grant or Lee, these gentlemen will be wiped off the chessboard and we will never hear of them again during that war. I think that the words "and Secretary of War" should be stricken out of the bill, and that we should leave the President Commander in Chief of the Army, as he now is. [Applause].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection on earth to the amendment. I regard the bill as practically the same, whether the amendment is adopted or not, so that I have no objection to that. But I do object to the gentleman's conclusions. I want to say to him that in the case of another great war this chief-of-staff board will make it possible for such men as Grant and Lee, or any of the great military geniuses who may serve their country in the future, to more efficiently discharge their duties and win victories more rapidly than they could under the old conditions, where they had to create and build up. They will find everything ready at hand to take the material and move on to victory, in place of spending two years and more, as our Union generals had to do in the civil war, to organize for the victories that followed in the later years.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That inspections of troops necessary to insure their discipline, instruction, efficiency, and welfare shall habitually be made by the general or other officer under whose command they are. Inspections of the Army at large, which may be necessary from time to time to determine its efficiency in whole or in part, particularly as to equipment, discipline, and instruction, shall be made by officers of the general staff corps. The inspection of money accounts heretofore made by officers of the Inspector-General's Department shall be transferred, as soon as practicable, to the Treasury Department, and thereafter such inspections shall be made by expert accountants of that Department at such intervals as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary: Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to establish such regulations as may be necessary for the disposition of unserviceable and useless articles or public property heretofore acted upon by the Inspector-General's Department.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all of section 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That officers holding permanent commissions in the Inspector-General's Department may be detailed as above provided to duty in the general staff corps or to any other duty which the interest of the service may require, and they shall be eligible to detail, irrespective of rank, to any grade in the general staff corps. Officers serving by detail in the Inspector-General's Department not selected for detail in the general staff corps or other staff department shall be relieved and returned to duty with the branch of the Army to which they permanently belong. So long as any officers holding permanent commissions as inspectors-general remain on the active list they shall be promoted according to the established rules of seniority up to and including the grade of colonel, and when all the inspectors-general holding permanent commissions shall have been separated from the active list the Inspector-General's Department shall be discontinued as a separate organization and bureau of the War Department.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Strike out all of section 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act shall be construed to reduce the numbers or grades of general officers now provided by law for the line of the Army.

With an amendment as follows:

Strike out all of section 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. HULL, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15449) to increase the efficiency of the Army, and had instructed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not the Chair will submit them to the House in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill,

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 24.

Mr. SIMS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, 9 members, not a sufficient number, rising to second the demand.

Mr. SIMS. No quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting the House.] One hundred and forty gentlemen present—not a quorum. The doors will be closed, and the Sergeant-at-Arms will bring in the absentees. The Clerk will call the roll, and as their names are called gentlemen will vote "aye" or "no," or, not desiring to vote, will answer "present."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 52, answered "present" 6, not voting 143; as follows:

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 154, the nays 52, answering present 6; total 212. A quorum is present and the bill is passed. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, ordinarily it is not well for a member of the House of Representatives to be sensitive concerning newspaper criticisms, and I should not notice the article to which I am about to call the attention of the House did it not in effect impute to me personal dishonesty. It is an attack on my integrity in financial matters, and therefore I think it my duty to myself, and especially a duty to my constituents, to call the attention of the House to it. I send the article to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SAVE ON CLERKS' SALARIES—COMMUNITY OF INTERESTS NOT A NEW FEATURE IN CONGRESS.

Considerable interest was aroused in Congressional circles yesterday by a special dispatch from Philadelphia to the Post, telling of a protest Philadelphia politicians were preparing to lodge against an alleged combine Philadelphia members of Congress had entered into to save clerk hire. It was stated that Representatives ADAMS, MORRELL, FOERDERER, and BURK had pooled their interests and were hiring one man to do their clerical work, thereby, presumably, saving three of the salaries of $1,200 allowed each of them for clerk hire.

Inquiry developed the fact that pooling of Congressmen in the matter of hiring clerks is not a new feature of Congressional life. An official list of clerks to members, published during the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, discloses a number of such cases. The clerks given as serving more than one Congressman each are as follows: Joseph P. Burg, clerk to Representatives MUTCHLER, of Pennsylvania, and PATTERSON, of Tennessee; H. E. Devendorf, clerk to Representatives EMERSON, LITTAUER, SHERMAN, and STEWART, of New York; Fred L. Fishback, clerk to Representatives CASSEL, of Pennsylvania, and MOODY, of Massachusetts; Ralph B. Horton, clerk to Representatives COOPER, of Wisconsin, and WATSON, of Indiana; John C. Page, clerk to Representatives LAMB, of Virginia, and BULL, of Rhode Island; Leonard Wilson, clerk to Representatives THAYER and NAPHEN, of Massachusetts.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that in the early part of the article there is a statement that these combines were made for the purpose of saving salaries of clerks. This saving could not be effected unless Congressmen themselves kept the money allowed for salaries or, at least, a portion of it. Therefore, the including of my name in the list implies that I have been certifying to the Government officials that I had promised to pay or had paid a certain amount to Ralph B. Horton as my private secretary, and that I have not paid him that amount; but that I have pooled with Mr. WATSON and thus retained a part of the salary myself. This is a direct charge involving my personal integrity. The House will pardon the use of a plain phrase—that I have been stealing and have lied about it.

As I have said, a Representative ought not to be sensitive about ordinary criticism. Criticism more or less severe is a part of the give and take of public life, and like every man in public life I have learned to expect it; but an attack upon my financial integrity, charging a looting of the public Treasury, is something that I can not in honor disregard. I desire to have read the affidavit of Ralph B. Horton.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, City of Washington, ss:

Ralph B. Horton, being first duly sworn on oath, says that he is, and for more than four years last past has been, the private secretary of HENRY ALLEN COOPER, a Representative in Congress from the State of Wisconsin; that during the whole period of such employment he has been paid for said services by said Representative HENRY ALLEN COOPER, the full amount allowed by law for the same, except during the sessions of the Fifty-sixth Congress, when he acted as session clerk to the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives, when under the law there was no allowance for a private secretary to said Representative HENRY ALLEN COOPER because of his being the chairman of said committee; that it has been the uniform practice of said HENRY ALLEN COOPER to indorse and make payable to affiant's order the check for said salary, and to deliver the same to affiant each and every month, and that affiant has always deposited such checks with his (affiant's) own bank account, or drawn the money on the same for his (affiant's) personal expenses, and that never during the whole of said period has so much as one penny of said salary been retained, paid to, or received in any manner, directly or indirectly, by said Representative HENRY ALLEN COOPER.

RALPH B. HORTON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 6th day of January, A. D. 1903.

[SEAL.] BENJ. VAIL,
Notary Public.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I acquit the writer of the article of any malice. I understand that certain discharged private secretaries of members of the House have been busy in instigating these attacks which have appeared recently in the public journals. To my surprise I found this morning, and I had never previously seen it, an official list of the secretaries of members of the House. In it appears the name of Ralph B. Horton as my private secretary, and also Ralph B. Horton as the private secretary of the honorable member from Indiana, Mr. JAMES E. WATSON. I consulted my secretary about this, and he reminded me of the fact, which had escaped my memory, that a year ago the present month, or a year ago about this time, he, Mr. Horton, asked me if I had any objection to his earning what money he could by his services as a stenographer and typewriter outside of his regular employment for me, saying that he felt that he needed to make his income as large as possible. I assured him that I had not the slightest objection provided that his services to others did not interfere with his duties to me. The Committee on Insular Affairs was engaged at that time upon important measures and I was in very frequent need of his services.

He told me this morning that at about that time (a year ago) he did perform some work for Representative WATSON; that he did not know how his name got into that record as being Mr. WATSON'S private secretary, unless Mr. WATSON put it there; that he had worked a part of two months for Mr. WATSON, and that is all. I never have had any conversation or any communication with Mr. WATSON, directly or indirectly, concerning Mr. Horton or his services to him, Mr. WATSON, nor about any proposed division of his salary, nor as to what Mr. WATSON was to pay him.

It is important that these facts should be before the House, because I signed a receipt in blank, as do other members of the House, of which this is a copy:

Received of Alexander McDowell, Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States,.....dollars, in full for amount paid by me for clerk hire, as above certified.

I believe that I have sufficiently occupied the attention of the House. I never on any occasion have taken any portion of Mr. Horton's salary.

Mr. Horton's affidavit sets forth the facts exactly, and with this I take leave of the subject.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. [Laughter.] What I have to state to the House is very much in line of what has been stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]. There was an article which appeared in the Washington Post—I think the date was Sunday—which has been in its issue of this morning denied. It was denied, as the Post said, upon investigation. In addition to the investigations made by the Post, I would like to make my position in this matter perfectly clear. Up to within a few months ago I employed a secretary at a salary double the amount allowed by Congress. In addition to the salary paid to my Congressional clerk, I employed a stenographer whose duty it was to occupy her entire time in the assistance of my Congressional secretary in Congressional work. In addition to these two employees, my Congressional work in the city of Philadelphia was carried on by my own personal clerks.

Since I dispensed with the services of the secretary that I originally employed, I have had, and have to-day, three secretaries and stenographers employed in carrying on whatever is necessary in connection with my Congressional work.

It is hardly necessary to say, Mr. Speaker, that their salaries are somewhat in excess of the amount allowed by Congress. I would not have mentioned this subject did I not feel that it was a personal attack upon my integrity. I do not like to dignify the original accusation by referring to it on the floor of the House; it seemed really beneath my notice. But under the circumstances I felt that it was incumbent upon me, and is incumbent upon me, to make this explanation.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I had intended to meet this matter in another way, but because it has been brought up here I want to state the simple fact that I do not think my secretary, Mr. Page, knows Representative BULL, or would know him if he were brought here now and asked to point him out. Unfortunately, he is detained at home by sickness in his family. I just want to say here that I keep my secretary employed all the time. If he has ever done work for any other member of Congress, it has never come to my knowledge. I pay him at the end of every month, and I sometimes employ other persons to assist him in the discharge of his duties. This outrageous publication is without foundation and unwarranted.

Mr. BURK of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to pay any attention at all to this matter. It has no doubt been observed that the article which was read from the Post purported to be a dispatch from Philadelphia; and it stated that protests were about to be made by politicians there against the Philadelphia delegation having a syndicate on clerks. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is not new. Some of the newspapers of Philadelphia have for several months contained articles about some members not having clerks. Like my colleague, I had a secretary until a few months ago; and, like him, I paid him more than double the clerk hire allowed by the Government. But that clerk left my service. Like my colleague, I have had two or three stenographers or clerks here in Washington and one in Philadelphia, those clerks being employed to attend to Congressional business. But so far as being in any partnership or trust with any of my colleagues to save clerk hire, such a statement is untrue.

The Washington Post of to-day gives an entire denial of the matter, and I did not intend to say anything about it; but I feared that should I not do so it might be assumed that the statement had some foundation in truth. There is absolutely no truth whatever in such a statement.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is necessary for all of us to explain. I would not do so had not this matter been brought up here this morning.

I was elected to the House in November, 1901, to succeed Mariott Brosius, who had died in March preceding. I came down here in December. My district had been without any Representative for six or seven months, and the work piled up for me to attend to was very great. I consequently appointed a secretary, a gentleman from my county, Mr. Slocum, and in addition to that I secured the services of Mr. Fishback, who had been the secretary of Mr. Brosius, to assist me in my work. From that time to this I have never been without two and a part of the time three secretaries. My pay roll for secretaries employed in my Congressional work alone has never been less than $150 to $200 a month since I have been elected. This is all I have to say in explanation of the statement in the papers.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to avail myself of this opportunity to pay a tribute to my secretary. He has served me for the ten years I have been in Congress; he has done it entirely alone and very efficiently. He gets the full salary allowed by law, and he holds no other Government position.

I had not intended to refer to this matter, but I have been forced to do so by the statements of others.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 6216. An act to pay in part judgments rendered under an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Hawaii for property destroyed in suppressing the bubonic plague in said Territory in 1899 and 1900, and authorizing the Territory of Hawaii to issue bonds for the payment of the remaining claims;

Senate concurrent resolution 52:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed forthwith, under the direction of the Attorney-General, a compilation of all the laws enacted by the various States of the Union relating to trusts or to combinations in restraint of trade and commerce, of which compilation 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 5,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 500 for the use of the Department of Justice—to the Committee on Printing.

PENSION FOR TOTAL DEAFNESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. By direction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I move to take up Senate bill 1359.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] calls up the bill which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1359) to increase pension for total deafness.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension roll of the United States, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, receiving pension for total loss of hearing due to causes originating in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, shall be entitled to receive, in lieu of the amount now paid in case of such disability, the sum of $40 per month: Provided, That said increase shall in no manner affect the rate of pension now being paid and allowable for partial deafness, the rating for which shall be continued and determined in accordance with the provisions of existing law.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering this bill to be read a third time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is almost impossible to get a full understanding of a bill from the reading at the desk. I have no doubt that members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions on both sides of the House are familiar with this measure, but I confess that I am not, and I should be glad if the gentleman from New Hampshire would make some explanation of its effect.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1359) authorizing an increase of pension in certain cases, have examined the same and report:

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $30 to $40 per month the pensions of all persons who, while in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, contracted total deafness of both ears.

Since the allowance of the original pension on account of total deafness of $13 per month, commencing June 4, 1872, only one increase for said disability has been granted, namely, $30 per month, provided by the act of August 27, 1888. This increase in rating to $30 was recommended by the then Commissioner of Pensions in his reports for the years 1885, 1886, and 1887.

That a large proportion of the men who are afflicted with total loss of hearing suffer from a continual roaring or fluttering in the ears there can be no question; in fact, many of them are never free from the torture which such roaring produces.

Aside from the resultant suffering, it is a well-known fact that it is well-nigh impossible for totally deaf persons to secure employment whereby they may earn a reasonable support, and it is only in exceptional cases that such persons can make themselves sufficiently useful to warrant an employer in seeking their services. They are thus practically barred from providing a comfortable maintenance for themselves and families. Their affliction is also of such a nature as to subject them to many humiliations from which pensioners suffering from other disabilities are entirely free. In addition, there is the ever-present danger of loss of life through accidents.

In the opinion of your committee there is no class of pensioners more worthy of generous consideration. Always reasonable in their demands, the claims for recognition of these men appeal most strongly to the sense of justice of your committee, who are firmly convinced that a grateful nation should grant a sufficient bounty to compensate these patriotic and uncomplaining defenders for the years of suffering which they have undergone.

Inasmuch as there are now but 239 invalid pensioners on the roll in receipt of a pension at the rate of $30 per month, the annual increase proposed by this bill as amended amounts to the inconsiderable sum of $28,680.

The following letter from the honorable Commissioner of Pensions sets forth the reasons for certain amendments which your committee have made in the bill:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, March 10, 1902.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to return herewith your communication of the 10th instant, together with bill S. 1359, authorizing an increase of pension in certain cases.

I submit for your consideration a draft of a new bill to take the place of S. 1359.

This I have done in order to make it clear that the proposed law does not increase the pension of those who are on the roll under the act of June 27, 1890, for total deafness, but only applies to those pensioners whose disability was incurred in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty. Furthermore, I have tried to make it clear that in determining the rate for partial deafness the maximum rate of $30 is the only one that can be used in arriving at the proportionate rate to be granted for the different degrees of loss of hearing less than total.

Very respectfully,

H. CLAY EVANS, Commissioner.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman of Committee on Pensions, United States Senate.

Your committee report the bill back favorably with a recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute therefor the following:

"That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension roll of the United States, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, receiving pension for total loss of hearing, due to causes originating in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, shall be entitled to receive in lieu of the amount now paid in case of such disability the sum of $40 per month: Provided, That said increase shall in no manner affect the rate of pension now being paid and allowable for partial deafness, the rating for which shall be continued and determined in accordance with the provisions of existing law."

Also amend the title so as to read: "A bill to increase pension for total deafness."

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the House that this bill is upon the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It is therefore in that committee, and it will take unanimous consent to consider it in the House without going into that committee; if there is no objection, the House will proceed as it is now doing. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I just want to ask the gentleman for a little information.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman, then, to give me, say, three minutes.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I will yield to the gentleman for three minutes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the bill states that on and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension rolls of the United States or who may hereafter be placed thereon shall receive this rate of pension. "All persons;" no limit. Sir, that "person" may be worth a million dollars, and under this law he can be pensioned. "All," not certain persons, but "all" who have served in our Army or Navy. That was never intended to be the policy of our pension law. Our old pension law, Mr. Speaker, read something like this, "unable to make a living, unable to support oneself because of military or naval service." I hope the bill is not open to the criticism that I have made, and I will ask the gentleman from New Hampshire to explain it if he can and show that I am mistaken. I hope that I am

Mr. SULLOWAY. In reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, I would say to him that under all laws that exist which pension men who were wounded or contracted disease in the service there is no pecuniary limit or qualification. If a man lost an arm, then he receives a certain sum, whether it is above or below the elbow, and it is immaterial whether he is thrice a millionaire. In this respect this legislation, if it is enacted, follows all that has preceded it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Our old pension laws did not so provide. My friend is mistaken. Then, Mr. Speaker, I desire now in all candor and frankness, without a disposition to criticise an honest and proper pension law properly and honestly and faithfully administered—I am its friend—to say that this kind of a bill and the other laws, if there are such laws, which pension a man who is capable of maintaining himself—certainly a millionaire—are founded upon a bad policy.

I am astonished that the distinguished gentleman [Mr. SULLOWAY], who is so familiar with these laws, would espouse a pension law which will take the hard-earned money of the people of this country—people lots of whom have no arms and some of whom have no eyes, who are taxed to pay money into the coffers of our country—and pay that money out to a millionaire simply because that millionaire, in order to defend his own fireside, his own country, and his own flag, was wounded or diseased in the line of service. After all, war is selfish—a desire to defend one's own. Shall we pension a millionaire for defending his own home? Is that real patriotism?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would ask just a few moments more.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just two minutes more.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I yield two minutes more, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, I say the people of this country are tired of that kind of a pension law. If a pension law of that sort were submitted to the people of this country at the ballot box they would not indorse it. It is not right to tax the paupers of this country, the plain people of this country, to pay millionaires a pension forsooth because, in dire necessity, they defended their flag and country and their own firesides. All over this country the people are grumbling at the increasing amount of money we are paying to pensioners, and yet we hear it boldly said in the American Congress that under this law and the others that are on our statute books a man twice a millionaire, a Pierpont Morgan or a Carnegie, who lost an arm or became diseased when fighting for his own fireside, is entitled to receive a pension, paid by the people of this country, many of whom to-day have not money with which to buy coal or food or raiment—not where even to lay their head.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire yield to his colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. SULLOWAY. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Three or four minutes.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the members of the House and the gentleman from Tennessee to the real merit of this bill, which is that it provides an increased pension for those who are entirely deaf in both ears, where the deafness was caused or received in the line of service and is of service origin. Will the gentleman from Tennessee or any gentleman on the floor of this House say that a man who in his youth—thirty-five years ago, if in the war of the rebellion; fifty-five years ago, if in the Mexican war—lost his hearing in both ears while fighting for his country is not entitled to recognition unless he be poor? Will the gentleman say that the great American people shall say to that man that he must be placed in the condition of a beggar before his services for his country are recognized and his total deafness recognized?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was not talking about that; but this bill goes further, as the gentleman from New Hampshire admits, and allows a millionaire, or a man with the wealth of Morgan or Carnegie or the Astors, or anybody else in like financial condition to draw a pension.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee is right, and yet he is wrong. This law draws no distinction. It simply says that the citizen who, in the line of his military service, lost the hearing of both ears is entitled to a pension of $40 a month—that is, of service origin.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you think a millionaire ought to be pensioned by the Government?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If the gentleman will allow me, there is no law on the statute book that makes that a test of a man's ability to receive a pension, where his disability is of service origin. If the gentleman will allow me, it makes no difference whether a man is a pauper or a millionaire, if he receives his disability in the line of service. No distinction is made by any law that has ever been on the statute book. If in the line of service, while serving his country, he lost the hearing of both ears, this law provides that he shall receive $40 a month instead of $30 a month, whether he be rich or poor. The present law does not make it a test as to whether he is a millionaire or a pauper, but all soldiers who lost the hearing of both ears while in the line of duty draw $30 a month.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not my friend think that if you were to bar millionaires from such a pension that you would have a good deal more money to pay to the poor people of this country who have hardly where to lay their heads—real objects of the Government's bounty?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the man who volunteers to serve his country and loses his good right arm or the hearing of both ears, I care not whether he be a millionaire or a beggar, is not only entitled to the just recognition of a just government, but if he is a millionaire there ought to be no unjust discrimination against him. The people want no bars against the rich or the poor when it comes to patriotism or duty to country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you think a millionaire ought to draw a pension from the Government?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I know no distinction between a millionaire and a pauper when by reason of service to his country he has lost the hearing of both ears. This Government owes him a debt of gratitude that it is glad to pay, one that can never be paid to him, whether he be a millionaire or a pauper. This bill is based on the positive declaration that the loss of hearing occurred while in the line of duty, and does not take into consideration the question whether a man is rich or poor. We would treat all who volunteer to fight the country's battles alike. We would allow a rich man to be patriotic and volunteer to serve his country as well as the poor man. If in the line of duty, the rich man receives an injury or loses his hearing the Government owes them alike the same debt of gratitude; they performed the same patriotic duty; they made the same sacrifices, received the same injury, and what American would raise any distinction as to the Government's appreciation of the service rendered or the debt of gratitude a generous Government owes. This increase is for injury received by rich and poor, all alike, while in the line of duty. If it were under the June act and not for injury received in the line of duty a different principle would be involved. Let us be just and generous to all who received injury in the line of duty and draw no unjust distinctions. [Applause.]

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] five minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, one of the important considerations which has always been involved in the passage of general legislation touching the subject of pensions has been to steer clear, as far as possible, of the very proposition suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] and which he seems to advocate.

Not many years ago it was attempted in this House to pass a bill to provide pensions for indigent soldiers of the civil war, and that proposition was denounced from one end of this country to the other. No opposition was more unanimous or could have been than that to a bill which undertook to place as one of the conditions of the relief to be afforded by the act of Congress the proof of the applicant that he was in needy circumstances. And when we passed the act of 1890, from that day to this a large body of soldiers throughout the country have been taught to believe that that was also a "pauper-pension bill," and the indignation of the people of the country was poured out upon that measure until it was discovered that there was no condition of poverty or necessity or indigence that was carried or referred to in any way in the provisions of that law.

Mr. Speaker, it has been the purpose, steadily adhered to by Congress, never to compel a man who had fought for his country and incurred physical disability to be compelled to expose to the Government or its officers the fact that he was in needy circumstances. Sometimes we have urged that as a matter in support of a private pension bill when the law seemed inadequate, but never in all our history have we incorporated into a measure conferring a pension upon a wounded soldier or a disabled soldier the necessity of making known that he was also a pauper. I refer, of course, to legislation relating to the great civil war.

I advise the gentleman from Tennessee, in all kindness, to study the history of this legislation, and he will find that the question of indigence is not the great principle of this legislation. It has been the patriotic purpose of the Government to recognize the soldier who had suffered, independent of any question of poverty or affluence. Anything short of that, Mr. Speaker, strips the whole pension legislation of the country of all that it is worth. If you discriminate against the soldier, why not send him to the poorhouse? The line of argument the gentleman from Tennessee makes, if carried to its legitimate and necessarily logical results, would terminate at the end of the line in the poorhouse—not up the hill to the Pension Office, but "over the hill to the poorhouse." These laws are built upon a higher patriotic purpose than the question of poverty or indigence. They are built upon the principles of patriotism and the duty of the Government to the soldier. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SULLOWAY. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, when I entered Congress eight years ago I introduced a bill almost identical in language with the one now under consideration. I have reintroduced that bill each term since. The class of the totally deaf is a very peculiar class, and excites the sympathy of anyone who stops for one moment to consider it. Those who are unfortunate enough to lose a limb or the class who incurred some lingering disease have in a large measure been able to pursue the avenues of trade or profession, enabling them to make a fair living. Some have even grown wealthy, notwithstanding these difficulties. I say, however, Mr. Speaker, that the man who has lost his hearing entirely, and since the close of the civil war has been left to remain in absolute silence save for the rumbling which he alone hears, notwithstanding his peculiar defect, is deprived of employment because of the risks which those defects incur.

Insurance companies deny them the privilege of insurance, and with the meager pensions given these unfortunately disabled soldiers they are placed at a disadvantage which their brothers who have incurred other difficulties have no knowledge of. The first pension granted to the totally deaf was $13 a month. There never has to this hour been an additional increase except one, which was granted them at $30 a month, which in my judgment is too small for men who incurred disabilities which so interfere with employment in trades and professions which these men labor under. While I would have been glad to see the bill pass as originally introduced, providing $50, I am content to see this measure pass and by its passage grant some slight measure of relief to this deserving class. There has purposely been no intention in the law to apply to any of those who have incurred total disability in the line of service any discrimination, and, as gentlemen have well said, no discrimination has been made or should be made because of the pecuniary or financial standing of those who are disabled. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to take any time in the consideration of this measure. This is a Senate bill that has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It is very strict in its language. There can be no question as to who it shall apply to. There are not a great many of them. There were 239 on the roll when this bill passed the Senate, as appears from the certificate of the then Commissioner. The increase is $10. The burden on the Government, if they are all living, would be the sum of $28,680 a year. Now, we give to soldiers who were totally disabled to perform manual labor $30 a month, and this gives additional relief to those who have been totally deaf for quite a number of years, and who are disqualified in nearly all cases in the various avenues of labor. It seems to me to be a very just measure, and I ask for a vote.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees.

TRANSFER OF CASES FROM STATE TO FEDERAL COURTS.

Mr. JENKINS (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to call up for passage the bill H. R. 14840.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14840) to amend sections 2 and 3 of an act entitled "An act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from the State courts, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875, as the same is amended by an act approved March 3, 1887, as amended by an act approved August 13, 1888.

Be it enacted, etc., That the second section of an act entitled "An act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from the State courts, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875, as the same is amended by an act approved March 3, 1887, as amended by an act approved August 13, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That any case at law or in equity now pending or which may hereafter be brought in any State court in which the matter in dispute exceeds or shall exceed, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $2,000, and arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States or treaties made or which shall be made under their authority, may be removed into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district by any defendant or by any plaintiff who could not have brought his suit in the said circuit court by original process; and if under the customary forms of pleading in such State court the matter giving the right of removal can not properly be otherwise claimed, pleaded, or shown, such matter and ground of removal may be made to appear by a verified petition for removal.

"Any other suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, of which the circuit courts of the United States are given jurisdiction by the preceding section, and which are now pending or which may hereafter be brought in any State court, may be removed into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein, being nonresidents of that State. And when in any suit mentioned in this section there shall be a controversy which is wholly between citizens of different States, and which can be fully determined as between them, then either one or more of the defendants actually interested in such controversy may remove said suit into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district. And where a suit is now pending or may be hereafter brought in any State court in which there is a controversy between a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought and a citizen of another State, any defendant, being such citizen of another State, may remove such suit into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district at any time before the trial thereof when it shall be made to appear to said circuit court that from prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in such State court or in any other State court to which the said defendant may under the laws of the State have the right on account of such prejudice or local influence to remove said cause: Provided, That if it further appear that said suit can be fully and justly determined as to the other defendants in the State court without being affected by such prejudice or local influence, and that no party to the suit will be prejudiced by a separation of the parties, said circuit court may direct the suit to be remanded, so far as relates to such other defendants, to the State court, to be proceeded with therein.

"At any time before the trial of any suit which is now pending in any circuit court or may hereafter be entered therein, and which has been removed to said court from a State court on the affidavit of any party plaintiff that he had reason to believe and did believe that from prejudice or local influence he was unable to obtain justice in said State court, the circuit court shall, on application of the other party, examine into the truth of said affidavit and the grounds thereof; and unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of said court that said party will not be able to obtain justice in such State court, it shall cause the same to be remanded thereto.

"Whenever any cause shall be removed from any State court into any circuit court of the United States, and the circuit court shall decide that the cause was improperly removed and order the same to be remanded to the State court from whence it came, such remand shall be immediately carried into execution, and no appeal or writ of error from the decision of the circuit court so remanding such cause shall be allowed."

SEC. 2. That section 3 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That whenever any party entitled to remove any suit mentioned in the next preceding section, except in such cases as are provided for in the first and last clauses of said section, may desire to remove such suit from a State court to the circuit court of the United States, he may make and file a petition in such suit in such State court at the time or at any time before the defendant is required by the laws of the State or the rule of the State court in which such suit is brought to answer or plead to the declaration or complaint of the plaintiff for the removal of such suit into the circuit court to be held in the district where such suit is pending, and shall make and file therewith a bond with good and sufficient surety for his or their entering in such circuit court on or before the first day of its then next session a copy of the record in such suit, and for paying all costs that may be awarded by said circuit court, if said court shall hold that such suit was wrongfully or improperly removed thereto, as also for their appearing and entering special bail in such suit, if special bail was originally requisite therein; and in such cases as are provided for in the first clause of the preceding section such petition may be filed in cases in which the ground of removal may be disclosed by the pleadings, within fifteen days after notice of the filing of the first pleading disclosing such ground; and if not so disclosed in the complaint, answer, or reply, then within fifteen days after the time for the reply of the complaint to be filed; and where such ground can not properly be shown by the pleadings, then on or before the date for the defendant to answer or plead to the declaration or complaint: Provided, That in pending causes removable at the time of the approval of this act, such petition may be filed within thirty days after such approval. It shall be the duty of the State court to accept said petition and bond and proceed no further in such suit, and, the said copy being entered as aforesaid in said circuit court of the United States, the cause shall then proceed in the same manner as if it had been originally commenced in said circuit court; and if in any action commenced in a State court the title to land be concerned, and the parties are citizens of the same State, and the matter in dispute exceed the sum or value of $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value being made to appear, one or more of the plaintiffs or defendants before the trial may state to the court, and make affidavit if the court require it, that he or they claim and shall rely upon a right or title to the land under a grant from a State, and produce the original grant or an exemplification of it, except where the loss of public records shall put it out of his or their power, and shall move that any one or more of the adverse party inform the court whether he or they claim a right or title to the land under a grant from some other State, the party or parties so required shall give such information or otherwise not be allowed to plead such grant or give it in evidence upon the trial; and if he or they inform that he or they so claim under such grant, any one or more of the party moving for such information may then, on petition and bond as hereinbefore mentioned in this act, remove the cause for trial to the circuit court of the United States next to be holden in such district; and any one of either party removing the cause shall not be allowed to plead or give evidence of any other title than that by him or them stated as aforesaid as the ground of his or their claim."

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

On page 3, line 16, after the word "Provided," insert the following:

"A motion for the removal of said cause is filed within thirty days from the joinder of issues; and whenever the matter giving the right of removal is raised, either by pleading or petition other than the original declaration of the plaintiff, it must appear to the satisfaction of the court in order to authorize a removal that the matter is raised and relied upon in good faith as necessary to the determination of the rights of the parties; and further"——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to reserve the point of order as to whether this bill is properly on the House Calendar. I could not tell from the reading of the bill whether there is any charge upon the Treasury or not.

Mr. JENKINS. No; none whatever, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is an additional ground for the transfer of cases from the State courts to the Federal courts, and I want to ask the gentleman whether in making that provision there was any additional charge on the Treasury?

Mr. JENKINS. None whatever. It simply, as I understand the bill, gives to a party a new right to remove his case from the State court into the Federal court if it is a claim in excess of $2,000 under existing laws of the United States or treaties. It is giving a new ground for removal from the State to the Federal courts. Has the gentleman any objection to that?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to raise the question of consideration against the bill, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin that it makes no charge on the Treasury. I assume that that is true, and I raise the question of consideration.

The question of consideration was taken, and the House refused to consider.

Mr. JENKINS. I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw the further consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be withdrawn; but the House has already refused to consider it.

TERMS OF COURTS IN DISTRICT OF UTAH.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for passage the bill (S. 149) to provide for holding terms of court in the district of Utah.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Utah constitutes one judicial district, which is known as the district of Utah. Terms of the district court shall be held in Salt Lake City on the second Monday in September, January, and April of each year: Provided, That terms of said court may be held at Ogden City or other places in said district when deemed necessary by the judge.

The following amendments were recommended by the committee:

In line 6 strike out the words "September, January, and April" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "January, April, and September, and at Ogden City on the first Monday in May and November."

After the word "that," at the end of line 6, insert the word "other."

In line 7 strike out the words "Ogden City."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL PUNISHMENT FOR SECOND CONVICTION OF COUNTERFEITING.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary I call up House bill 12763, to provide additional punishment upon a second or other conviction under the laws against counterfeiting.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon a second conviction of any of the offenses defined by sections 5414, 5415, 5430, 5431, 5432, 5433, 5434, 5453, 5457, 5458, and 5459 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, edition of 1878, and by sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the act of May 16, 1884, relating to the counterfeiting of foreign securities, and by sections 1 and 2 of the act of February 10, 1891, relating to the counterfeiting of coin dies, the maximum penalty now provided by those laws, respectively, shall be imposed.

Upon a third conviction of any of the said offenses the said maximum penalty and an additional penalty of five years shall be imposed.

Upon a fourth conviction of any of the said offenses the offender shall be sentenced to prison for twenty-five years.

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act a prior conviction of any of the offenses defined by the said sections of the Revised Statutes and by the said acts shall be held a first or second or third conviction whether the offender has been convicted of the same or any other offense relating to counterfeiting under the laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. That if it shall appear that the first or other conviction of the defendant was under a provision of the said sections or of the said acts other than the one under which he is being tried, the maximum penalty referred to in section one of this act shall be taken to be the maximum penalty of the particular offense for which the defendant is being tried.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CHANGE OF BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN CERTAIN DISTRICTS IN INDIAN TERRITORY, ETC.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I desire to call up House bill 6553 to change the boundaries between the southern and central judicial districts of the Indian Territory, and to establish a United States commissioner's court at Durant, Ind. T. I notice, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is on the Calendar of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered as if the House was in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin in calling up the bill, which the Clerk will report, asks unanimous consent that it be considered as if the House was in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will first report the bill, after which the request will be submitted to the House.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all that portion of the Chickasaw Nation east of the Washita River, from the mouth of said river to the mouth of Butcherpen Creek, and north up said Butcherpen Creek to the township line between townships 4 and 5 south in range 7 east, thence along said township line to the boundary line between the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations in range 8 east, shall be added to the central judicial district of the Indian Territory.

SEC. 2. That the United States court for the central judicial district of the Indian Territory shall have jurisdiction over all cases, civil and criminal, arising within the said described boundaries after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the judge of the United States court in the Indian Territory presiding in the central judicial district thereof is hereby authorized and empowered to appoint an additional United States commissioner within said district, who shall be permanently located at Durant, in the Choctaw Nation, and to prescribe by metes and bounds the portion of the district for which such commissioner is appointed.

The following amendment, recommended by the committee, was read:

Strike out section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That all that portion of the Chickasaw Nation east of the Washita River, from the junction of Island Bayou and the Red River, up the Red River to the mouth of the Washita River, and up said river to the mouth of Butcherpen Creek, and north up said Butcherpen Creek to the township line between townships 4 and 5 south, in range 7 east, thence along said township line to the boundary line between the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations in range 8 east, shall be added to the central judicial district of the Indian Territory."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that this bill was introduced into the House by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. It was very carefully considered by the Judiciary Committee and received the unanimous report from that committee. It is warmly indorsed by the Attorney-General and all the judges of the court. There is a lengthy report in favor of the bill, which the gentleman from Tennessee can have read if he so desires.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to ask if my colleague approves of the modification in the first section of the bill and substitution of the amendment recommended by the committee?

Mr. JENKINS. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] to answer that question.

Mr. MOON. I will say to my colleague, Mr. Speaker, that there is no objection to the change made by the committee, and if the gentleman from Wisconsin desires the report can be read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS OCONEE RIVER, GEORGIA.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call up the bill (H. R. 143) to authorize the construction by the Wadley and Mount Vernon Railroad Company of a bridge across the Oconee River, in the State of Georgia.

The bill having been read, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEPBURN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MANATEE RIVER, FLORIDA.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call up the bill (H. R. 13208) to authorize the United States and West Indies Railroad and Steamship Company of Florida to construct a bridge across the Manatee River in the State of Florida.

The bill, with the amendments reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, was read.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS ALABAMA RIVER, ALABAMA.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call up the bill (S. 6119) to authorize the Pensacola, Alabama and Tennessee Railway Company to erect, maintain, and operate a railway bridge across the Alabama River in Wilcox County, in the State of Alabama.

The bill having been read, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS CLINCH RIVER, TENNESSEE.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call up the bill (H. R. 15711) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Clinch River, in the State of Tennessee, by the Knoxville, Lafolette and Jellico Railroad Company.

The bill having been read, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MONONGAHELA RIVER, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call up the bill (H. R. 15767) to authorize Washington and Westmoreland counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania.

The bill was read.

Mr. WANGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9, on page 1, after the word "county," insert "at or;" so as to read, "at or near the village," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Has the House been engaged in this order for the period of one hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). About fifteen minutes of the hour remain.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering sundry bills reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. I should like to know what those bills are.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, if we had been engaged fifteen minutes longer in this exercise, I should have, under the rules, the right to make this motion; there would be no question about it. But our committee has got through with all our bills that have been reported and are on the House Calendar. There is, however, a large number of bills on the Union Calendar—bills authorizing the construction of light-houses, the construction of revenue cutters, and other matters of that kind. We should like under this order to dispose of those bills. Of course, we could have consumed the time so that the hour would have elapsed, but I did not think it wise to do so. I now submit this request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I think I must object to the request. I desire to say that if the order in which we have been engaged had been followed for an hour the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] would have had the right to move to go into Committee of the Whole on one bill, designating that bill; but, as I recollect the rule, he would have no right to move to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of taking up a number of bills. He would have that right after an hour has been expended. Therefore I think we ought to go on with this order. I know of other gentlemen waiting with bills that are in order under this order of business.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the difficulty is this, that probably if we pass the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and some other committee is recognized, the Chair would not recognize me to make that motion.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the contingency which the gentleman names is so remote that we ought to go on with the regular order. I therefore, reluctantly, am compelled to object.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman thinks it is wise to interfere with the proper and orderly conduct of business, he must take that responsibility. [Laughter.] That is all, Mr. Speaker.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that such gentlemen as desire to do so who spoke on the general staff bill this morning have the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that those gentlemen who spoke on the general staff bill this morning may extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Referring to section 32 of the act approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith an ordinance enacted by the executive council of Porto Rico on December 3, 1902, granting to Benjamin J. Horton the right to construct, operate, and maintain a system of long-distance telephone lines extending through the island of Porto Rico and connecting various cities and towns thereof together with local telephone exchanges in such cities and towns.

This ordinance was approved by the President of the United States on December 31, 1902.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1903.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State covering a statement showing the receipts and disbursements of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company for the month of November, 1902, furnished by the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission, in pursuance of section 11 of the "Act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory," etc., approved March 3, 1901.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1903.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, until Wednesday, on account of important business.

To Mr. RHEA of Virginia, for four days, on account of illness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. ZENOR was permitted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Andrew P. Batson, Fifty-fifth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). The Clerk will resume the call.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I would ask if the hour has yet elapsed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour has not yet elapsed. It will have elapsed at ten minutes to 4 o'clock.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I ask unanimous consent that that hour be considered as exhausted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the House may be considered as having exhausted the hour. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, would it be proper for me at this time to rise to a question of personal privilege? [Laughter].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

JOHN QUILTER.

Mr. LACEY (when the Committee on Indian Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I call up the bill (H. R. 4328) to ratify and confirm a lease made by the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to John Quilter, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this bill is not on the House Calendar.

Mr. LACEY. It should be upon the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Arkansas that while it was originally on the Union Calendar it was changed to the House Calendar, and properly so, in the judgment of the Chair.

Mr. LITTLE. Very well. I raise the question of consideration, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LACEY) there were—ayes 46, nays 34.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of no quorum.

During the counting,

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly evident that we have no quorum. I therefore move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the president of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission submitting an estimate of appropriation for salaries of the Commission—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 7, 1903.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SCOTT, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, if there be no objection. It is approved.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of WILLIAM P. DILLINGHAM, chosen by the legislature of Vermont a Senator from that State for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1903; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed with amendments the bill (S. 149) to provide for holding terms of court in the district of Utah in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1099) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to return to Harvard University certain colors, silver cup, and Nordenfelt gun;

A bill (S. 1359) to increase pension for total deafness;

A bill (S. 6119) to authorize the Pensacola, Alabama, and Tennessee Railway Company to erect, maintain, and operate a railway bridge across the Alabama River in Wilcox County, in the State of Alabama; and

A bill (S. 6439) for the refund of certain taxes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 143) to authorize the construction by the Wadley and Mount Vernon Railroad Company of a bridge across the Oconee River, in the State of Georgia;

A bill (H. R. 6553) to change the boundaries between the southern and central judicial districts of the Indian Territory, and to establish a United States commissioner's court at Durant, Ind. T.;

A bill (H. R. 12763) to provide additional punishment upon a second or other conviction under the laws against counterfeiting;

A bill (H. R. 13208) to authorize the United States and West Indies Railroad and Steamship Company, of Florida, to construct a bridge across the Manatee River, in the State of Florida;

A bill (H. R. 15449) to increase the efficiency of the Army;

A bill (H. R. 15711) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Clinch River, in the State of Tennessee, by the Knoxville, Lafollette and Jellico Railroad Company; and

A bill (H. R. 15767) to authorize Washington and Westmoreland counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of Local Union No. 379, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paper Hangers, of Huntington, W. Va., praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CLAY. I present resolutions of the legislature of Georgia relative to irrigation in that State. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee an Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas water supply and drainage largely determine the fertility of our soil; and

Whereas the proper irrigation and drainage of the State of Georgia would add very materially to the agricultural interests of the State and the people in general, if proper irrigation and drainage can be so used and handled as to prevent the washing and erosion of the land, causing the valleys to fill with sand and filling up the streams with silt: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the house (the Senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and are hereby, respectfully requested and urged to use their influence with the United States irrigation and drainage department and Department of Agriculture to have competent engineers to make a preliminary investigation in this State to determine whether or not irrigation and drainage can be applied, so as to prevent injury and damage to our lands and to assist the people of the State of Georgia in their agricultural pursuits and to ascertain the expense thereof.

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to secure this action at the expense of the National Government and without expense to the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That the agricultural department of the State of Georgia is hereby requested to cooperate with and furnish all information to said United States Department or engineers without incurring any expense to the State.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished to each of our Senators and members of Congress.

NATIONAL BANK OF HOLDENVILLE.

Mr. QUAY. I have a paper handed me, with the request that I bring it to the attention of the Senate. I send it to the desk and ask to have it read. It is not exactly in the nature of a memorial, but it is an affidavit bearing upon a matter in the record, and I suppose it will come in under the order of petitions and memorials.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that the paper sent to the desk may be read. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the paper was read, as follows:

TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO, County of Bernalillo, ss:

William Borchert, of lawful age, being duly sworn, on his oath states:

That he is justice of the peace of precinct No. 26 of the county of Bernalillo, N. Mex., and is the same William Borchert who testified before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Territories at Albuquerque, N. Mex., on November 14, 1902; that he has just read what purports to be his evidence before said subcommittee at said time and place, contained in Senate Document No. 36, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, at pages 56-57; that in response to the following question by Senator DILLINGHAM, as it appears by said report—

"Q. The large majority of the people in that precinct (referring to precinct No. 26) are Mexicans?"

this affiant is made to answer—

"Yes, sir; we have a very few Americans."

That affiant did not at that time and place testify that there were a very few Americans in said precinct 26, and that the large majority of the people in that precinct are Mexicans, and did not say anything which by any possibility could be construed to convey that meaning; that the fact is, as is known to everyone in this community, that said precinct is almost entirely peopled by what are locally called Americans as distinguished from the native population called Mexicans; that the said precinct has a population of between 3,000 and 4,000 at a conservative estimate, and of all the people of said precinct there are not, in the opinion of this affiant, to exceed 200 people of Spanish or Mexican descent, and of these there are not to exceed 25, in the opinion of this affiant, who can not speak the English langnage.

That affiant is at a loss to understand how anything he said at that time and place could have been so taken down by the stenographer as to make it appear that he stated that there were few Americans in pre inct 26, and that the large majority of the people were Mexicans; that affiant knows that he said nothing that sounded like that, and the statement is so at variance with the truth that he could not by any possibility have made that statement. And further affiant saith not.

WM. BORCHERT.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 30th day of December, 1902.

[SEAL.] FREDERICK H. KENT,
Notary Public, Bernalillo County, N. Mex.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (for Mr. HANSBROUGH), from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. He also introduced a bill (S. 6797) granting an increase of pension to Albert W. Bullock; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15345) to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PRICES OF COAL IN THE CITY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. STEWART. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire what is the wholesale price of coal in Washington which the local dealers are required to pay, and what is the price which the local dealers charge their customers, and whether the scarcity of coal is the result of failure of shipment to Washington, or whether there is any lack of prompt and efficient distribution among the people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. What is the purport of the resolution? What does it propose?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It proposes an inquiry on the part of the Committee on the District of Columbia as to the wholesale and retail prices of coal in the District.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the inquiry ought to be made.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

CONSTITUTION OF COLOMBIA.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Supplement to Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science of January, 1893, containing the constitution of the Republic of Colombia, with an historical introduction translated by Bernard Moses, be printed as a document.

REPORT OF THE PHILIPPINE COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith send a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the third annual report of the Philippine Commission, covering the year ending October 1, 1902, and the laws passed by the Commission between July 1, 1902, and October 27, 1902.

I call your special attention to the recommendations contained in this letter of the Secretary of War. I most earnestly feel that the enactment of the measures already pending in your body for the betterment of the Philippine Islands is imperatively demanded by the situation in those islands, and serious calamity may come from failure to enact them. Furthermore, I with equal earnestness ask your attention to the recommendation of the Secretary of War in the accompanying letter and urge its adoption, so that the sum of money therein specified may be appropriated for the uses and in the manner likewise specified, in order that the present distress in the islands may be remedied.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, January 7, 1903.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 6553) to change the boundaries between the southern and central judicial districts in the Indian Territory, and to establish a United States commissioner's court at Durant, Ind. T.; and

A bill (H. R. 12763) to provide additional punishment upon a second or other conviction under the laws against counterfeiting.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 143) to authorize the construction by the Wadley and Mount Vernon Railroad Company of a bridge across the Oconee River, in the State of Georgia;

A bill (H. R. 13208) to authorize the United States and West Indies Railroad and Steamship Company, of Florida, to construct a bridge across the Manatee River, in the State of Florida;

A bill (H. R. 15711) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Clinch River, in the State of Tennessee, by the Knoxville, Lafollette and Jellico Railroad Company; and

A bill (H. R. 15767) to authorize Washington and Westmoreland counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania.

The bill (H. R. 15449) to increase the efficiency of the Army was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ANTHRACITE COAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over, by unanimous consent, from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted on the 5th instant by Mr. VEST, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to prepare and report a bill amending "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, so that the tariff duty shall be removed from anthracite coal and the same be placed on the free list.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the resolution may go over until to-morrow, without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks that the resolution shall go over until to-morrow, retaining its place on the table. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The resolution goes over.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States. The bill is in the Senate. It has been read for amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say, in the absence of the acting chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], that notice has been given and duly recorded on the Calendar that the militia bill, so called, would come up this morning. I have expected that it would so come up, and I ask the Senator from Indiana if he does not understand the matter in the same way?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I understand that notice was given, but I did not know that the committee was expecting to proceed under the notice.

Mr. WARREN. I was endeavoring to secure the attention of the Chair to ask that consideration of the bill be proceeded with.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I did not intend to take precedence of that order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I do. I saw that the Senator from Vermont who has the bill in charge was not in the Chamber, and I thought we might proceed with the immigration bill, at least until he should return.

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15345) to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] to strike out all of section 24 as amended.

Mr. MALLORY. A large portion of this bill, Mr. President, that portion relating to the organization of the militia is, in my judgment, very desirable, and it would give me great pleasure to vote for it were there not included in it one or two features which I do not think can be sustained in connection at least with a measure of this character. The title of the bill is "To promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," and some twenty-two sections of the bill are devoted to provisions which undoubtedly are improvements upon the existing laws governing the militia of the States. I am free to say that, upon a very cursory examination of the bill, I was very much disposed to advocate it, but, after a careful second examination, I find that it is not merely a measure to promote the efficiency of the militia of the States, but that there is included in it the purpose of practically establishing a reserve army of 100,000 men in addition to the regular standing army we already have.

And, Mr. President, the measure is disingenuous, it is misleading, because, under the guise of being a scheme for the promotion of the efficiency of the militia, it deliberately declares that a certain body of men, to be called National Volunteers, are a part of the militia, when in fact and in truth, under the provisions of this bill, they can not be considered a part of the militia without doing violence to a very plain and unequivocal provision of the Constitution. The first section provides:

That the militia shall consist of every able-bodied male citizen of the respective States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and every able-bodied male of foreign birth who has declared his intention to become a citizen, who is more than 18 and less than 45 years of age, and shall be divided into three classes—the organized militia, to be known as the National Guard of the State, Territory, or District of Columbia, or by such other designations as may be given them by the laws of the respective States or Territories.

That is one of the branches of the militia for the promotion of the efficiency of which the bill provides. The second branch or class of the militia is specified in the same section to be—the National Volunteer Reserve as provided by this act, and the remainder to be known as the Reserve Militia.

Now, to ascertain what this National Volunteer Reserve is, we have to refer to the twenty-third and twenty-fourth sections of the bill, and in order that there shall be no misapprehension of what that is, I shall ask the Secretary to read the twenty-third and twenty-fourth sections, and have them incorporated as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to ask a question merely. Does the Senator from Florida understand that a part of section 24 has already gone out by amendment?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes; I do not know exactly, Mr. President, where that amendment begins. I tried to get a copy of the bill this morning as amended, but I was not able to do so. I know that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] was adopted, which affects the employment of a certain number in the year in practice duty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida desire to have the sections read as amended?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir; I would rather have them read as amended.

Mr. WARREN. Pending that, I will ask the Senator from Florida if it would not serve his purpose as well to change the paper so as to include the amendments that have already been made before he puts it on record?

Mr. MALLORY. It is only the twenty-third and the twenty-fourth sections that I propose to have read.

Mr. WARREN. Two clauses, comprising nearly a third of section 24, have been stricken out.

Mr. MALLORY. Yes; I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the two sections as already amended.

The Secretary read the sections as amended, as follows:

SEC. 23. That for the purpose of securing a list of persons specially qualified to hold commissions in any volunteer force which may hereafter be called for and organized under the authority of Congress, other than a force composed of organized militia, the Secretary of War is authorized from time to time to convene boards of officers at suitable and convenient Army posts in different parts of the United States, who shall examine as to their qualifications for the command of troops or for the performance of staff duties all applicants who shall have served in the Regular Army of the United States, in any of the volunteer forces of the United States, or in the organized militia of any State or Territory or District of Columbia, or who, being a citizen of the United States, shall have attended or pursued a regular course of instruction in any military school or college of the United States Army, or shall have graduated from any educational institution to which an officer of the Army or Navy has been detailed as superintendent or professor pursuant to law after having creditably pursued the course of military instruction therein provided. Such examinations shall be under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, and shall be especially directed to ascertain the practical capacity of the applicant. The record of previous service of the applicant shall be considered as a part of the examination. Upon the conclusion of each examination the board shall certify to the War Department its judgment as to the fitness of the applicant, stating the office, if any, which it deems him qualified to fill, and, upon approval by the President, the names of the persons certified to be qualified shall be inscribed in a register to be kept in the War Department for that purpose. The persons so certified and registered shall, subject to a physical examination at the time, constitute the eligible class for commissions pursuant to such certificates in any volunteer force hereafter called for and organized under the authority of Congress, other than a force composed of organized militia, and the President may authorize persons from this class to attend and pursue a regular course of study at any military school or college of the United States and to receive from the annual appropriation for the support of the Army the same allowances and commutations as provided in this act for officers of the organized militia: Provided, That no person shall be entitled to receive a commission as a second lieutenant after he shall have passed the age of 30; as first lieutenant after he shall have passed the age of 35; as captain after he shall have passed the age of 40; as major after he shall have passed the age of 45; as lieutenant-colonel after he shall have passed the age of 50, or as colonel after he shall have passed the age of 55: And provided further, That such appointments shall be distributed proportionately, as near as may be, among the various States contributing such volunteer force: And provided, That the appointments in this section provided for shall not be deemed to include appointments to any office in any company, troop, battery, battalion, or regiment of the organized militia which volunteers as a body or the officers of which are appointed by the governor of a State or Territory.

SEC. 24. That for the purpose of providing a reserve force of trained men which shall be ready for immediate service whenever called for and organized under authority of Congress, the Secretary of War is authorized to apportion among the several States and Territories and to enroll not exceeding 100,000 men, who shall have served in the Regular or Volunteer armies of the United States or in the organized militia. Such reserve force shall be designated as the National Volunteer Reserve, and when called forth by the President shall serve wherever ordered, within or without the territory of the United States. Such enrollment shall in each case continue for a period of five years, but in the event they shall be called into the service of the United States they shall be entitled to be discharged at the close of the war or after nine months' service. Whenever a volunteer force shall be called for by authority of Congress, and the members of any companies, troops, batteries, battalions, or regiments of the organized militia shall enlist in the Volunteer Army in bodies, such companies, troops, batteries, battalions, or regiments shall be received as the first organizations of such volunteer force. Whenever a volunteer force shall be called for by authority of Congress, exceeding in number the companies, troops, batteries, battalions, and regiments of the organized militia which shall enlist in bodies pursuant to the provisions of section 6 of the act entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes," approved April 22, 1898, the persons so enrolled as a reserve force of trained men, or so many thereof as shall be required, shall be organized in the manner provided for the organization of the volunteer force by section 12 of the act entitled "An act for increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1899: Provided, That the President of the United States, in time of peace, may by order fix the minimum number of enlisted men in each company, troop, battery, signal corps, engineer corps, and hospital corps: Provided further, That no person shall belong to both organizations at the same time.

Mr. MALLORY. The eighteenth section may be summarized as providing for a select corps of men set apart from the body of the people, whose ultimate function in the event they are called out by the President shall be to take command of a national volunteer force. These officers are not to be appointed by the authority of the States, but they are to be appointed by the President; and the President is vested by the twenty-third section with authority, whenever he deems it necessary or desirable, to send these gentlemen who have been segregated from the rest of the military of the States to special institutions, even to West Point, probably, if he deems proper, for the purpose of perfecting themselves in the art of war. They are entirely dependent upon the President, and entirely independent of any authority in the States.

The twenty-fourth section in similar manner provides for a separation from the body of the militia or the citizenship of the country of a select class of men, who by reason of experience in the Army of the United States or in the volunteer service in time of war or in the National Guard, or by having attended military schools, are supposed to be better qualified to make good soldiers than the ordinary citizen, and they are to be enrolled, and when called upon by the President of the United States they are to go into active service, to obey orders, and to be sent wherever within the country or without the country the President may designate.

It is necessary only, I think, for me to make this statement to show to any person who is familiar with the militia laws of this country and what the Constitution treats of on that subject that these particular soldiers can not possibly be classed as militia. Our Constitution in its third article declares that one of the powers of Congress shall be—

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

Congress has also power—

To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

The framers of the Constitution drew a distinct line between the Army and the militia. Wherever either of these adjuncts of our military power is referred to, the Constitution is careful to draw the line of distinction between the Army and the citizen soldiery known as the militia.

Yet this bill, starting out with the declaration that all the citizens of the United States under a certain age and under certain conditions shall be the militia of the United States, goes on and declares that that militia shall be divided into three classes, one of which classes is this body of organized national volunteers officered by the President of the United States.

Mr. President, in reading the twenty-third section somewhat cursorily it occurred to me that there was a very grave objection to it in the language whereby the power to call forth this particular body of men is vested in the President. It will be observed that in a portion of that section the expression "under authority of Congress" is used in divers places, but beginning at the twentieth line on page 15, in section 24, we find that "when called forth by the President" this national reserve "shall serve wherever ordered." "When called forth by the President."

If they are militia the President has the power to call them forth whenever, in his judgment, it is necessary. There is no question about that. Section 1642 of the Revised Statutes, which has been upon our statute books for a great many years, provides, in this language, that the President of the United States may under such circumstances call forth the militia:

Whenever the United States are invaded or are in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, or of rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth such number of the militia of the State or States most convenient to the place of danger, or scene of action, as he may deem necessary to repel such invasion, or to suppress such rebellion, and to issue his orders for that purpose to such officers of the militia as he may think proper.

Mr. President, if it is a fact, as I understand was contended here the other day, that this peculiar class of soldiers are a part of the militia, the passage of this bill will vest it in the power of the President to call out that entire force without any further authority from Congress, and without any intervention on the part of the States or the governors of the States, whenever it suits his will or whenever, in his judgment, he deems it advisable so to do.

Therefore, Mr. President, I claim that in declaring that this bill is for the purpose of promoting the efficiency of the militia and in declaring that this particular class of soldiers shall be one of the class of the militia of the States, the ordinary interpretation to be be put upon the language in the twenty-fourth section, in conjunction with section 1642 of the Revised Statutes, would be that whenever the President finds it necessary he will be authorized to order out this special band of soldiers. Surely, Mr. President, that ought not to be done.

There has not been anything said in behalf of this bill or in the report of the Secretary of War indorsing the measure that gives us any reason to understand why this wonderful innovation, this remarkable stride in the direction of a standing army should be made at this time. I asked the Senator from Vermont who has charge of the bill when he was opening the discussion on it what was the reason for this peculiar qualification in the bill, what reason was assigned for the organization of this special band of military? The response was a reference to the report of the Secretary of War; but nowhere in the report of the Secretary of War is there found one word to indicate that there is any crying necessity, or any necessity whatever, for an increase of the standing army of the country at this time. In fact, it has been thought advisable by the Administration to decrease the Army; and right on the heels of that we have this measure which proposes to provide a body of men who, in twenty-four hours, can be called out to the number of 100,000, and can be as much subservient to the War Department and to the behests of the President of the United States as the Regular Army.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator understand that the section gives the President authority to call out these men without any action on the part of Congress?

Mr. MALLORY. I think that would be the construction put upon it.

Mr. WARREN. I do not so understand it by the reading of the first lines of the section. The first four lines of the section state:

That for the purpose of providing a reserve force of trained men which shall be ready for immediate service whenever called for and organized under authority of Congress—

It seems to me that before the President can call that force out it would require an act of Congress organizing such force.

Mr. MALLORY. In answer to that, Mr. President, I will say that this act of Congress organizes this body of men, and until the amendment of the Senator from Ohio was adopted, and as the bill came in here originally, there could be no question whatever as to the fact that the passage of this bill itself organizes the national volunteer reserve. It provides for their meeting annually, for their going out on drill and practice for a period not exceeding ten days in every year. It is true that has been eliminated, but the fact that they are enrolled, that their officers are enrolled, and that the names of both officers and men are preserved for five years in the War Department, subject to be called on at any time, in my judgment, Mr. President, notwithstanding the language of the twenty-fourth section wherever it uses the expression "under authority of Congress," will be construed to mean that the President has the power to call them out whenever, in his will, he thinks proper, because they are already organized under the act of Congress.

The question may arise as to what constitutes organization, I will admit, but who is to interpret it? There should be no ambiguity whatever about a matter of that kind and, Mr. President, if there should be any question about it the fact that in the passage of this bill this Congress declares that these individuals constituting this select body of military are a part of the militia of the land under section 1642 of the Revised Statutes would authorize the President to call them out without any further intervention of Congress. That, to my mind, is a matter too serious for us to permit to pass without proper comment.

I am as anxious as anyone on this floor to promote the efficiency of the militia, but I do not think that this bill will promote the efficiency of the militia. I believe that in actual practice it will be found that this body of men, this national reserve of volunteers, will take a position above the militia; that they will be regarded as a select and privileged class and that, so far from being an incentive for the promotion of the efficiency of the militia, it will result in the officers and soldiers of the militia preferring to belong to this select and preferred organization.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] that if his view is the correct one, if it could be made perfectly plain and beyond all doubt so that there could be no misconstruction hereafter; if it could be made evident beyond dispute that this is not an enlargement of the Regular Army, and that the so-called reserve militia are nothing more than 100,000 regulars to be called for whenever the President sees fit, Senators on this side would not feel so much interested and be so determined in their opposition. If we are to have an enlargement of the Regular Army, let us have it; but do not let us have it under the guise of a more efficient militia.

I am sure that some words could be put into this bill by way of amendment which, while possibly relieving this feature, would not so change it as to make it worthless.

Mr. MALLORY. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that I have an amendment, which I propose to offer at the proper time, which I think will meet the point he is making.

Mr. TILLMAN. Possibly the Senator in charge of the bill might be willing to incorporate it now. As I understand it, there is no opposition to this bill from our side of the Chamber except to the twenty-fourth section, and we might save some valuable time, which might be devoted to other matters, if we could agree upon a proper amendment. We may be disputing about a shadow here, and we might all be of one mind if we could just simply understand what is the proper thing to do.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in my judgment there is no intention on the part of any member of the Military Committee of either House, which has reported this bill, or on the part of the Secretary of War, to make this feature anything more than the keeping track of and knowing the names and the locations of the various men who have seen service, in order that Congress may hereafter authorize, if occasion requires, the formation of that reserve force into an available and efficient fighting force of the nation. Surely, in view of the fact that the Administration is now engaged in very substantially reducing the Army without any suggestion from Congress, there ought to be no fear that anyone in authority is surreptitiously trying to enlarge the standing army. There is nothing surely in the intention of those who reported this bill to excite any such suspicion in the mind of anyone.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I hope nothing I have said would imply that I thought the Secretary of War or any member of the committee had any improper or ulterior purpose in framing this bill in the way in which it has been framed. I confess that when I first read the bill it did not strike me at all in the view in which it now strikes me. I am perfectly willing to concede to the gentlemen who have brought in this bill here as much sincerity of purpose as I myself have; but, Mr. President, I say the bill is disingenuous, without intending to reflect upon those who brought it in here, because it declares that this body of men are a part of the militia, when, in fact and in truth, according to the Constitution, when their officers are appointed by the President of the United States they can not be a part of the militia.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to impute to the Senator that he intended to make charges against anyone. I was replying more especially to what the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] said. I think we all feel alike when we get to the bottom of this matter—that we want an efficient militia; but I think those, of whom I am unfortunately not one, so versed in the law and the construction of the Constitution as to enter into the debates on abstruse constitutional questions, are liable, when they get down to extremely technical points of discussion, to get into conjectural problems and become afraid of mere shadows and of what does not exist in either the language of a bill or in the intention behind it. I only say what I do with a view to get the bill out into the open and into the light and secure for it an unbiased consideration on what it actually says and means without attributing to it hidden meaning or power, and if not now right, so that it may be made right.

I want to say again that the effect of the bill as already amended will be merely to have the names of these men recorded in the War Department, so they can be organized into an efficient corps if wanted; and the object is, and the effect will be, to prevent the enlargement of the standing army rather than to add to it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MALLORY. I shall yield in a moment; but before I yield I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming, before he takes his seat, one question. I should like to ask the Senator to tell me whether, in his judgment, this particular body of men included in the twenty-third and twenty-fourth sections of this bill are a part of the militia or could be made a part of the militia of the States?

Mr. WARREN. Technically, yes; but practically, no, without some further action than the passage of this bill, as already amended by the Senate. I do not understand that this force can be called forth until there has been special action on the part of Congress.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MALLORY. I promised to yield to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I shall yield to the Senator from Ohio when the Senator from South Carolina concludes.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will indulge me for a moment, I merely wish to answer, I will not say the charge, but the indirect attack, on me as having caused this opening up, as it were. I want to disclaim any intention of accusing anybody of surreptitiously or secretly or with any desire to deceive anyone in the bringing in of this bill. I thought, in my blundering way, that if we were merely differing about the form rather than essentials we could make the form satisfactory to both sides, so that we could pass this bill and get onto something else.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator is right.

Mr. TILLMAN. If there is really no desire on the other side, or in the minds of the committee who have this matter in hand, to make this hundred thousand men an actual reserve to the Army—if they are to remain militia and we can make it clear, and undoubtedly we can make it clear, that they are militia and that they can not be ordered out or moved or armed or called forth without Congressional action—I am sure that the objections which we on this side have to the bill will be brushed aside; that we shall all agree about any reasonable and proper method of increasing the efficiency of the militia, and we can almost pass the bill in ten minutes.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. MALLORY. I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I rose in order that I might answer or give my own view of the question which the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] asked the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], as to whether or not this volunteer reserve force is in any sense a part of the militia. All citizens of the United States capable of bearing arms, between the prescribed ages of 18 and 45, are the militia, whether they are organized or not, and they are liable to be called into the service. There is, however, the militia in the broad generic sense of the word, and there is the organized militia. The organized militia is that to which the Constitution has reference when it authorizes its organization and provides for its officering and organization.

But I think the Senator misapprehends the character of this bill in this respect. I do not think there is anything disingenuous about it. The title of this bill says that it is "A bill to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes." One of the other purposes is the purpose about which we are here discussing.

It is certainly competent for us to provide a volunteer reserve force for the Army of the United States to such an extent as we may see fit to provide. It is not a question of power, certainly, but the extent that we see fit to go is a question of policy. All we undertake to do here is to have registered in the office of the Secretary of War the names of 100,000 men who have seen service, who understand discipline, who have been drilled, and to whom, when there is a threat of war, "notice can be sent," to use the language of the Secretary when he was before the committee testifying, "to hold themselves in readiness," but not one of whom can be called into service or organized until Congress itself acts and gives the President or the Secretary of War the necessary authority. In other words, the whole of this provision is a designation of the volunteer reserve force to consist of drilled and disciplined men whose names shall be registered, and upon whom a call may be made when Congress authorizes it.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator will admit that under section 1642 of the Revised Statutes the President can call out the militia whenever he thinks proper without any intervention on the part of Congress.

Mr. FORAKER. That relates to the organized militia.

Mr. MALLORY. The organized militia.

Mr. FORAKER. This is a part of the militia, but not of the organized militia.

Mr. MALLORY. Then the Senator admits that this is not a part of the militia.

Mr. FORAKER. I not only admit it, but I have been asserting ever since this bill came up in the Senate that it is not a part of the militia. It is a part of the volunteer reserve force of the Army. It is, however, a part of the militia in the sense that all the people of the United States between the ages of 18 and 45 constitute the militia.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator's construction is different from the language of the bill itself, for the bill declares that they shall be part of the organized militia, which is divided into three classes——

Mr. FORAKER. I know the Senator does not intend to misrepresent what I said. I said distinctly they are a part of the militia in the broad, generic sense of that term, but they are not a part of the organized militia. We are all a part of the militia, if we are not over 45 years of age, which most of us are not. [Laughter.]

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio draws a distinction between the militia and the organized militia, which, of course, is correct; that is, if, when referring to the militia, he means all who are capable of bearing arms.

Mr. FORAKER. That is what I mean.

Mr. MALLORY. All the people who are capable of bearing arms are included in that broad, generic term, but this bill does not mean that, and the Constitution, when it provides that Congress shall have power to organize the militia, does that which this bill proposes to carry out, namely, organize the militia. The bill itself divides this organized militia into three classes. The Senator has only to read it to see that there are three classes provided for here—the organized militia, to be known as the National Guard of the State, the National Volunteer Reserve, and the Reserve Militia. Those are the three distinct portions of the national militia.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Do both Senators yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Both Senators seem to have yielded.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to suggest to the Senator from Florida that his statement that this bill does not recognize the militia used in its generic sense, as indicated by the Senator from Ohio, is certainly inaccurate, as he will see if he will read it more carefully. This bill declares of what the militia shall consist, and of course it deals with the subject in its generic sense, which has been recognized by the courts very clearly. The bill says:

That the militia shall consist of every able-bodied male citizen of the respective States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and every able-bodied male of foreign birth who has declared his intention to become a citizen, who is more than 18 and less than 45 years of age, and shall be divided into three classes—the organized militia, to be known as the National Guard of the State, Territory, or District of Columbia, or by such other designations as may be given them by the laws of the respective States or Territories, the National Volunteer Reserve as provided by this act.

That deals with the organized force—and the remainder—

That is, every able-bodied and arms-bearing citizen—to be known as the Reserve Militia.

That is the organized militia.

Mr. MALLORY. The generic militia.

Mr. SPOONER. The generic militia; what is left of the generic militia after taking out the organized militia. The bill clearly recognizes and uses the word in that sense.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, while I have great respect and regard for the views of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], I do not think he has done away with the objection which I urged, based upon what I claim to be disingenuousness in the bill. I do not care to quibble about words.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to say as to this provision, if the Senator will permit me, that I myself am not indisposed to agree with his contention that under this bill, in view of existing legislation, it may be that this national volunteer reserve might be called out by the President without further authorization by Congress, although it clearly could not be organized with the amendment which has been made to section 24 without further authorization by Congress. But I have drawn an amendment, to be inserted at the end of section 24, to provide that the national volunteer reserve shall not be called forth by the President without authority hereafter given by Congress. If the committee does not offer such an amendment, I shall myself offer it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MALLORY. I yield.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will indulge me a moment further as to the provision of this bill with respect to calling out the organized militia and also the volunteer reserve force, on page 16, immediately after that portion of the bill recently printed which has been stricken out by amendment, is the following:

Whenever a volunteer force shall be called for by authority of Congress, and the members of any companies, troops, batteries, battalions, or regiments of the organized militia shall enlist in the Volunteer Army in bodies, such companies, troops, batteries, battalions, or regiments shall be received as the first organizations of such volunteer force.

Now follows this provision:

Whenever a volunteer force shall be called for by authority of Congress, exceeding in number the companies, troops, batteries, battalions, and regiments of the organized militia which shall enlist in bodies pursuant to the provisions of section 6 of the act entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes," approved April 22, 1898, the persons so enrolled as a reserve force of trained men, or so many thereof as shall be required, shall be organized in the manner provided for the organization of the volunteer force, etc.

In other words, they can not be called out, they can not be organized without authority of Congress hereafter given, as I understand it. I have not any objection, so far as I am concerned as one member of the committee, to the word "hereafter" being inserted in that clause where the bill speaks of calling them out by authority of Congress. That would make it perfectly plain that they can not be so called. I understood it was already plain.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Florida indulge me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MALLORY. I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Wisconsin, and the Senator from Wyoming, who are differing somewhat in their construction of this measure, wherein would lie the difference between this volunteer reserve and the landsturm or landwehr, or whatever it is, of the German army?

Mr. SPOONER. Landwehr.

Mr. TILLMAN. The landwehr, I think, is the first reserve and the landsturm is the second. I want to know if there be the slightest difference in that portion of the German military establishment, which can be called forth and mobilized inside of a week, and the volunteer reserve authorized by this bill? In other words, is it not clearly apparent to any right-thinking person, who will interpret the English language in an ordinarily honest way, without any concealed purpose or hidden idea, that this is simply an enlargement of the force of the Regular Army to the extent of 100,000 men, whose names are enrolled, who are provided for in everything except, possibly, being under officers, but who can be furnished officers as soon as they are mobilized? I want to know wherein there is any difference here.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, as the Senator from South Carolina addressed his inquiry to me, if the Senator from Florida will further yield——

Mr. MALLORY. I yield.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say, in answer, that I am not familiar with the organization of the German army. I think I know something, however, about the organization of our own Army, and, unless I am very greatly mistaken, I know something about the provisions of this bill.

The purpose of this bill is just as plain as the English language can make it. First, it provides for the organization of the militia; that is, the organized part of the whole militia of the country. Then it provides for recording in the office of the Secretary of War the names of 100,000 men who have seen service, who shall be denominated the volunteer reserve force, and upon whom, in time of threat of war, by authority of Congress first given—"hereafter given," we will put it—the President may call; then, when they respond, they may be organized, and then they become a part of the Volunteer Army of the United States.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. In the event that the President is authorized to call and calls for this reserve force of 100,000 men, I desire to ask the Senator if, under this bill, he could call for them in preference to the militia, if he desired to do so?

Mr. FORAKER. No; the bill expressly provides that to answer the first call for volunteers the organized militia shall respond.

Mr. CLAY. What is the difference in the duties of these 100,000 men and the organized militia under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. FORAKER. There is no difference whatever after they are called into the service of the United States, but before the call these 100,000 men have no duties to perform.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, there may be this very great difference. I suppose it is conceded that the organized militia called into the service of the United States could not be sent beyond the boundaries of the United States, and I suppose it is true that this volunteer reserve force could be sent beyond the boundaries of the United States.

Mr. QUARLES. That is stated.

Mr. WARREN. It is so expressed in the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. It would be so if they were not a part of the organized militia.

Mr. CLAY. Then they have a separate duty to perform, and they are separate and distinct.

Mr. FORAKER. No; this 100,000 reserve force will be a part of the Volunteer Army of the United States whenever they are called into service, but until they are called into service they will have no duty whatever to perform.

Mr. TILLMAN. On page 16 of the bill—I think it may have been reprinted, for I have not kept track of this legislation—I notice in the second line the provision that—

The persons so enrolled shall report for drill, inspection, and instruction——

Mr. MALLORY. That has all been stricken out.

Mr. WARREN. That has all been cut out.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to say if that language was in the bill they were a part of the Regular Army, and the fact that it was in showed that the intention was to increase the Regular Army.

Mr. SPOONER. The fact that we struck it out showed that our intention was not to increase it.

Mr. TILLMAN. But it looks as if that were the committee's intention.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I understand that that provision which has been stricken out by amendment was not part of the bill as originally framed, but was incorporated in it by an amendment in the House of Representatives.

Mr. TILLMAN. With the permission of the Senator from Florida, I should like to know if this bill has been reprinted, so that we can get the present status of it? In other words, I do not want to be discussing a bill with provisions in it that are already amended out of it, without our having a reprint. I would suggest that we had better defer this debate after the Senator from Florida concludes his very pertinent and cogent remarks, and let us begin over again some other day when we all know what we are talking about. Has there been a reprint?

Mr. WARREN. If I may be permitted, I will say as to the matter before the Senate that there has been an order for a reprint since the first amendments were made. The bill has been reprinted, but section 24 has been since amended.

Mr. TILLMAN. I confess my ignorance of this subject just now, because I have been engaged on other matters, and we all realize that, unless we are aided by a lot of clerks and others—and I have not got that good luck—we can not keep track of all the things which come in here, and therefore I am not ashamed to say I know very little about what has been done on this bill except that there have been speeches made on it. If we can amend it in a reasonably decent shape, as I hope we can from what Senators on that side say, I think we can agree about certain amendments which will safeguard the constitutional rights of the States and not enlarge the Army surreptitiously.

Mr. MALLORY and Mr. WARREN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MALLORY. I am afraid my remarks will be so mixed up that it will be very difficult to tell which are mine and which are not.

Mr. WARREN. I promise not to interrupt again; but with reference to the remark made by the Senator from South Carolina as to the differences existing between the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and the Senator from Wyoming, there are no differences of opinion as to the intent of the bill.

The Senator from Wisconsin is willing to make it more explicit. The Senator from Ohio has expressed the same intention, and I have expressed no objection. I had considered it, until I had the better authority of those who know more about law than I do, sufficient as it was, but there is no difference in the intention.

Mr. TILLMAN. That may be true, and if it is, we can not be very long in getting together.

Mr. MALLORY. The Constitution only recognizes, so far as our land military is concerned, two classes of military—the Army and the militia. The question whether we should have a standing army was debated quite fully in the Constitutional Convention, and it was finally decided that there should be provision for a regular standing army. There was great discussion as to the number of men that should be permitted to be enlisted. Finally that question was determined. But there has been preserved throughout, from the beginning to the present day, up to the introduction of this bill, a very marked discrimination and distinction between the Army and the militia.

Mr. President, as late as 1898, in an act passed under an emergency, there was embodied language which I will read. I read from the fourth section of the act of April 22, 1898, in which it was declared that—

> The Volunteer Army shall be maintained only during the existence of war or while war is imminent.

"Shall be maintained only during the existence of war or while war is imminent." Just as soon as war ceases or the imminence of war ceases, then the Volunteer Army goes back and takes its place among the toilers and wage-earners and business men of the land. That is the idea which has prevailed in the past, but now it is said there is a distinction between the organized militia—what gentlemen are pleased to term the "organized militia"—and this select body of volunteers, to be officered by the President of the United States but selected from the same people—the militia of the United States—the only difference being the fact that they are called the Volunteer Reserve and are officered and commanded by men who derive their authority from the President of the United States. It seems to me there is no distinction there, and I do not see any reason why it should not be contended that these men, so far as this bill is concerned, are as much a part of the militia as is the militia itself. That, however, could not stand, because they are officered by the President.

Then comes the question, Why was this particular provision incorporated in the pending bill? I should like some Senator to answer that. The bill discloses its purpose to be "the promotion of the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes." I have received a great number of letters from my State, written by young men who are members of the State troops of my State, who have heard of the improvement in the system proposed by the militia provision of this law, and all of them urge me to vote for it. I myself have been a member of the State troops of my State. I take an interest in the development of the National Guard, as much so probably as anyone here, and all these young men throughout the land who are sending their letters here urging us to support this measure are undoubtedly under the impression that this bill is solely and entirely a militia bill, when in fact, Mr. President, it is a bill which provides for a hundred thousand extra men for the standing army of the United States whenever the President chooses to call them out.

Mr. FORAKER. Under the authority of Congress, the Senator should add, hereafter to be given.

Mr. MALLORY. As I stated in the outset of my remarks, from the peculiar language of the whole act I think there would be a very grave question whether or not the President was not intended to be authorized to call out these men without any intervention on the part of Congress hereafter; and for that reason——

Mr. FORAKER. That is a statement which is serious in its import. Does the Senator mean to be understood as saying that in the drafting of the bill it was intended to confer upon the President authority to do that which the bill on its face, as I understand, says he can not do until Congress first takes action?

Mr. MALLORY. No; I do not.

Mr. FORAKER. Then what did the Senator mean by that statement, if I may ask?

Mr. MALLORY. I meant to say that in my judgment the bill is open to that construction.

Mr. FORAKER. What language is there which admits of that construction?

Mr. MALLORY. I might not construe it in that way; the Senator from Ohio might not construe it in that way——

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that I may have the benefit of the Senator's statement, because if there is any language here which admits of that construction it is something that can be cured. Nobody has a thought of conferring such power on the President.

Mr. MALLORY. I hope it will be cured. After first reading the bill and seeing what occurred to me might possibly be a serious objection, I drew up this amendment, which I am now sorry I did not have printed. I did not, however, introduce it because the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] proposes to strike out the entire section, and this is an amendment to the section he proposes to strike out. My amendment was in line 15, page 15, section 24 of the bill, to insert, after the word "Congress," in line 15, the following:

> To be called forth, however, only during the existence of war with a foreign nation or when such a war is imminent.

Quoting the language of the act of 1898. That is to put at rest the possibility of any misconstruction.

Mr. FORAKER. May I inquire where the Senator proposes to insert that language?

Mr. MALLORY. In line 15, section 24; so that it will read:

> That for the purpose of providing a reserve force of trained men which shall be ready for immediate service whenever called for and organized under authority of Congress, to be called forth, however, only during the existence of war with a foreign nation or when such a war is imminent.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not object to that.

Mr. MALLORY. Then, farther down, where it occurs again, after the word "President," in line 21, I propose to insert the following:

> Which shall be done only during the existence of war with a foreign nation or when such a war is imminent.

In other words, by that amendment there would not be any possible doubt, and the ambiguity to which I have endeavored here to call attention—without reflecting upon anybody, for certainly I have no such intention—and which it occurred to me might possibly be construed to exist in this measure, would be effaced and gotten rid of. If the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is voted down, I shall offer my amendment in due time.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator did not indicate just where he would insert the last phrase.

Mr. MALLORY. After the word "President," in line 21, page 15, section 24, I would insert the words I have indicated. It is simply carrying out the idea. The clause would then read:

> Such reserve force shall be designated as the National Volunteer Reserve, and when called forth by the President, which shall be done only during the existence of war with a foreign nation or when such a war is imminent.

Mr. FORAKER. I am only one member of the committee, but I doubt if there would be any objection to that amendment. The provision would remain even in that contingency that he could not call forth this force without the authority of Congress, hereafter given.

Mr. MALLORY. That is a matter about which I would not care so much.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator occupying the floor, and also the Senator from Ohio, to another part of this section which neither of them seems to consider at all. This bill now provides for the enlistment of a hundred thousand men; that is to say, these men volunteer now for service when called for. In other words, the bill provides for the setting apart, by their own consent, of a hundred thousand volunteers, and provides that when called for hereafter they shall serve a certain length of time. In other words, it is the organizing of a hundred thousand men as a part of the Regular Army of the United States, not active, but enlisted, volunteered, and ready for action whenever called for; and that is as objectionable as the other feature of the bill.

Mr. MALLORY. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that I do not think I was oblivious to the fact to which he calls attention. That is one of my most serious objections to this measure. I have not had an opportunity, perhaps, to dilate on it as much as I otherwise would have done.

Mr. PETTUS. If the Senator will allow me, I merely call attention to this matter now because there seems to be an agreement going on to perfect the bill, leaving the hundred thousand men there, already volunteered, but not to be called out until Congress says so. I object to its being organized in that way. We have a hundred thousand men now authorized. Sixty-odd thousand of them are in actual service, and the balance can be called out whenever the President desires it. This adds a hundred thousand more, making two hundred thousand men enlisted if the President chooses to fill up the Army to its maximum. I think we are traveling too fast toward a government by military force.

Mr. MALLORY. Undoubtedly there is a great deal of pertinency in the remark made by the Senator from Alabama on that point. If there is any occasion for an increase of the Army of the United States, the Senate has certainly had no information on that subject. The evidence we have had is that there is no occasion for a provision of this kind. We do not apprehend any invasion of our country either from the north or the south of us, and I do not think anyone, even in his wildest dreams, could imagine that any combination of European powers would undertake to land military forces upon our soil. Consequently, except for such purposes as concern our own internal peace and order and for the manning of our fortifications, there is no occasion for any considerable army.

The Administration has thought proper to reduce the Army to 65,000 men, if I am not mistaken, and I understand that there is an adequate force in the Philippine Islands to carry out all the policies which this Government has decided to pursue in those islands. There is no clamor among the press of this country for an increase of the Army, and yet here, under the guise of a bill for the promotion of the efficiency of the militia, we find, as the Senator from Alabama says, a provision that will increase the standing army of the United States by a hundred thousand men.

Now, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] admits that these men will constitute a part of the Army of the United States, as distinguished from the militia.

Mr. FORAKER. Whenever called into the service.

Mr. MALLORY. Whenever called into the service, and they can be called into service in twenty-four hours by the President.

Mr. FORAKER. First having the authority of Congress.

Mr. MALLORY. Well——

Mr. TILLMAN. With the permission of the Senator from Florida, in furtherance of the view of the Senator from Alabama, I will call attention to the proviso on page 17, where it is provided "that the President of the United States, in time of peace, may by order fix the minimum number of enlisted men in each company, troop, battery, signal corps, engineer corps, and hospital corps." I would ask permission of the Senator from Florida, whom I dislike to interrupt, but I suppose his object is like mine, merely to elucidate this question and get all the light we can on it, to propound a question.

I want to know of the three distinguished ex-Union soldiers who have participated in this debate, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], men who volunteered when the country was in danger and risked their lives, whether they have lost faith in the patriotism of our people to volunteer whenever there is any actual need for an increase in the military establishment. They are here, impliedly, at least, giving approval to and voting to take from the volunteers the right to elect their own officers and to destroy, as it were, the State lines and the various incentives to strenuous military work and valiant service as soldiers. I want to know why it is necessary, under the guise, if that word is not too offensive, of increasing the efficiency of the militia, to destroy all future use for volunteers, and simply to increase the standing army, either by men with the flag or those in reserve whose names are on the roll and who are ready to be forced in. They will not be allowed, after the occasion arises, to show their patriotism, but they are already enlisted and officered and organized; at least if not officered they are ready to be officered by somebody sent from somewhere instead of from among themselves as we have always had it heretofore in the volunteer force.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. The inquiry was addressed to me as well as others, and if the Senator from Florida does not object I will respond to it.

Mr. MALLORY. All right, sir.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to say to the Senator from South Carolina that the rights of the States are secure under the bill, because it provides that this volunteer reserve force shall be ratably distributed among the various States. There will be a fair division, I have no doubt, if the spirit of the bill is followed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Now, one word more before the Senator interrupts me again, that I may answer the other part of his question. While I have no fear but that in time of national peril we will find men ready to respond to the nation's call, I have no doubt in my own mind that we would have been a great deal better off if in the beginning of the war with Spain we had had the names of a hundred thousand trained, disciplined men on file, as this bill proposes we shall have hereafter, in the office of the Secretary of War, to whom we could send a notice and who at the call of the President would have been under obligation to respond and who could then at once have been organized and put in the field.

Mr. TILLMAN. In other words, with the permission of the Senator from Florida, they would be regular soldiers and would be forced in, and although they might not feel willing, under the conditions under which that war had been entered into, to risk their lives, you would say to them, "Because you have belonged to the militia in the past your name is now on file here, and you are compelled to respond to this order whether you want to or not."

Mr. FORAKER. No man's name can get on the list who has not voluntarily placed it there.

Mr. TILLMAN. But he has placed it there as a member of a militia organization when he joins the State militia from motives of social intercourse and military glory and a feeling of wanting to wear brass buttons and a uniform. I have been all through that. In fact, the only office I ever held before I was governor was that of captain of militia, and I served ten years, and I therefore know something of the sentiment which influences young men to join the militia. The fact that he has joined a militia company and that his name is on file is used to coerce him into the Army as a regular, whether he wants to go or not, and under officers of whom he knows nothing.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator is mistaken in saying that this bill requires that kind of consent of everyone who becomes a member of the organized militia.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not say everyone; but how else are you going to get these names?

Mr. FORAKER. This applies not only to those who have served in the National Guard, but also to those who have served in the Regular Army and——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. It does not require anybody to put his name on the list. If a man, having that qualification of service, sees fit to make a conditional enlistment for five years more, he, of course, will be under obligation to respond without regard to the character of the war and without regard to his feeling with respect to it. But that will be no more severe on him than it is on the man who has enlisted in the Regular Army, thinking there would be no war for him to participate in except one in which his whole heart would be, and who suddenly found that a war had arisen with which he was not in sympathy.

Mr. TILLMAN. With the permission of the Senator from Florida, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio what safeguards are thrown around this enrollment. We find on page 15, line 17, these words:

> The Secretary of War is authorized to apportion among the several States and Territories and to enroll not exceeding 100,000 men, who shall have served in the Regular or Volunteer armies of the United States or in the organized militia.

Is there no coercion here?

Mr. FORAKER. Can the Secretary of War enroll anyone without his consent?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know whether this language would allow of enrollment without additional authority, but I want some light on that subject.

Mr. FORAKER. All that I can say in answer to the Senator from South Carolina is that his military service as captain of militia in South Carolina ought to enable him to learn that nobody is enrolled except in case where a draft is ordered—and that is never ordered except in times of great emergency—without his consent. It is a voluntary matter throughout. The Secretary of War will have authority to enroll the names of 100,000 men who may be willing to be enrolled, who may be willing to give that conditional obligation to serve in the event——

Mr. TILLMAN. What is the quid pro quo? What do these men get?

Mr. SPOONER. Nothing.

Mr. FORAKER. Nothing, except an opportunity to serve their country.

Mr. SPOONER. They do not get even guns.

Mr. TILLMAN. In the event they are not going to get guns, how in the name of common sense are they going to be drilled men and seasoned soldiers?

Mr. SPOONER. They are not eligible to be enrolled unless they have served. They have already been drilled.

Mr. QUARLES. They have already been drilled.

Mr. SPOONER. They are men who have served in the Regular Army; men who have served in the volunteer service in time of war; men who have served in the organized militia of the States.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then you take from these volunteers or quasi volunteers or pseudo volunteers the right to organize their companies as the real volunteers have always done and to get into the Army under officers whom they can trust.

Mr. FORAKER. They will be organized precisely as the Volunteer Army was organized that was sent to the Philippines.

Mr. TILLMAN. That army was nothing more or less than an addition to the Regular Army, officered by appointees from the War Department or appointed by the President.

Mr. FORAKER. This will be the same kind of a force. That is what the bill provides.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am glad we get that much light on it. It is not a militia, dead sure.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to ask the Senator from Florida a question in order to see if I understand this bill in regard to the hundred thousand reserve force. If I understand it, it is simply an appendix of the National Army. The hundred thousand men are kept as citizens when they are not called into service. They do not draw any pay at that time, but in the event that we go to war and more soldiers are called for then they are all ready and a part of the Regular Army and will be used as a part of the Regular Army. That is my understanding of the hundred thousand national reserve force.

Mr. MALLORY. That, I believe, is the effect of this provision. It is an appendix, as the Senator says, to the Regular Army of the United States which can be called forth and put into active service. The question how they are called forth is one upon which we may differ. Whether it will require an act of Congress to do it, under the language of the bill as it is now, or whether the President can do it without the intervention of Congress, I think is an open question to some extent, and one at least that I would not care to leave to the solution of the party interested in calling out the men.

For that reason I think that if this bill is to pass it would be very advisable for its friends to see that there is no question whatever as to the power conferred on the President in this matter; that he should not be vested with authority, either implied or otherwise, for calling out these troops without the express authority of Congress.

But, Mr. President, laying aside these questions of the details of the measure, it strikes me that it is one which ought not to be passed in its present state. It seems to me that the provision for the national volunteers should be eliminated from the bill, and if, in the judgment of the Secretary of War and a majority of Congress, it is necessary to provide a body of men, which in an emergency of foreign invasion or foreign war we could gather together summarily and put in the field as an adjunct to the Regular Army, let that be presented to the Senate in its proper shape and upon its own merits.

I do not think, Mr. President, that my constituents would sustain me in voting for this bill with that provision in it. The title I will not say is misleading, but it certainly does not convey to the average reader any impression whatever of the true object and purpose of the measure. "To promote the efficiency of the militia" is clearly understood, undoubtedly, but what is covered by "and for other purposes" is not, I think, contemplated by those who have heard this bill treated of in the press of the country. It is true——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that that is the usual title of a bill—"and for other purposes." There is no significance to that.

Mr. MALLORY. That is the point. "And for other purposes" has given rise to more litigation and more questions in the courts than almost any other subject relating to the details of the passage of bills. "And for other purposes" should at least be germane to and have some connection with the main subject of the bill. Many States have found it necessary to require that in the passage of measures through their legislatures the title shall set forth the object distinctly, and that where there is any concealment as to the object or purpose of the measure the measure itself becomes unconstitutional. That, of course, is not observed in national legislation, but when you use the term "and for other purposes" the necessary implication is that that relates to something that is at least germane to the subject.

Now, it may be said that the organization of a branch of the standing army of the United States is germane to the reorganization and promotion of the efficiency of the militia. I do not admit it. I think the two subjects are as wide apart as the poles. The framers of the Constitution have always adhered to the widest possible distinction between the militia, whether used in a generic or a specific sense, and the Army.

Therefore, Mr. President, if this measure is to pass, and I will admit that, so far as the provisions relating to the improvement of the militia are concerned, it meets my most hearty approval and I would be very glad to vote for it—if it is to pass and if the beneficent purpose or the good purpose which is designed by those provisions relating to the militia is to be secured, let us eliminate from it, as the Senator from Alabama proposes by his amendment, all the matter relating to an addition to the standing army of the United States. If we do that, we shall then have a compact militia bill which I think will be acceptable to every Senator upon this floor. Certainly I would have no difficulty in voting for it; in fact, I would with a great deal of pleasure vote for it. But in the shape in which it is, with this new and untried experiment put into it, while making no reflection upon those who had the drafting of it or who are fathering it here in this body, it seems to me it would be a great deal better to let that provision, which I think is entirely foreign to the purpose of the organization of the militia, go out and bring it into the Senate if necessary on its own merits as a separate measure.

Mr. President, I have endeavored somewhat feebly, and certainly very disconnectedly, to voice some of the reasons why I think the measure ought not to pass in its present shape. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama, striking out the twenty-fourth section, prevails, I think it would be a great improvement; but I think the twenty-third section ought also to go out and that one or two minor amendments should be made. If that amendment does not prevail, I propose to offer the amendment which I have read to the Senate, and I should like very much to see it adopted. I would not, however, vote for the measure, even if the amendment were adopted, with the balance of the twenty-fourth section remaining in the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. Before the Senator from Florida takes his seat, I should like to ask him one question, in order that I may know whether I thoroughly understand his closing remarks. The question I would ask him is whether his objection to this measure is simply that it is a part of the bill that he thinks is not germane to the general subject, or whether he would oppose this measure if it were on some other bill?

Mr. MALLORY. I would oppose it undoubtedly. I would oppose it, I think, unless it were modified very much in some of its features. I refer to that portion relating to the special volunteer reserve.

Mr. FORAKER. That is what I supposed until the closing remarks of the Senator, which led me to think that perhaps I had misunderstood him. In other words, the objection of the Senator is primarily to providing by Congress for a volunteer reserve force that can be called out in an emergency, after Congress has taken action authorizing the President to make such a call; for whether the bill as it is now before the Senate makes that specific or not, it will be made specific, because no one has any thought of giving to the President the power to call 100,000 men into service and organize them and put the country to an expense to support them unless Congress hereafter takes action specifically authorizing it.

Mr. MALLORY. In answer to the Senator's query, if he will permit me, I will say that I will oppose the provisions of the twenty-third and twenty-fourth sections as they now stand. I am not opposed in the abstract to the provision for a national volunteer reserve—not a National Guard, but a national volunteer reserve. I am not opposed to such an organization, in fact, as is here indicated. But I would have to see that it was surrounded with ample safeguards, which in my judgment are necessary, and that there should be in it some provision whereby it should not overslaugh and throw into the shade and into the background the militia of the States, which I think ought to be cultivated and encouraged much more than the reserve force which is proposed by the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I asked the Senator from Florida the question not only that I might understand him, but that I might bring before the Senate distinctly the fact that the opposition to this measure is an opposition to the organization of a reserve force such as is here provided for the Army of the United States.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me?

Mr. MALLORY. I hope the Senator from Ohio will not put into my mouth something I did not say. I say that I oppose this particular provision now.

Mr. FORAKER. So I understand.

Mr. MALLORY. I am not, I said distinctly, opposed to the organization of a national volunteer reserve. I have said that and I think I have said it sufficiently distinct to prevent any misapprehension. But I can not go into a discussion of the various views that I think would control me in making qualifications as to the provisions of the bill. I do not think that the national volunteer reserve ought to be made a more important military factor than the militia of the States.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator from Florida will not think that I was by my inquiry putting into his mouth anything he had not said.

Mr. MALLORY. Not at all.

Mr. FORAKER. I was undertaking to state his position as I understood it. He is opposed to providing for a national volunteer reserve force in the manner provided for in this bill. He is willing to provide for one in some other manner. I do not know what that manner is. What I wanted to say in answer to that suggestion—and then I will yield to the Senator from Georgia—is that I do not know how any more harmless step could be taken than the one here provided for—one that can not possibly, as it seems to me, be attended with any danger to the public welfare or give any uneasiness to any man who thoroughly understands the provisions of the bill upon the theory that we are unduly increasing the Army. If some Senator would indicate how we can have the militia force which, it seems to me, we ought as one mind to agree upon the propriety of having, I will be glad to have the benefit of his suggestion. I do not think any Senator who belongs to the committee is so committed to the specific provisions of this measure in this respect that he would not be glad to have the benefit of suggestions from other Senators.

Mr. BACON. Now, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the question propounded by the Senator from Ohio is one the reply to which might be misconstrued. I desire to say for myself, as the Senator referred not only to the Senator from Florida, but to other Senators occupying a similar position, that I am not opposed to the proposition of a reserve force, and a reserve force of experienced men, if you please. But if it is to be constituted of the citizen soldiery, my contention is that that citizen soldiery is essentially that which the Constitution contemplates when it makes provision for the organization of the militia, and that that reserve should be organized in conformity with the requirements of the Constitution and should constitute a part, legitimately, of the militia.

Now, I am perfectly willing to join hands with the Senator from Ohio and with other Senators in the effort to provide a reserve force which shall constitute a part of the militia. This does not constitute a part of the militia according to the avowed confession of Senators.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, I think I can suggest to the Senator from Ohio that it is entirely practicable to organize a reserve force which shall be composed of the experienced men, as specified in the bill, and which shall still constitute a part of the militia, officered by the State, as required by the Constitution. Now——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me there? He overlooks this fact. The State itself determines to what extent it will have an organized militia.

Mr. BACON. No——

Mr. FORAKER. Now we provide for the utilization of all the organized militia that the several States may see fit to organize; and then, in addition to that, we provide that they shall have a national volunteer reserve force.

Mr. BACON. The Senator interrupted me before I had finished.

Mr. FORAKER. I beg pardon.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator is mistaken in that suggestion, and I was coming to that very point. Under the provision in the Constitution which permits the General Government to provide for organizing the militia, and that exact word is used, I think it is competent for the General Government to prescribe that there shall be a certain number of militia enrolled in each State in proportion to the population thereof, and I believe it is perfectly competent to draft a bill which would be constitutional which should prescribe the number of militia to be organized in each State. Does the Senator doubt that proposition, when the Constitution prescribes——

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him? This very bill provides that the militia, in order to get the benefits of the measure, shall consist of 100 men for each member of the House and Senate in Congress. At least——

Mr. BACON. If that proposition is correct, where is the difficulty? And, in the absence of difficulty, where is the need for departing from the time-honored recognition of the militia as a part of the militia to be organized by the State in accordance with the provision of the Constitution?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Florida, before he leaves the Chamber, as I see he is about to leave, to the condition of the bill with reference to his amendment. He offers an amendment to section 24. I understood the Chair to rule on this same section and bill, on another day, that an amendment to perfect the section is first in order before an amendment to strike out. Therefore I wanted to ask the Senator from Florida if he has offered his amendment so that it may be acted upon before a vote is taken on the motion to strike out the whole section.

I also wish to ask him another question with reference to it. One of his objections to section 24 seems to be that the President could call out this force without any action of Congress hereafter. I observe that his amendment does not cover that point. If I understand it correctly it leaves that in the position it is in now, and under his understanding it would leave it so that the President could call this force out at any time, provided there was war imminent, or existing, without reference to Congress, and the assumption is that he could thus take from Congress the power to provide what use should be made of it. I wanted to ask if that is the manner in which he wishes his amendment to go in.

Mr. MALLORY. Yes; I did not propose to make any other change than to authorize the President in case war was imminent, or in case of actual war, without any further intervention of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. MALLORY. As I said, Mr. President, I would not vote for the bill if this amendment were adopted with the twenty-fourth section as it is now.

Mr. WARREN. The hour is near when I suppose other business will displace this bill, and while on my feet I want to give notice that I will ask to have the pending bill taken up to-morrow morning in the morning hour, immediately after the routine business. I ask the Senator if he will have his amendment before us as he desires at that time. Will he prepare the amendment so as to offer it to-morrow?

Mr. MALLORY. I will offer it some time to-day.

Mr. BACON. I call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the fact that notice has already been given, I understand, for the consideration to-morrow of the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], which went over to-day by agreement.

Mr. WARREN. That would be in the nature of morning business, and I presume this bill would follow it.

Mr. BACON. That would have first consideration, of course. If the Senator has that in contemplation, that is different.

Mr. WARREN. This bill would follow the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island upon the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before the hour of 2 o'clock arrives, I wish to give notice that after the pending amendment is disposed of I shall offer the following amendment as a proviso to section 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. MALLORY subsequently said: I wish to offer the amendment I promised to offer to House bill 15345, to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes. I ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. QUARLES in the chair). The amendment will be printed.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Deboe,	Harris,	Quarles,
Bacon,	Depew,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,
Bate,	Dietrich,	Kean,	Scott,
Berry,	Dillingham,	Kittredge,	Simmons,
Beveridge,	Dryden,	McEnery,	Spooner,
Blackburn,	Dubois,	McLaurin, Miss.	Taliaferro,
Burrows,	Fairbanks,	Martin,	Tillman,
Carmack,	Foraker,	Mitchell,	Turner,
Clark, Wyo.	Foster, Wash.	Morgan,	Warren,
Clay,	Frye,	Nelson,	Wellington,
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Perkins,	Wetmore.
Culberson,	Hale,	Pettus,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Platt, N. Y.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. My colleague [Mr. MONEY] is unavoidably absent on account of sickness.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say on the part of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] that he was suddenly called from the city on account of the death of a member of his family and that he is unavoidably absent.

Mr. QUAY. I wish to state in behalf of my colleague, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], that owing to circumstances beyond his control he is temporarily absent. He may be here this afternoon to attend the session, but he is not at present in the city.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. PRITCHARD] is ill and unable to be in the Senate.

Mr. DUBOIS. I wish to announce once and for all that my colleague [Mr. HEITFELD] is at home in Idaho, detained through sickness in his family, and that he is unavoidably absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty Senators have responded to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. With the permission of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who, I believe, has the floor at this time, I send to the desk and ask to have read the following telegram, and I request that it may be incorporated in the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota, which are very comprehensive on this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks that the telegram may be read and that it may be made a part of the speech of the Senator from Minnesota. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read them.

The Secretary read as follows:

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., January 6, 1903.

Senator ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At a nonpartisan interterritorial statehood convention held in this city today, participated in by 2,000 delegates, representing practically every incorporated town and many hamlets in the Indian Territory and 20 of the 26 counties of Oklahoma, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"We, the people of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, assembled in delegate convention for the purpose of giving organized expression to our desire for statehood, again declare to the Congress that we favor the creation of one State out of the area now embraced within both these Territories, and we most emphatically indorse the simple statehood provisions of the Senate bill known as the Nelson bill. This bill is in conformity to the views we expressed in our single statehood convention held at South McAlester in December, 1900, and the convention held at Muskogee in November, 1901, and the convention held at Claremore in December, 1902. All those conventions, as well as this one, were and are representative of the business interests of both Territories, and were and are the organized expression of the desire of the people of both Territories for immediate single statehood upon terms of justice and equality to the people of both Territories. We indorse the platforms adopted by those earlier conventions, and we now quote with our approval the following extract from the resolutions adopted by the Claremore convention:

"'We, the people of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, in convention assembled, confident that organic union is our manifest destiny, again proclaim to the Congress that we favor the creation of a single State out of the area now embraced within both these Territories, and we offer the following reasons in support of our position:

"'First. Oklahoma's area is 39,000 square miles; that of the Indian Territory only 31,000 square miles. The average area of the States and Territories west of the Mississippi is more than 100,000 square miles, while that of Texas, our next-door neighbor, is 265,000. Our combined area will make a State less than 70 per cent of the size of the average Western State, while taken separately we will be the two Rhode Islands of the West.

"'Second. The resources of the two Territories complement each other. Oklahoma is almost wholly agricultural, while the Indian Territory is richly endowed with mineral wealth, and the combination will make a State unsurpassed in variety and abundance of natural resources.

"'Third. Single statehood insures larger taxable values and consequently lower taxation.

"'Fourth. Single statehood eliminates a crooked, wandering, and fantastic boundary line which now divides the two Territories.

"'Fifth. Single statehood confirms and cements a social fellowship already established by inter-Territorial organizations of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Episcopal Church, the Presbyterian Church, the Catholic Church, the Federation of Women's Clubs, and the Masonic and other fraternities.

"'Sixth. Single statehood confirms and cements a business fellowship already established by inter-Territorial organizations of the cotton-seed oil manufacturers, the lumber dealers, the ice manufacturers, the grain dealers, the flour manufacturers, and other business organizations.

"'Seventh. Single statehood, finally, insures a State which will quickly take high rank in this Union, and which we can bequeath to our posterity with pride and satisfaction.'

"We are opposed to the passage of either the omnibus or the Moon bill, because their enactment into law means either double statehood or single statehood long deferred, and accomplished, if at all, by the attachment process. We oppose the attachment process because it is not necessary for the Territories, being ready for immediate statehood; because it is unfair to the Indian Territory to deprive its people of all participation in the constitutional convention and the framing of the laws and from a voice in the location of our public institutions. We oppose the attachment process for the further reason that its effect will tend to create a sectional line of cleavage in the State which might not be obliterated for generations.

"We think we are entitled to immediate statehood—

"First. Because it is a right guaranteed us by the treaty with France at the time of the Louisiana purchase.

"Second. Because it is a right that Congress ought not to deny to a million free and intelligent citizens.

"Third. Because both Territories are ready for statehood.

"Fourth. Because Congress has the legal right to grant statehood not only to Oklahoma but also to the Indian Territory. (Thomas v. Gay, 169 U. S., 264.)

"Fifth. Because both Territories have the necessary population, each having about 500,000, 90 per cent of whom are American citizens.

"Sixth. Because both Territories have the soil, resources, and climate to sustain this population and insure large and steady increase.

"Seventh. Because both have sufficient taxable property to support a State government without excessive taxation.

"Eighth. Because the work of the Dawes Commission has been so nearly completed as to no longer interfere with immediate statehood. That Commission has concluded treaties with all of the Indian tribes, providing for the allotment in severalty of their lands, and authorizing the sale of all except the homestead. These allotments will probably be completed by the time a State government can be organized. The lands of the Creek and Seminole nations have all been allotted.

"In the Cherokee, Choctaw, and Chickasaw nations the lands have all been surveyed and classified, and the work of allotment is now simply clerical and should be completed within twelve months. The mineral and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations are to be sold by the Secretary of the Interior, and as soon as sold will of course be taxable. It therefore is beyond controversy that the work of the Dawes Commission no longer interferes with statehood, and that there is abundance of taxable property.

"Ninth. Congress can reserve such power over Indian affairs as it desires, and statehood will in no way interfere with the free action of the Interior Department in carrying out all the treaties between the Government and the several tribes. In this opinion we are supported by a recent holding of Judge Hosea Townsend, of the southern district of the Indian Territory.

"We urge upon the attention of Congress the fact that it is not a question as to whether these two Territories shall be united, but whether they shall be divided. Thousands upon thousands of our citizens have moved into both Territories, relying upon past legislation and the future wisdom of Congress as insuring no division of those two Territories upon the arrival of ultimate statehood.

"Section 1 of the act of May 2, 1890, 26 Statutes at Large, 81, known as the organic act, creating Oklahoma Territory, contains the following provision:

"'Any other lands within the Indian Territory, not embraced within these boundaries, shall hereafter become a part of the Territory of Oklahoma whenever the Indian nation or tribe owning such lands shall signify to the President of the United States, in legal manner, its assent that such lands shall so become a part of said Territory of Oklahoma, and the President shall thereupon make proclamation to that effect.'

"Oklahoma as it exists to-day is the aggregate of various purchases from the several Indian tribes which have been opened to settlement at intervals, running from the 22d day of April, 1889, to the 1st day of August, 1901, and in view of the legislation quoted and the history of the organization of Oklahoma, it has been our well grounded belief that the Congress would never divide the people of these two Territories or undertake to create two States within their borders. We now feel that the passage of the Nelson bill is but a fulfillment of the original promise arising out of the history of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, and that it is but a simple act of justice to the 1,000,000 citizens now living within our borders.

"The creation of two States out of our Territory and the passage of the omnibus bill with the subsequent attachment to Oklahoma of the Indian Territory are two calamities viewed with equal abhorrence by the fair-minded non-partisan business interests of both Territories. To pass the omnibus bill, thus giving to one-half of our common territory the right to frame the organic law and organize the State government and locate all public institutions, and then to attach the other half of our common territory with equal population, equal taxable wealth, and equal resources, is an act of such gross and palpable injustice to that half of the people so to be attached that we can not believe the statesmanship of the United States Senate will ever consent to its perpetration.

"We declare to the Congress that this question of statehood is one affecting our future destiny as a part of the great American Union, and we appeal to the members of that body and to the President of the United States to consider the case upon its merits, and disengage it from all entangling alliances, so that justice may be administered to a million people whose future wealth and standing as an American Commonwealth is of infinitely more importance than temporary party advantage or any unwise sectional gain resulting from an increased number of United States Senators.

"Finally, we affirm as our deliberate and final declaration, that so far as the interests of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory are affected by the omnibus bill, we are unalterably opposed to its provisions, and we prefer absolutely no statehood legislation to the passage of that bill.

"By act of Congress passed more than two years ago all the Indians in the Indian Territory are made citizens of the United States, and thus their competency for the burdens and duties of statehood, in common with the other inhabitants in that Territory, has been settled.

"We express our entire confidence in the good faith of Senators BEVERIDGE, NELSON, and others in their efforts to secure statehood for the two Territories, on terms of absolute equality, at the earliest possible moment, and denounce as a subterfuge the charge that their efforts in urging single statehood is to prevent all statehood legislation in the present Congress."

JESSE J. DUNN, Secretary,
GIDEON MORGAN, Chairman.

JANUARY 7, 1903, 4.05 A. M.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Minnesota, I will state that I have presented this telegram to the Senate at this time because it is the final result, as we are informed in the telegram itself, of one of the most remarkable conventions, perhaps, that has ever been held in the Southwest, and I dare say throughout the entire country; and because it appears to me and to the other members of the committee that when the inhabitants of a Territory seeking admission as a State are sufficient both in number and in quality to entitle them to statehood their desires as to the method of the bestowal of statehood should be considered by the body which has to pass upon it.

Mr. QUAY. I know very little about the proceedings of the convention to which the Senator alludes; but I desire to ask him for information whether or not the action of that convention was unanimous?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will find out by an examination of the paper.

Mr. QUAY. I think it is stated in the paper.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let us see. It says:

At a nonpartisan interterritorial statehood convention held in this city to-day, participated in by 2,000 delegates representing practically every incorporated town and many hamlets in the Indian Territory and 20 of the 26 counties of Oklahoma, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Mr. QUAY. That is the point at which I wanted to arrive.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, you have arrived.

Mr. QUAY. I further desire to ask the Senator from Indiana whether this convention was a convention of inhabitants of the Territory or only of those inhabitants of the Territory who are favorable to what is known as the Nelson bill? The Nelson bill, to which these resolutions refer, is in a very nebulous condition. We had it here in one shape, but it was withdrawn, and it is not now in any shape before this body, but is to come here in a revised, amended, reformed, and improved condition, as I understand. So that it seems to me the convention of the friends of the Nelson bill were acting very unintelligently in passing these indiscriminate resolutions.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not surprised that the Senator from Pennsylvania thinks that convention of 2,000 delegates has not acted intelligently. They have not acted intelligently in that they have not acted in accordance with the Senator's views.

Mr. QUAY. No; but they had no bill to act upon.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, concerning the nebulous state of the bill, the Senator knows that that adjective is hardly justified by the conditions and facts. The committee reported that substitute to the Senate and afterwards withdrew that substitute for further correction, with the statement at the time that at some future period it would be reintroduced. The Senator, therefore, has notice that that substitute in its essential provisions is now before the Senate for discussion, and so far as the resolutions of this convention are concerned, that action, to which I do not blame the Senator from Pennsylvania for taking exception, was taken upon the committee's substitute in its essential provision, which is the union of the Territory of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory.

The matter of the machinery of the bill, as to how the State is to be admitted, as to how the delegates to a constitutional convention are to be selected, are matters of legislative detail; but the great central and fundamental question is whether or not one great homogeneous State, similar in size and population to other great Western States, shall be admitted, or whether, for purposes which we have yet to hear explained, two grotesque and bizarre and indescribable geographical communities shall be selected instead. The great question of single statehood or double statehood was before this convention and is now, for all the purposes of discussion, before the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I do not want to precipitate a discussion which will drive my friend from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] off the floor, to his utter disgust I have no doubt.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think the Senator from Minnesota can speak as to his own disgust.

Mr. QUAY. I am not claiming to speak for him, and I am not disgusted, and the Senator could not disgust me if he tried, but the point at which I wish to arrive, and to which I desire to direct the attention of the Senate, is that this convention was not a convention of inhabitants of Oklahoma called indiscriminately together to pass directly upon the right of these two Territories to be admitted at the present time, or as to whether it is proper that they should be admitted separately or in combination. It was a convention of friends of the proposition of the Committee on Territories, and, of course, their action was unanimous, but their action does not represent the people of Oklahoma.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator, of course, speaks from his inference and not from his information, or has the Senator private information?

Mr. QUAY. I have no private information, but it is patent upon the face of it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think it is patent on the face of it. As to the inference, therefore, one Senator can draw inferences as well as another. The telegram itself leaves it not open to inference, because it says—and I call the attention of the Senator to it:

At a nonpartisan interterritorial statehood convention held in this city to-day, participated in by 2,000 delegates.

And so forth.

Now, the Senator infers that these were the friends of the committee's bill. Of course the inference is perfectly proper, because it says these 2,000 delegates, representing the people of both Territories, unanimously adopted these resolutions. Therefore, of course, the inference could only be—it is not an inference, as the Senator says, but it is patent on the face of it—that they were friends of this bill.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator permit me a word there?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. Since I replied to the Senator I have received some information on that question. The fact is that in the calling of that convention, whose proceedings the Senator has just had read at the desk, no one who was opposed to the Nelson bill was eligible to membership in it. That information I have just received.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I am not surprised at that. I am not surprised that the people of these two Territories, the vast majority of whom are in favor of the Nelson bill, should call a convention to express their views to the Senate of the United States, as it is their right as American citizens to do. I suppose the Senator would not suppress the constitutional right of citizens to assemble and petition Congress; and, if not, I do not see the particular point or the weight of his objection, although I do not blame him for objecting.

I did not expect, Mr. President, to utter more than three or four sentences when I rose——

Mr. QUAY. I do not wish to induce the Senator to continue his remarks. I give notice of that. I desire to reach a vote on this bill; but what I objected to was a masquerading of this convention as a representative convention of the people of Oklahoma, when it was a convention of the advocates of the Nelson bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator, of course, we all concede, has the right to indulge in any one of the great arsenal of adjectives at his command, among which is "masquerading," which is an adjective in the form of a verb at least, but I do not think that that changes the fact.

I introduced this paper and asked to have it read and made a part of the very comprehensive statement of the Senator from Minnesota. There was no "masquerading" in that, save as this itself constitutes a masquerade, and the only "masquerading" that has been introduced into the debate has been introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania himself.

As I said, I did not intend to make remarks extending over more than four or five sentences, merely calling attention to the fact, as I was saying when the Senator interrupted me, that when the inhabitants of a Territory are sufficient in number and quality to confessedly entitle them to admission into the Union, it is proper and right that they should give voice to their views as to how they should be admitted, and that that voice should be considered by the body which is to pass upon the question.

Since the Senator has called attention to and attempted to minimize the effect of the proceedings of this convention, I will state that it is no surprise to a majority of the committee that such a convention was held and that these proceedings were the fruit of it, because it merely confirms what was the opinion and observation, I dare say, of every member of the subcommittee who visited those Territories, who talked with those people, and who heard the witnesses. We did not refuse to hear anyone down there who applied to be heard.

Mr. President, if that is true, if four men representing both sides of this Chamber are not mistaken in their views as to what the people there desire, if this itself is of any weight, then we have before us the expression of the people themselves in favor of the substitute proposed by the committee. Nor is it unnatural that those people should have this view. They have expressed not only their views, but their reasons for those views, which appear to me to be absolutely unanswerable; and because not only of the expression of the views themselves, but of the reasons for them, I am not surprised that a vast majority of the people of both of those Territories are in accord with the expression finally arrived at.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]——

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, as telegrams are being presented, I hold in my hand the proceedings of persons very deeply interested in this matter. I have heard nothing in that which has been read regarding the rights of the Indians. The proposition is to absorb the Indian Territory along with Oklahoma. Here are the proceedings of the representatives of the Indian tribes themselves, which refer to questions pertinent to their rights. I present them, and believe they should have weight, as they refer to the rights of the Indians in that Territory. I need not go back to history to show that the land there belongs to them absolutely; that their rights ought to be respected, and their views listened to in this matter. Here are their proceedings in regard to the subject which is directly before the Senate. As the paper is very short, I ask that it be read, so that it may be placed in the RECORD along with these other communications.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

PROCEEDINGS OF THE EUFAULA CONVENTION, NOVEMBER 28, 1902.

Pursuant to a call of the Hon. Green McCurtain, principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, there assembled at Eufaula, in the Creek Nation, Indian Territory, November 28, 1902, delegates from three of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, for the purpose of formally expressing to Congress the views of the Indians on statehood for the Indian Territory. These delegates were appointed by the principal chief of the several tribes under the authority of resolutions by their respective councils. The delegates were:

Creek Nation.—Hon. P. Porter, principal chief of the Creek Nation, Muskogee, Ind. T.; Cheesie McIntosh, Checotah, Ind. T.; Rolley McIntosh, Fame, Ind. T.; John R. Goate, Holdenville, Ind. T.; Alex A. Davis, Okmulgee, Ind. T.; A. P. McKellop, Muskogee, Ind. T.

Cherokee Nation.—Wash Swimmer, Tahlequah, Ind. T.: A. L. Lacie, Baptist, Ind. T.; L. B. Bell, Vinita, Ind. T.; J. G. Schrimser, Claremore, Ind. T.; George Sanders, Rose, Ind. T.

Choctaw Nation.—H. P. Ward, Kiowa, Ind. T.; L. C. Le Flore, Caddo, Ind. T.; Hampton Tucker, South McAlester, Ind. T.; Henry Ansley, McAlester, Ind. T.

Hon. Pleasant Porter was made permanent chairman and Henry Ansley permanent secretary.

A committee on resolutions was appointed, consisting of L. B. Bell, Cheesie McIntosh, and Hampton Tucker.

The committee reported the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas the Five Civilized Tribes of the Indian Territory have, by agreements made and entered into with the United States, provided for the dissolution of their tribal governments; and

Whereas the changed conditions brought about by such agreements require a complete revolution in our land tenure and new laws and usages unknown to the Indians composing the Five Tribes of the Indian Territory, which conditions will require time for the Indians to adapt themselves to the changed order of things; and

Whereas these changes were apparent to the contracting parties at the time of the making of said agreements, which is evidenced by the fact that a separate political organization was provided for the Indian Territory, and the period for the dissolution of said tribal governments was fixed at March 4, 1906; and

Whereas citizens of the United States, and not Indians, now residents in and upon the lands of the Five Tribes, are making by petition and lobby influence efforts to induce the Congress of the United States to ignore the spirit and letter of these agreements by placing the Indian Territory under the laws of Oklahoma Territory; failing in that, to organize a United States Territory out of the present judicial organization known as the Indian Territory, either of which propositions would delay the work of the Government as now organized and satisfactorily proceeding under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the fulfillment of the agreements referred to: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, By the duly authorized representatives of the Five Civilized Tribes, in convention assembled, at Eufaula, Creek Nation, Ind. T., November 28, 1902:

We affirm our confidence in the purpose of the United States Government to faithfully discharge the obligations it has assumed in its treaties with the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory.

We are opposed to and protest against any legislation by Congress that contemplates the annexation of the Indian Territory, or any part thereof, to the Territory of Oklahoma, or to any State; and we insist upon our tribal governments continuing intact and our tribal conditions remaining unchanged until March 4, 1906, at which time, should Congress deem it wise to change the present form of government in the Indian Territory, we ask that a State be formed out of the territory composing Indian Territory without the preliminary steps of a Territorial form of government.

The authority and supervision of the Department of the Interior over Indian affairs in the Indian Territory and the duties imposed on the Dawes Commission by such authority in the distribution of the lands belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes are sufficient for the present demands of government, and satisfactory to the owners of the soil.

It is incumbent upon us as self-governing people to propose a State form of government for the country owned by us and take part in the establishment of the same, to take effect at the dissolution of our tribal governments in 1906.

We most earnestly protest against the misrepresentations found in the petitions presented by people assembling in conventions at different places in the Indian Territory, purporting to represent the wishes of the people of the Indian Territory, firmly believing, as we do, that they represent no part of the Indian population and a very small part of the white people of the Indian Territory, in so far as they represent the people of the Indian Territory as asking for a Territorial form of government or statehood jointly with Oklahoma.

On account of sickness and high water, the representatives of the Chickasaw Nation did not attend. This nation, however, is thoroughly in accord with the purposes of the convention, as evidenced by a resolution passed by its council authorizing the appointment of delegates and by a letter from the Hon. Palmer S. Mosely, governor of the Chickasaw Nation, appearing in this pamphlet.

The Hon. Green McCurtain was unable to attend, but commends the action of the convention in a letter published herein.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, CHOCTAW NATION,
Kinta, Ind. T., December 5, 1902.

Mr. HENRY ANSLEY,
Secretary Five Tribes Convention at Eufaula, Ind. T.,
McAlester, Ind. T.

SIR: I am just in receipt of the resolutions adopted by the convention held by the Indians of the Five Tribes at Eufaula on November 28, 1902. I am convinced that these resolutions express the sentiment of the real Indians throughout the Indian Territory, and I feel sure they will meet the hearty approval of the better element of the law-abiding noncitizens who dwell among us. For these reasons I heartily indorse the action of the convention, and believe its work will go a great way toward convincing Congress as to the wishes of the great mass of people who reside within the confines of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Yours, truly,

GREEN MCCURTAIN,
Principal Chief Choctaw Nation.

Resolutions were adopted authorizing the secretary to publish the proceedings and resolutions in pamphlet form, mail to the President, Secretary of the Interior, heads of the Indian Department, Senators, Members of Congress, and chiefs of the Five Civilized Tribes.

HENRY ANSLEY, Secretary.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, CHICKASAW NATION,
Wapanucka, Ind. T., December 5, 1902.

Hon. HENRY ANSLEY,
Secretary of the Five Tribes Convention, McAlester, Ind. T.

DEAR SIR: I have received a copy of the resolutions adopted by the convention held at Eufaula, Ind. T., on November 28, 1902, on behalf of the Five Civilized Tribes, and the purpose of this letter is to state that the same meet my approval.

I regret my inability to meet with the convention at the time and place and for the purposes stated.

Very respectfully,

PALMER S. MOSELY,
Governor Chickasaw Nation.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I desire further to say that that represents 70,000 persons, native Americans, if you please—Indians; my recollection being that there were 70,000 as shown by the last census.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, the last statement of the Senator from Tennessee enlightens me in part upon a question I had intended to ask him; which was, whether or not these resolutions purport to represent all the Indians in the Indian Territory? He says they do not purport to represent more than 70,000. There are 87,000 Indians in the Indian Territory; and, therefore, confessedly, they do not assume even to represent 17,000 of them.

Mr. BATE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BATE. I simply stated what I supposed to be the number of Indians there. I thought it was 70,000.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Eighty-seven thousand.

Mr. BATE. I stand corrected. I did not know the exact number. I thought it was 70,000, and so stated from my recollection.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Probably the Senator is right.

Mr. BATE. In relation to what the Senator says, of course I do not say that this represents all the Indians; but it comes from people who do represent those tribes and speak for them. That is all I can say about it. I do not know how they were authorized to speak for the Indians; but the paper shows who they are, and we all understand that the government of the Indians is carried on through their tribal relations. I do not know where the 2,000 delegates to the other convention came from. I do not know whether they were squawmen, or who they were, or anything about them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Upon that point, Mr. President, I think the dispatches in the papers state—I am not sure about that, although the papers themselves will show—that many, or at least some, of the delegates in the interterritorial statehood convention at Oklahoma City, whose resolutions have just been presented to the Senate, were Indians. I wish to say that I think it very fortunate that at this particular period of the discussion the Senator from Tennessee has called attention to an important fact, and that fact is that at most there are only 87,000 Indians in the Indian Territory. The Senator's recollection is that there are 70,000.

Mr. BATE. Seventy thousand.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. My recollection is there are 87,000. Nevertheless, the attention of the Senate is now brought to the fact that out of a population which certainly is 400,000 by this time—and it is, in the opinion of the committee, many more, perhaps 500,000—that out of a population of that vast number, 87,000 at most are Indians and the rest of them, over 300,000, to put it at the lowest possible figure, are not Indians, but are American citizens, of our own color, immigrants to that Territory from other States. I say, Mr. President, it is fortunate that the Senator from Tennessee has called attention to this point at the present time, because there has been an assumption, largely growing out of the fact of the name of the Territory—the Indian Territory—that most of the people there were Indians.

I have even seen an editorial in a paper of usually the most excellent information and of very high standing in the principal city of the State of the Senator from Pennsylvania which, while not approving of the omnibus bill, nevertheless disapproved the committee's substitute upon the stated ground that here were three or four hundred thousand Indians whom this committee ridiculously proposed to admit to statehood in this Union. I say, therefore, it is quite fortunate that the Senator from Tennessee has called attention to the fact that out of this great population only a small fraction are Indians, and therefore the objection that we are proposing to admit a great horde of Indians to citizenship—uncivilized people, as I have heard them called around the Senate Chamber—is answered.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Is it a fact, then, that the white population of the Indian Territory is larger in numbers than the entire population of New Mexico and Arizona?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, sir; and not only so, but very considerably so, Mr. President. By the census the population——

Mr. NELSON. It is twice as large as the white population of Arizona and New Mexico.

Mr. HALE. Twice as large?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. There are probably half a million people there, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly. I am speaking on the Senator's time.

Mr. NELSON. I have no doubt that to-day there are half a million people in the Indian Territory, and not exceeding 87,000 or 88,000 of them are members of Indian nations, and even of those who are members of the Five Nations only a small proportion are Indians. A very small part are pure Indians and a very large portion of them are practically white men. Besides, there are quite a number of colored people, freedmen who were formerly slaves, who have been elected a part of that membership. So, referring to the Indians in the Indian Territory and estimating them at 87,000 or 88,000, you must bear in mind that that includes the members of nations enrolled as such. They are composed as follows: A small fraction are full-blooded Indians, another portion are mixed bloods, and a large share of them are white people who are members of the tribe simply by marriage or adoption.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As white as you and I.

Mr. NELSON. As pure white blood as we are.

Then, in connection with that, there are a number of negroes, called freedmen, former slaves, and their descendants. I believe that to-day the statistics of the census will show that in Oklahoma there are 30,000 Indians and colored people, and I believe that it is the limit if you boil it down to that basis, of colored people and Indians in the Indian Territory.

Mr. HALE. So my inquiry has not merely developed the fact that the white population in the Indian Territory is not only larger than the whole population of New Mexico and Arizona, but twice as large?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I think I shall challenge that assertion. The population of Arizona in 1900 was about 122,000; about 123,000. The population of New Mexico was 195,000, amounting to 317,000 in the two Territories.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. QUAY. The Senator does not in his calculation consider native Mexicans as white men.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is no ground for such an assumption.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania, who was not here, that the census report for 1900 shows that there were 26,000 Indians in Arizona not taxable, and therefore not entitled under the Constitution to representation in Congress. The statistics from the Indian Bureau, in connection with the statistics of the census, show that there are at least 10,000 Indians in New Mexico outside of the so-called Pueblo Indians, of which there are between eight and nine thousand.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator does not take into account the very large number of half-breeds in both Territories. The Senator speaks of the pure-blood Indians in Arizona and in New Mexico, and if they be deducted from the population of those Territories, I think the Senator from Pennsylvania will find that the Senator from Minnesota is accurate when he says that the white population of the Indian Territory is double the white population of New Mexico and Arizona combined.

Mr. HALE. And this white population in Oklahoma is just as pure and clean a white population as exists in Indiana or Pennsylvania or Maine.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is indeed.

Mr. HALE. It is not mixed at all.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not only that, but here is a point. Much has been made out of it, and I have seen it in the public press time and again, and therefore it can not be too well or repeatedly stated, that out of the vast population of Indian Territory, which, according to the census, approaches 400,000, and which on account of the enormous immigration since that time, the subcommittee are convinced, reaches perhaps the point of a half million, only a very small number, to wit, 87,000 at most, are classed as Indians, and of those who are classed as Indians a very large number are pure white men, so far as blood is concerned, quite as white as we are, and that of the rest only a few, comparatively speaking—a large number, many thousands—but only a few, comparatively speaking, are full-blood Indians.

Mr. QUARLES. About 10 per cent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. About 10 per cent, I am informed by the Senator from Wisconsin, who is an expert upon Indian affairs, being one of the most active members of the Indian Committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. While I am not going to controvert or contradict in the slightest degree the statement just made, it occurs to me to picture a rather strange condition, and if the Senator has any explanation I shall be glad to have it as to how white men as pure blooded as he or I have gotten the right to all that Indian land, and how it is that the 87,000 Indians, so called, are nearly all white people. Some stealing has been done somewhere, or something, and I should like to know how it happened. I know a bleaching process is going on over there; but still that does not make them as pure white men as he and I, because I do not think either of us could be suspected of having anything else but Caucasian blood in our veins.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is always comforting to have the Senator from South Carolina around, because when any stealing is going on at any place he will detect it. That is a mighty good trait.

Seriously, I will say in answer to the Senator from South Carolina, that if he means to inquire how it happens that so many white people are members of Indian tribes——

Mr. SPOONER. Have suddenly become Indians.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is what I am asking.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How so many have suddenly become Indians, to use the picturesque and accurate language of the Senator from Wisconsin, I will say that it is by marriage and adoption. They went down there some years ago, and they have been there since. The junior Senator from Wisconsin can inform the Senator upon that subject much more fully than I can, and so can the Senator from Minnesota, who has made it a special study. It is by marriage and adoption into the tribes. That explains how so large a number of white men are counted as Indians.

Mr. SPOONER. They are Indians by marriage.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. They are Indians by marriage. It also explains the peculiar nature of a large part of that population.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then the ethical or ethnological question arises——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is the Senator speaking of the ethical or ethnological question?

Mr. TILLMAN. The ethnological one.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All right.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to know what has become of the Indian men who might have married those Indian women.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The committee has not gone into the matrimonial phase of the question. That is a curious and interesting interrogatory which the philosophical mind of the Senator from South Carolina propounds, one quite worth that study——

Mr. TILLMAN. I will put another, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was overcome by the one.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh!

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am speaking seriously. It is one which is worthy the attention and interest of all people who are interested in the most engaging study of ethnology. But the committee did not go into the question, interesting as it is, of the matrimonial relations of Indians in the Indian tribes, and we are not prepared to speak upon that subject. I wish I could enlighten the Senator.

Now, returning, Mr. President——

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator allow me for a moment?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. Has he any objection to that paper going into the speech of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Minnesota must and will control his own remarks. I am very much obliged for the implied compliment of the Senator in asking my permission, but I suppose the Senator from Minnesota will control his own remarks, as he does his own conclusions.

This is called out by the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee, who evidently did not read this before he presented it, and he did not know how the delegates came to be selected; and that, Mr. President, is a question of much pertinence and importance as to the validity and weight of these resolutions, because if they have any weight, they have it by reason of representing and voicing the opinions of the individual Indians of the Indian tribes. But they were not selected by a convention. They were not selected by popular vote. They were appointed, as we are informed by the proceedings themselves:

These delegates were appointed by the principal chiefs of the several tribes under the authority of resolutions by their respective councils.

Mr. BATE. I beg to say to the Senator that I think that was the mode of appointment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BATE. And there are as much virtue and strength in it as if elected by the populace.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I question neither its virtue nor its strength, but I do question the Senator's conclusion that it represents the populace as well as if the populace themselves had voted upon it. It represents, and just so far and no farther, exactly what it says on its face. Here were delegates appointed by the chiefs. Is it absolutely conclusive that the opinions of the chief are the opinions of all of his tribe? The chief, as I understand, although I am not informed upon that subject, is not elected, or if so, he stays in forever. My limited recollection——

Mr. QUAY. He is elected by popular vote.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How long does he stay in?

Mr. QUAY. I do not remember, but I think two years. The appointment of the delegates was indorsed in council, which is the legislature.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, no; not indorsed by the council.

Mr. QUAY. I so understand it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But the Senator does not understand it correctly.

These delegates were appointed by the principal chief of the several tribes——

Mr. QUAY. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE (reading):

under the authority of resolutions by their respective councils.

Mr. QUAY. That is the same thing.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But the Senator said the resolutions were indorsed by the councils. That is quite a different thing. As I understand it, and I confess my limited knowledge upon that question, but we all have more or less information concerning the proceedings of Indians and their chiefs; the chiefs have practically autocratic power. Their power is seldom questioned. They are usually perhaps men of great strength, at least when they were appointed or selected or in whatever way they get the chieftainship. So these resolutions do not represent nor do they purport to represent the expressed will of the Indians as deposited in the ballot box. I call attention to that merely because the Senator said he did not know how they were selected.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator, I will say that I think they do purport to represent the sentiment of the Indians of those three or four nations (of whom I understand there are 70,000 altogether), with the exception, perhaps, of one other tribe not represented there. The chiefs are the persons who speak for them upon all ordinary occasions, political as well as financial. They are really the heads of the tribes. The Indians are governed by tribal relations. It is an undoubted expression of protest against being interfered with by the Government of the United States so far as their relations are concerned, and they do not desire, at this time at least, to be a State, and they say so.

Further in that proceeding they say that there is an obligation resting upon the Government of the United States, by virtue of a treaty made some years ago, which allows them to remain until 1906 without any interference whatever, and this is an open and flagrant violation of that treaty, and they so assert in that document.

I do not propose to have anything to say now, in the time of the Senator from Minnesota. I think this an improper time to have such a discussion. At a subsequent period in the discussion I may have something to say in regard to the rights of the Indians in this matter, but I will not do so now. I wish only to say that the Indians are the owners of the soil, except that which has been given away, perhaps, for town sites or for railroad purposes; and if the owners of the soil have no right to speak as to whether or not that soil shall be transferred in bulk to the United States upon the application of certain persons, I should like to know who has any equity in this matter.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator says it is the habit of the chiefs to speak for their tribes. That is precisely the point. They do speak for their tribes. The Indians did not appoint delegates for the tribes, and I was calling attention to that, in answer to the remark of the Senator himself, to show precisely to what extent these resolutions, even on their face, assume to represent the individual opinion of the members of those tribes. The Senator states it with great definiteness when he says it is practically the presentation of the views of the chiefs.

About the propriety of the discussion at this time, I will say that I presented these resolutions, as was very proper, and for which I have the precedent of the action of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania on more than one occasion since this debate began. I rose to make a remark of perhaps two or three sentences, when the Senator from Pennsylvania began to question at some length and with some vigor the weight of these resolutions. Then after that had been discussed, the Senator from Tennessee presented as a sort of an offset or counterclaim the resolutions we have just been talking about. When he had done so, I, again following the precedent of the Senator from Pennsylvania, had a right to and did examine into the exact amount of weight which should be given to them. I did not intend to go into that except as the Senator from time to time drew me out. I rose first to say the first few sentences I did utter concerning this, and then called the Senator's attention to the fact, because he said they did not refer to it, that these resolutions of this great convention held yesterday in Oklahoma City touch the very point which so disturbs the Senator, and to my mind touch it very considerably.

If the Senator will bear with me, and the Senator from Minnesota will consent, I should like to call the Senator's attention to the resolutions. They go on to give the reasons why they are in favor of this measure, which appears to the committee to be both a measure of justice and also of nature, because there are natural boundaries down there. The eighth reason is as follows:

Eighth. Because the work of the Dawes Commission has been so nearly completed as to no longer interfere with immediate statehood; that Commission has concluded treaties with all the Indian tribes providing for the allotment in severalty of their lands, and authorizing the sale of all except the homestead. These allotments will probably be completed by the time a State government can be organized. The lands of the Creek and Seminole nations have all been allotted.

In the Cherokee, Choctaw, and Chickasaw nations the lands have all been surveyed and classified and the work of allotment is now simply clerical and should be completed within twelve months. The mineral and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations are to be sold by the Secretary of the Interior, and as soon as sold will of course be taxable. It therefore is beyond controversy that the work of the Dawes Commission no longer interferes with statehood, and that there is abundance of taxable property.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator be kind enough to tell us from what he is reading?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes. I am reading from resolutions adopted yesterday by a——

Mr. BATE. The telegram which has just been read.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am reading the resolutions adopted at "a nonpartisan interterritorial statehood convention held in this city" (Oklahoma City).

Mr. TILLMAN. I was temporarily out of the Chamber, and I did not know what it was that the Senator was reading, and he read with such emphasis of authority that I thought I should like to know what it is.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is right. The Senator used precisely the proper words descriptive of the way in which I intended to read it—with such weight of authority. These are resolutions, I will state to the Senator, since he was absent, adopted at a meeting held yesterday by a nonpartisan interterritorial statehood convention, participated in——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. QUARLES in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to explain what the resolutions are.

At a nonpartisan interritorial statehood convention held in this city today, participated in by 2,000 delegates, representing practically every incorporated town and many hamlets in the Indian Territory and 20 of the 26 counties of Oklahoma, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Mr. TILLMAN. Are those Indians or whites?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The convention, as the dispatches in the morning papers state, and I think they state it correctly, consisted of both. If I remember correctly, there were Indians in the convention. And of course the Senator will admit that if there were Indians in the convention it strengthens the conclusion; but if there were not, and if the reasons which the convention advance for its conclusions are sound reasons it would not make any difference, of course, whether there were Indians there or not. The point of the discussion which occurred when the Senator was out was simply this: The Senator from Tennessee says that we are interfering with the rights of Indians, and the reasons in the resolutions of this convention held yesterday are reasons showing why we are not. That is the point.

Mr. TILLMAN. Right there the Senator can give me some information. I noticed a statement there that all the lands of the Indians were now salable except the homesteads.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. There was something along that line, something about the exception of homesteads.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; that is right, but not at this time. I will read that again.

Mr. TILLMAN. Read that language again, please.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will do so:

Because the work of the Dawes Commission has been so nearly completed as to no longer interfere with immediate statehood that Commission has concluded treaties with all the Indian tribes, providing for the allotment in severalty of their lands and authorizing the sale of all except the homestead.

Mr. TILLMAN. Right here I want to know where the Dawes Commission got authority to authorize the sale of Indian lands.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That question, as I stated to the Senator from South Carolina before, either the junior Senator from Wisconsin, who is a member of the Indian Affairs Committee and has given great study to this question, or the Senator from Minnesota can answer.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Minnesota who has the floor, I am informed, seems to be very quietly conversing with the Senator from Georgia, and does not seem to be very much interested in this.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will propound his question to the Senator from Minnesota—of course I recognize the humor in the situation, that anybody should converse with anybody else when the Senator from South Carolina is on his feet——

Mr. TILLMAN. But the Senator from Indiana is so interesting I do not see how anybody can fail to pay attention.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. To tell the truth, I do not myself see how they can. [Laughter.] As I say, either one of those Senators can with particularity and technically answer the question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should be glad to know. It is a fact involved here worthy of our consideration whether or not the rights of the Indians are being protected, or whether it is proposed to violate the faith of the Government in treaties made years ago, when the lands were vested in the Indians and the country was set aside for the Indians, and all that sort of thing, and whether we are going forward in our remorseless scheme of stealing all of the land in the Indian Territory or elsewhere. If the word "steal" is too offensive, I will say or whether we are just going to get them somehow.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Whether there is to be a continuation of what the Senator seems pleased to designate a policy of theft I do not know.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will explain, as I said before, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. TILLMAN. I will sit down.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That the Senator from Minnesota, when he reaches that particular stage in the discussion, will enlighten the Senator minutely upon that point. This discussion would not now be up were it not for the question of the Senator from Pennsylvania and the later observation of the Senator from Tennessee made concerning the resolutions of this convention sent to me in the telegram, when I had it read at the desk. I think the Senator is perhaps quite right in saying it seems to him rather an anomalous thing that we should be discussing, in the time of the Senator from Minnesota, the provisions of these resolutions; but the Senator was not here, and out of the deference I always have for the Senator's views as to the orderly proceedings of this body, I will say that this was offered as other telegrams have here been offered. It is a habit, a very commendable habit, I believe first begun by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and we would have passed almost immediately to the discussion of this question by the Senator from Minnesota, who is making a most comprehensive speech upon the subject, but the Senator from Pennsylvania by questions, and later the Senator from Tennessee by questions, raised this discussion.

Now, then, as the Senator from South Carolina understands how we got to the point where we are, I want to read the rest of this, in answer to what the Senator from Tennessee says, because it clears up this question.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Indiana will permit me, in the time of the Senator from Minnesota, I should prefer to get light on that topic right now.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, wait until I read——

Mr. TILLMAN. As to how and when and where the Dawes Commission got power to authorize the sale of Indian lands.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will not the Senator wait until I read this?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly. I want to conform to the wishes of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that the reasons continue as follows, beginning where I left off reading:

It therefore is beyond controversy that the work of the Dawes Commission no longer interferes with statehood, and that there is abundance of taxable property.

Ninth. Congress can reserve such power over Indian affairs as it desires, and statehood will in no way interfere with the free action of the Interior Department in carrying out all the treaties between the Government and the several tribes. In this opinion we are supported by a recent holding of Judge Hosea Townsend, of the southern district of the Indian Territory.

There is considerable about that, pertinent, too, but I do not want to take up any more time. I was doing this because the Senator from Tennessee had himself raised this point. The resolutions say:

By act of Congress passed more than three years ago all the Indians in the Indian Territory are made citizens of the United States, and thus their competency for the burdens and duties of statehood, in common with the other inhabitants in that Territory, has been settled.

So we see that the objections which appeared to be so important and, Mr. President, which seemed to my mind, if the premises were correct, also to have weight, seem to be answered by the very resolution itself, which perhaps the Senator did not hear when it was read at the desk.

Mr. BATE. I heard it, but I prefer to answer at the proper time, not in the time of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will fix that with the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BATE. I said that I will not do it now.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Tennessee need not worry about that. I will try to establish the entente cordiale between the Senator from Minnesota and myself, if it has been violated.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say the single sentence which I rose to say at first, over an hour ago, that having the necessary number and the necessary quality of citizens, the inhabitants of a Territory who are thus entitled to admission as a State have a right that their voice should be heard, not necessarily that it would be heeded, because this is the supreme forum. We are the judges, and so made by the Constitution as to the question, but nevertheless their views should be presented. And in what I further say, I venture that I speak for every member of the subcommittee. My friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD] is not here. Nevertheless, I have no doubt that I speak for him, too, when I say that it was the observation of all of us that such are the views of the great majority of the people of both these Territories.

I thank the Senator from Minnesota very much for his patience and forbearance and long-suffering in this somewhat extended colloquy.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the discussion that has taken place within the last hour or so has covered a branch of this Territorial question, in reference to Oklahoma and Indian Territories and in reference to the admission of the two combined as one State, which I propose to take up after to-day and discuss thoroughly. I propose to show to the Senate exactly what the conditions are in those Territories. I shall show to the Senate what constitutional power we have to act in the premises under the decisions of our courts, what progress has been made in the way of legislation and agreements, what has been done in the way of allotments to the Indians, what are the limitations upon alienation, what property is taxable and not taxable—in short, I propose to cover the whole field that has been slightly referred to in this discussion to-day. I propose this afternoon, if the Senate will bear with me, to finish what I intended to say in reference to New Mexico.

Yesterday I had occasion in my remarks then to go somewhat lengthily into the past history of that country. I did it, Mr. President, for the purpose of showing the peculiar, feeble, and scant progress that had been made in all the years of the past in that country; that although it has been settled for more than three hundred years, yet, as a matter of fact, in that period it has made less progress, and the growth has been less, in population, economically, and industrially, than any other part of our country, with the exception of Arizona.

In the next place, I called the attention of the Senate to the amount of the population and showed that, notwithstanding all that is claimed for New Mexico in the way of population, deducting the Indian population, there would hardly be enough to equal the full ratio for a Representative in Congress. I showed, further, the ethnological make-up and the characteristics and conditions of those people. More than half of them, I think perhaps two-thirds, are Mexicans, Spanish-Mexicans, as distinguished from Americans, and more than half of the people of that Territory speak and use the Spanish language.

The Spanish language is used to a large extent in their legislative assembly, where interpreters have to be used and where the proceedings are published in both languages; and in their courts, unlike the courts of any other portion of our country outside of the courts in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands, interpreters are used not only to interpret witnesses, which occurs oftentimes in various portions of our country, but also to interpret the argument of counsel to the jury and to interpret the charge of the court to the jury; and further, what is most unique and extraordinary, they even have interpreters to go into jury rooms and interpret in the grand and petit jury room.

I further showed that in their schools in that Territory the Spanish language was taught side by side on an equality with English, and I showed that in some districts of the country Spanish was taught exclusively. I further showed that when you came to proceedings in justices' courts, many of the justices in the country conducted their proceedings in the Spanish language, and their dockets and records were nearly all of them kept in the Spanish language. I may add further to-day another fact which is unique in that country. The ballots that they use at their elections are printed both in the Spanish and the English languages, and further, in their political conventions, nominating and other conventions, they have interpreters to interpret the proceedings and the speeches of those who participate in the proceedings, and throughout the country most of the campaign speeches are made through interpreters. In other words, in the matter of language it is more of a Spanish country than an American country.

I also showed yesterday, Mr. President, the high grade of illiteracy in that Territory and the comparatively limited degree of education as compared with other parts of our country. I showed that in respect to language, in respect to education, in respect to intelligence, and all that goes to make up the leading and prominent characteristics of a self-governing American citizen, the people of that Territory were to a large extent deficient.

To-day, Mr. President, I propose to show to the Senate that in the matter of industrial development, in the matter of economic development, the Territory is, and has been for some time, in a state of paralysis and stagnation. In fact, little progress has been made, and, considering the volume of land within the limits of that Territory, the great number of years the country has been settled, the amount of land subdued and under cultivation, the amount of agriculture and stock raising carried on is limited to an unusual degree. There are many counties in the Northern States, there are many counties in my State and in the States of the Senators from Indiana and Wisconsin, who I see before me, where the agricultural and grazing development is far greater than in the entire Territory of New Mexico.

And what is the trouble, Mr. President? The reason is that grazing and farming in that country is wholly limited by the supply of water and by irrigation. The soil is mostly a desert, sandy, sterile soil. It is only a few of the lower lands in the valleys along some of the streams that can be irrigated. Irrigation in that Territory has long ago reached its limit, and agriculture is to-day at a standstill, as I shall show not only by the statistics, but also by the number of land entries that have been made there on the public lands in the last two years.

Grazing and agriculture, as I said, are limited by irrigation. Not only is agriculture limited by it, but stock raising and grazing as well, for the reason that cattle, even if they find good pasturage, must have that pasturage within 4 or 5 miles of water. Without that supply of water, no matter how abundant the grass may be, stock raising can not exist.

I wish to call the Senate's attention, at the risk of being a little tedious, to some facts in reference to the matter of irrigation, to show how the people in that country have long ago reached the maximum of water supply and water irrigation, and how to-day, as a matter of fact, a great deal of the land that is really under cultivation can not be farmed because of the entire lack of water.

I read from the testimony on page 101, taken by the committee last November. I read from the testimony of Maj. Eugene Van Patten:

Q. How long have you lived here?
A. I have lived here all my life.
Q. Are you acquainted with the country districts around here?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What is the occupation of the people?
A. Farming, cattle raising and sheep raising, and mining.
Q. Farming is conducted by means of irrigation?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is, only in the neighborhood of the river?
A. Yes, sir. Some of them are putting pumps now in the valley, and securing water for irrigation in that way. As long as these streams prove to be what they expect them to be, there will be hundreds of pumps put on the farms in the valley.

In other words, the water supply is deficient in the rivers and in the reservoirs, and they expect to secure it by means of wells and pumps.

I read again, on page 4, from the testimony of Martinez Amador. I am a little slow about pronouncing these Spanish names.

Q. Is your farm all watered regularly?
A. No, sir; we have been suffering a great deal for water. Since the railroad came here there is so much population above it cuts all our water here. We have been suffering, and we lose our farms, and we lose a good many thousand dollars on that account. I have a good deal of a farm here myself. I got here 300 acres of land and I can not raise nothing on account of water. I lose my orchard, and lose nearly the whole thing.

He states further:

Q. The committee understands that farming can not be done away from the streams?
A. Well, in this country it is very dry. They won't raise nothing if there is no water from the river, you know; we can not depend on rains at all; it don't rain here enough.

Now, I read from page 106 the testimony of John J. Vernon, in respect to the Rio Grande River:

Q. Does the river dry up?
A. It does.
Q. How many of those wells are there?
A. I know of four in this vicinity.
Q. Are they all running like yours?
A. There are none of them pumping as much water as ours.
Q. Have you reported it to the Department of Agriculture?
A. No, sir.
Q. What time in the year does the river dry?
A. It generally dries in the middle or latter part of June, and then we may have a short drought or a long one.

I read from the testimony of Mr. L. O. Fullem on page 116. It is very brief on this point:

Q. You do not depend upon rain for your agriculture at all, do you?
A. Not at all.

Now, I will read from the testimony of Prof. F. H. Newell, of the Geological Survey, which covers the whole point very fully, commencing on page 173 of the testimony:

The CHAIRMAN. Will you state to the committee, in your own way, the situation in the Territory of New Mexico with reference to the question of aridity?

Mr. NEWELL. The Territory is well within the arid region, and agriculture there is dependent almost entirely upon the artificial application of water.

The CHAIRMAN. By the artificial application of water you mean irrigation?

Mr. NEWELL. Yes, sir; irrigation. The principal source of supply is the Rio Grande and its largest tributary, the Pecos River. The United States Geological Survey has been measuring the flow of the Rio Grande where it enters New Mexico and at various points along its course. We have also measured some of its tributaries, and have measured where it leaves the Territory to form the boundary line between Texas and the Republic of Mexico. We have been making studies of the extent to which that water can be used for irrigation purposes in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you state to the committee the extent to which that water is used at present?

Mr. NEWELL. The usual summer supply is entirely employed, and there is now a considerable acreage under cultivation for which there is not a sufficient supply of water at all seasons. The spring flow—the floods—in large part go to waste, and water storage is absolutely essential to the future development of the Territory.

The CHAIRMAN. Does water storage at present exist there?

Mr. NEWELL. There is very little, if any, water storage. There is some on a few of the tributaries of the Rio Grande.

The CHAIRMAN. What would you say about the sufficiency or insufficiency of the water in the Rio Grande for irrigation purposes by means of canals? I will state that the committee, on its recent trip, went along for a considerable distance and observed an absence of water there. That is the reason I ask the question.

Mr. NEWELL. There are very few canals of any considerable size on the Rio Grande. Most of them are small ditches built by the Indians or Mexicans, and the supply is not sufficient for all the irrigated lands in the latter part of the crop season. The river is frequently dry from the international boundary north. That is the normal condition of the Territory. The future development of the region rests upon the feasibility of constructing reservoirs along the Rio Grande, and especially in the northern part of the Territory.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. I believe you said the other portion of the Territory where there was water was the Pecos, did you not?

Mr. NEWELL. The Pecos is the principal stream of eastern New Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you state the supply of that stream, and the availability of its water for irrigation, the character of the water, and other scientific facts which will enlighten the committee?

Mr. NEWELL. The Pecos drains an area of what is generally known as red beds, in which there is a good deal of gypsum, which is easily soluble in river water. The river itself is controlled by storage reservoirs. There is one at Lake McMillan, about 12 miles above Roswell, and a secondary one at Lake Avalon, nearer Roswell. Below that it receives water from springs, from the Hondo and a number of other rivers, and the flow is increased. It is nearly all utilized in the canals between Roswell and Carlsbad. Below Carlsbad little water is taken from the river usually, the portion utilized being that taken out by the canals at Pecos City, south of the Territorial line in Texas.

* * * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. You speak of gypsum. Please state to the committee what its effect is—whether it is a fertilizer or the reverse. What effect does gypsum have upon the soil over which it is distributed by the flow of the Pecos River?

Mr. NEWELL. Gypsum is frequently known as a land plaster and is used in the East as a fertilizer. It is beneficial up to a certain point, but above that point it becomes destructive to crops. The soils of Pecos Valley contain the gypsum in small quantities. As it increases in percentage it becomes concentrated and injurious. I have seen in the past month a great many acres of orchard land and hundreds of acres of alfalfa land that had been destroyed by what is locally called the "gyp" deposit.

The CHAIRMAN. You have entered generally into the two tracts where there is a possibility of irrigation from streams. I will ask you to state to the committee whether there is any possibility of agriculture in any other portion of the Territory on account of the lack of water.

MORE AGRICULTURE POSSIBLE.

Mr. NEWELL. The extreme northwestern portion along the San Juan River has a fairly good water supply, and there they raise, near Farmington, very valuable fruits; but the area of agricultural land is restricted. Outside of that area and a few other localities where springs and streams exist agriculture is impossible.

He states further concerning vacant public lands, and he showed a map to the committee indicating the character of the country:

Mr. NEWELL. The vacant public lands, shown in white, can not support any industry beyond grazing, excepting in the timbered portions. Some timber lands belong to the Government still, but the remaining area is composed of grazing lands and is not capable of further development.

The CHAIRMAN. With reference to grazing lands, a great deal of testimony was given before the committee to the effect that grazing was possible for cattle up to a limit of 5 miles on either side of a water course or water hole. In this white area on this map it does not appear that there are any streams or water courses. Is that the case?

Mr. NEWELL. The grazing there will support a cow to 10, 20, or 30 acres provided water can be had within a radius of about 5 miles. That is a fair journey for a cow.

The CHAIRMAN. You have already described the available water sources of the Territory in answer to former questions?

Mr. NEWELL. Yes.

Here is a further question:

The CHAIRMAN. A question is suggested to me, which seems to be very pertinent. You have described the limit of the irrigation area. Could you roughly state the proportion that that irrigation area bears to the whole area of the Territory?

Mr. NEWELL. I do not recall the exact figures. They are published in a report prepared for the Twelfth Census. It is my impression that about one-fourth of 1 per cent of the area of the Territory is irrigated. [Total area of Territory, 78,374,400 acres; amount irrigated in 1889 was 206,893 acres, or .26 per cent.]

Senator NELSON. That is the percentage that is irrigated?

Mr. NEWELL. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Let me ask this: They have practically irrigated all that it is possible to irrigate under present conditions?

Mr. NEWELL. Yes, sir; without water storage.

Senator NELSON. Without storage?

Mr. NEWELL. Yes.

Now, on the question of irrigation and water supply, I beg leave to quote from the annual report made by Governor Otero to the Secretary of the Interior last June. This is what Governor Otero says:

From the southern boundary of New Mexico up to a point about 30 miles north of Albuquerque the water of the Rio Grande now regularly disappears every summer, and for at least two months the bed of the stream is absolutely dry, except in years of unusual rainfall. This stream is the only available source of supply for irrigation water throughout the greater part of the district named, and since that part of the year during which the river is dry is the time when more water is needed for irrigation than at any other season or all other seasons the disappearing of the stream at that time is peculiarly unfortunate for all the people living in the district named, which is the most thickly settled portion of the Territory.

This "summer dry spell," which is now a regular occurrence, is the result of conditions that have grown up during the last twenty-five years, chief among which may be mentioned the denudation of the timber lands of the Colorado mountains, among which the river takes its rise, and the construction of great irrigation canals in the State of Colorado, taking their waters from the stream before it enters this Territory. Each of these two principal causes, it will readily be seen, exercises a very powerful influence to the end of diminishing the regular summer flow of the stream, and since both occur within the limits of a neighboring State, it is beyond the power of the people of New Mexico to prevent or modify them.

There you have a statement showing the condition as to irrigation and the water supply in the Rio Grande Valley, which includes most of the irrigated area of the country. This shows that there is a scarcity of water and that the scarcity of water arises from causes beyond the border of the Territory and causes which can not be remedied—the cutting of timber and the construction of dams in Colorado.

I want to read further in this connection and on this point from the report of Mr. Vernon, the agriculturist of the experiment station. After reciting the great area to be irrigated, he says:

However, areas where water is abundant throughout the cropping season are comparatively limited. The greater portion of the agricultural sections now under irrigation suffers not infrequently from shortage of water or a complete drying up of the river at some time during the growing period, which results in a partial, if not a total, loss of the crops. This, of course, is a serious matter and one that is continually demanding attention.

WHY A SHORTAGE OF WATER?

It is a fact well recognized among irrigation engineers and foresters that the cutting away of forests along the headwaters and tributaries of streams greatly augments floods by the rapid melting of the winter snows in the springtime, with a relative diminution of flow later in the season, since the snow has already passed off in torrents. Under forest conditions the snow melts slowly, percolating into the soil, and later finding its way into the streams, thus preventing floods and lengthening the period of flow.

REMEDY.

He now comes to the remedy:

The only practical remedy that seems to present itself, other than pumping from the underflow, is that of impounding the waters in one or a series of reservoirs, the water later to be liberated as needed, thus reestablishing an average normal flow throughout the cropping season.

Now, he comes to a point that is material, and which seems to me ought to be given consideration:

Under the recent act of Congress creating funds from the sale of public lands, to be used for irrigation and reclamation purposes in the several arid or semiarid States and Territories, reservoir systems, no doubt, will be established and maintained at suitable points in New Mexico. In view of the pressing needs of the farmers of this Territory, because of the partial or total loss of crops in frequent droughty seasons, the time when these reservoirs are to be established should be hastened with all possible expedition.

In this connection I beg leave to state that in view of the fact that Congress has recently passed this legislation, it ought to be given an opportunity to accomplish the results intended. It will take some years to establish a system of irrigation under the law we passed at the last session of Congress, but until that system is established the country will be in a dormant and comatose condition. If we admit New Mexico to-day, instead of waiting for the Federal Government to develop that system of irrigation at the expense of the Federal Government or through the proceeds of the sales of public lands, I have no doubt that through promoters and stock jobbers those people will rush headlong into irrigation schemes for the sake of hurrying it up and incur a great multitude of debts. I want to say further that, notwithstanding the Federal Government has given those people great help, yet they have nevertheless not availed themselves of it. I read from the report of the Commissioner of Irrigation of August 5, 1902, to the Governor of the Territory:

COMMISSION OF IRRIGATION.

SANTA FE, N. MEX., August 5, 1902.

SIR: In compliance with your request for a full report on the business transactions of the commission of irrigation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, this commission has the honor to submit the following report:

Under the act of Congress entitled "An act to make certain grants of land to the Territory of New Mexico, and for other purposes," approved June 21, 1898, there was granted to the Territory among other lands, "for the establishment of permanent water reservoirs for irrigating purposes, 500,000 acres of land; and for the improvement of the Rio Grande in New Mexico, and the increasing of the surface flow of water in the bed of said river, 100,000 acres." Under the same act there was "appropriated from the unexpended funds in the Treasury of the United States $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purposes of paying the expenses of the selection and segregation of said respective bodies of land." * * * This appropriation and any additional appropriation for like purpose that may have been made have been exhausted.

The powers and duties of the commission of irrigation are defined under section 15 of chapter 69 of the session laws of 1901 of the Territory, and in regard to such duties it is provided, among other duties under that section, as follows:

"It shall be the duty of said commission to investigate and select the most suitable sites for permanent reservoirs for irrigation purposes and for the improvement of the Rio Grande, and also to designate such tracts of public land capable of irrigation from such reservoirs as it would, in their judgment, be advisable to locate and select for the Territory under said act of Congress in order to secure the benefit of the enhanced value of the lands resulting from the establishment and construction of such reservoirs, for which purpose said commission may employ all necessary expert assistants." * * *

The Territorial act above referred to contemplated that funds to defray the expenses of the commission of irrigation, and for the employment of "all necessary assistants" to "investigate and select the most suitable sites for permanent reservoirs for irrigation purposes," would be derived from the sales of the 500,000 and additional 100,000 acres of land granted for such purpose, but unfortunately no appropriation whatever was made in anticipation of such sales, and therefore, for want of funds, it has been impossible for this commission thus far to comply with its duties as defined above.

This report goes to show that Congress has given them a land grant of 600,000 acres for the purposes of irrigation, but they have not utilized it. In addition to that, Congress has made them an appropriation of $10,000 for the purpose of segregating and selecting that land from the other public lands of the Territory, and yet, notwithstanding these facts, it does not seem that they have at all availed themselves of the benefits and privileges thus conferred upon them.

With that land grant which we have thus given them, and under the provisions of the irrigation act passed at the last session of Congress, reasonable and even abundant opportunities will be given to the people of New Mexico to develop their agricultural resources as fast as they can well be developed by irrigation, and to develop them without incurring any indebtedness or taxing themselves—developing them gradually, logically, and in an inexpensive manner, in such a manner that the lands which are irrigated may be cultivated, because there is an abundance of water.

Another fact which shows the feeble condition of the agricultural and grazing interests of the country appears in the statistics of the last census in respect to the land that is in farms, and the proportion of those farms that are under cultivation. The census shows that in 1900 the total number of farms was 12,311; the total acreage in farms was 5,130,878, of which only 326,873 were considered as improved and under cultivation, or only forty-one one-hundredths of 1 per cent of the area of the Territory, scarcely more than an acre a year for every year that has elapsed since Juan Onate first settled and colonized that Territory in 1598.

I have here, Mr. President, a curious and interesting table, and therefore I ask leave of the Senate to read it.

In 1900 there were 10,893 white farmers with an acreage of 5,049,808.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is now speaking of New Mexico?

Mr. NELSON. I am speaking of New Mexico. There were only 303,074 acres of those farms under cultivation—a little over 6 per cent. There were 14 negro farmers in the Territory, who had 18,578 acres in their farms, with 235 acres under cultivation, or $1\frac{3}{10}$ per cent of the aggregate of their farms. There were 1,401 Indian farmers, with 62,472 acres in their farms, and 23,544 acres under cultivation, or a percentage of $37\frac{7}{10}$ per cent—a much greater percentage than that of the white farmers in that Territory under cultivation.

But the most remarkable fact is in respect to the Chinamen. There were three Chinese farmers in the Territory. The total of their farms amounted to 20 acres, and the whole 20 acres were under cultivation. [Laughter.]

The total number of farms in the Territory, as I have said, was 12,311, the total acreage 5,130,878, and the total number of acres under cultivation 326,873. In other words, the total percentage of improved acreage was but 6.3 of the farms of the Territory and only forty-one one-hundredths of 1 per cent of the total area of the Territory.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How many farms were there?

Mr. NELSON. There were 12,311.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How many farmers?

Mr. NELSON. There were 12,311 farms, and those farms contained an acreage of 5,130,878 in the aggregate, and of those only 326,873 acres were really under cultivation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understood the Senator to designate the number of farms, having before enumerated a certain number of farmers, which showed the number of farms was in excess of the number of farmers, which is quite true.

Further, since I am on that point, has the Senator adverted to the point, or will he advert to the fact, that these farms include not only land under cultivation but grazing land?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And further, that Professor Newell's testimony shows that as to a large number of farms in the northeast portion of the Territory, which he visited, the water holes were dry.

Mr. NELSON. These 326,873 acres, which are represented as being the total improved acreage in the farms, include not only land that is cropped, but include grazing lands, as I understand, that are utilized in connection with the farms.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And which could not properly be called farms.

Mr. NELSON. No. In this connection, to show how feeble agriculture is in that country, as well as the mining industry, I beg leave to call attention to the number of people engaged in these industries, which, in connection with the number of farms and the area under cultivation, affords us a key to the agricultural and grazing development of the Territory.

According to the census of 1900 there were 7,463 agricultural laborers and 10,556 people classed as farmers, overseers, and planters, or a total agricultural male population of 18,019.

Coming to stock raising, we find that the number of stock raisers was 2,437, and the number of herders and drovers 5,340, or an aggregate of only 7,777 engaged in stock raising.

In this connection, and before I leave the subject, I will call attention to the scant number of people engaged in the mining industry, for which so much is claimed for New Mexico. The number of persons engaged in coal mining was 1,129; in gold and silver mining, only 552; in mining not specified—and that is chiefly copper—2,326; and in quarrying stone, 12; or a total of 4,019 of the aggregate population engaged in the mining industry.

From these statistics, to which I have called the attention of the Senate, it is evident that agriculture and stock raising have reached their limits; that, owing to the lack of water, these industries are in a dormant state, and no further progress can be made for a long time, until the plan outlined and provided for by the Federal Government in the act which we passed at the last session of Congress has been put into operation in that Territory; and that, Mr. President, is a work of years. To increase the water supply and to increase the area of irrigation is a work that will take years and involve the expenditure of thousands. While that work is required to be done it is far better for the people of the Territory of New Mexico to remain, for their own good, in a Territorial condition, rather than to be swamped under statehood, through the schemes and plans of promoters, stockjobbers, and schemers who will come with specious plans for irrigation and will want bonds issued for their schemes.

That I am correct, Mr. President, in my contention and assumption that agriculture and stock raising have about reached their limits in that country and are in a stagnant condition also appears from the limited amount of land entries made in that country within the last two years. The total area of the land in the Territory of New Mexico is 78,428,800 acres. Out of that amount there has been appropriated, purchased, or sold, including the old Spanish grants, 16,886,503 acres, leaving a balance of unappropriated public lands of the United States of 61,542,297 acres. Out of that volume of land there was entered and acquired from the United States in the year 1901 through the homestead, desert-land, and all other public land laws only 773,664 acres; and in the following year, 1902, only 443,507 acres, or a total of only 1,217,171 acres out of all that body of public lands in the space of two years. This is only 19.2 per cent of all the land that was entered in the smaller Territory of Oklahoma during the same period.

In connection with these figures in reference to land entries, there is another fact which shows that the contention on the part of the advocates of the admission of New Mexico that it has been growing in population is not well founded, and that is that these figures show that there were 330,157 acres less of public lands entered in that Territory in 1902 than in 1901. If that country was growing as rapidly as some of the New Mexican advocates contend, if there was such a boom and such an increase in population, why should a paltry amount of only 443,507 acres of public land be entered in the Territory in the year 1902?

Compare that with the land entries in any of the great progressive Western States, where they have public lands in abundance. As a matter of fact, the entries of public land in the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico in the year 1902 were practically equal in amount, there being only a little difference of 5,068 acres in favor of Arizona. There were less of the public lands of the United States entered in New Mexico in the year 1902 than in Arizona.

These facts, Mr. President, indicate too clearly the very dormant and stagnant condition of the agricultural and stock-raising industries of New Mexico. The truth is that the lands lying on the Rio Grande, the Pecos, and the Canadian Rivers, their tributaries, and the other smaller streams available for irrigation of farming lands have long ago been appropriated and exhausted, largely under the old Spanish Mexican grants, and there is to-day little, if any, land suitable for irrigation and farming and stock raising in New Mexico.

To some extent perhaps stock raising can be enlarged if a water supply for the stock can be obtained, but that is one of the great problems of the future, tedious and expensive of solution.

The table which I have already quoted shows, out of a population of 195,310, that 7,777 people of all classes are engaged in stock raising and 18,019 in farming. If we deduct from this the Pueblo Indians, numbering 8,000, who are engaged in farming and stock raising on a small scale, the number of whites engaged in this industry is much more limited than the figures quoted indicate. All these facts show how feeble and dormant the agricultural conditions of New Mexico are to-day and have been for years past.

In this connection I might say that after the adjournment last evening I was favored with a large bundle, which would fill a small basket, of pamphlets and documents, under the frank of the Delegate from New Mexico, exploiting the resources of the various counties, the summer resorts, the population, and all that. I have no doubt those documents are very interesting, but I prefer in this argument to adhere to the terra firma of solid facts developed by the testimony taken by the committee, and facts appearing from the official census statistics of the country, rather than to depend upon these pamphlets issued to boom certain localities and towns in that country.

Aside from stock raising, the only other industry of any consequence in that Territory is the mining industry. We hear a great deal about how immense this industry is, and how extensive it is, and yet, when we come to look at the cold figures, we find it is very limited indeed.

The production of gold in 1901 in the Territory of New Mexico was only $832,900—less than a million—and that was only about 1 per cent of the aggregate gold production of the United States for that period. The production of silver during the same year was 563,400 fine ounces, or a little over 1 per cent of the entire production of our country. The production of copper in 1901 was 9,629,884 pounds, or 1.59 per cent of the product of the entire country.

Here is a table of comparison with some of the other States:

New Mexico, gold	$832,900
Colorado, gold	27,693,500
California, gold	16,891,400
Alaska, gold	6,885,700

Coming to silver, we find the production in New Mexico for 1901 was only 563,400 ounces, a little over 1 per cent of the aggregate production of the country. Now, let us compare that with some of the silver-producing States. Here is the table:

	Fine ounces.
Colorado	18,437,800
Montana	13,131,700
Utah	10,760,800
Idaho	5,542,900

In other words, New Mexico produced but a little more than one-tenth of the silver produced in the State of Idaho in that year.

Now I come to the matter of copper. While perhaps that is the greatest mining industry of the Territory, yet compared with the other copper regions we find how slight it is even in comparison with Arizona. New Mexico's production of copper in 1901 was 9,629,884 pounds. Arizona during that period produced 130,778,611 pounds Montana, 229,870,415 pounds, and the Lake Superior region, including Michigan, 156,289,481 pounds. In fact, the production of copper, which is the greatest mineral production of New Mexico, during that year was only 1.59 per cent of the entire copper production of the country.

I have already called attention—but I will repeat it in this connection—to the number of men engaged in these mining industries. Four thousand and nineteen men in the aggregate were engaged in the mining industries of New Mexico.

This shows that when you consider the agricultural resources and their development, the grazing and stock-raising resources and their development, and even the mining industries and their development. New Mexico is in a very backward and embryo state, and far from being possessed of the qualities of statehood that its friends have contended for and will contend for in this Senate.

There is another mining industry to which I want to call attention in this connection, because I desire to cover the ground and do full justice to the Territory of New Mexico. The other mining industry is the production of bituminous coal. The production of bituminous coal in 1901 in the Territory of New Mexico was only 1,086,546 short tons, or forty-eight one-hundredths of 1 per cent of the entire product of the country. Let me compare these figures with the production of the other bituminous coal-producing States.

	Short tons.
New Mexico	1,086,546
Pennsylvania	82,305,946
Illinois	27,331,552
West Virginia	24,068,402
Ohio	20,943,807

Comparing the coal-mining industry of New Mexico with the output of the coal mines in the coal-producing States, we see how slight and feeble is even the coal industry in the Territory of New Mexico.

So, Mr. President, if you consider the production of gold, the production of silver, the production of copper, and the production of coal, taking all these mineral resources combined, which cover the whole industrial field in that direction, you see of what a limited character it is and how slightly developed the country has been in that direction.

I refer to these matters in the light of the fact that New Mexico is one of the oldest settled portions of America, and that, further, for more than fifty-three years the people of New Mexico have enjoyed all the benefits and advantages of as good a Territorial government as we have had in any of our Territories in the Northwest. There has been no political strait-jacket. There has been no political or legislative restraint. They have had as great opportunity to expand and grow economically, industrially, ethnologically, in intelligence, and in all that pertains to American citizenship as have had the people of any of the other Territories of this country.

The educational development of New Mexico has been slow and tardy as compared with other portions of our country, and it is still, as I have already shown in the remarks I made yesterday, way below the average of the country, and Spanish rather than English is still the fundamental language of the people. They are still, Mr. President, to a large extent un-American in language, in energy, in aptitude for self-government, and in all those great fundamental elements that are the pride of American citizenship.

In the matter of population and material development Porto Rico is far better qualified to-day for American statehood than is New Mexico. There are a million of thrifty, industrious, law-abiding people in Porto Rico. They are to-day, and have been since we established an organized government there, availing themselves with greater zeal and greater avidity of the American educational facilities given them than did the New Mexicans prior to 1888, and yet in spite of these facts no one would now or for many years to come be likely seriously to insist upon statehood for Porto Rico.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I interrupt the Senator simply to make a suggestion, that if New Mexico should be admitted in her present condition, what answer could we give if Porto Rico should apply for admission except to admit her?

Mr. NELSON. We could not give any other answer. The only difference between the two is the fact that there are a few more Americans to-day in New Mexico than there are in Porto Rico; but the make-up of the population of Porto Rico, with respect to its industrial characteristics and intelligence, as a whole is on an equality and footing with the bulk of the population of New Mexico.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And there are a million of them.

Mr. NELSON. They are as law abiding and loyal to the American flag and the interests of our country as are the people of New Mexico, and to my mind every inch as much fitted for self-government as the people of New Mexico. They are eager to attend our American schools there. We have been and are teaching the English language there, and the little Porto Ricans are as eager to avail themselves of those facilities to learn the English language as are the children in our own midst; and yet the facts are in the case of New Mexico that from 1846, the time General Kearny and Colonel Doniphan entered that Territory, down to 1888 they made no effort to secure a system of public education and they grew up in comparative ignorance. It has only been within later years, notwithstanding all the privileges and opportunities we have given them, that they have in a measure availed themselves of the advantages of public schools and popular education.

Homogeneousness in language and in fitness for self-government is one of the fundamental elements and essentials of the American Union. It is that more than anything else which has made self-government a success. We have grafted many stems on the original Anglo-Saxon stock, but have never permitted the stems to outgrow the original stock or to change the fruit. This homogeneity we must adhere to and maintain under all circumstances. To admit a Territory into statehood in violation of this principle would be a most mischievous and dangerous experiment. In justice to the States already in the Union, no Territory should be admitted into the fellowship of States that is not possessed of full American homogeneity in language, and in qualifications, by training and education, for all that makes up the duties of a self-governing American citizen.

The original fundamental ethnological make-up which still preponderates, the character of the industrial and material and intellectual development which has taken place, the whole history of the past, and the present conditions all go to show that New Mexico is deficient in all those essential conditions so vital to the success of the American Union. Some progress, I admit, has been made in recent years; more is likely to be made in the years to come; but the education and training are far from complete, and therefore for the ultimate good of the people of the Territory, for the good of the whole Union, New Mexico should for some years to come remain in preparation, training, and development for statehood and for full fellowship in the American Union. The delay will be a benefit to the people, and no one will suffer or have any cause to complain except a few active politicians and zealous promoters, who will, no doubt, be disappointed, but whose disappointment, Mr. President, ought not to blind us to our whole duty in this important matter.

I have now, Mr. President, said substantially all that I intend to say on the subject of New Mexico, and I would prefer to stop for the present and take up the matter of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory in the morning.

NANNIE M. KIMBERLY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 3708) granting a pension to Nannie M. Kimberly, returned by the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. As a House bill on the same subject has passed the Senate, I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 8, 1903, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 7, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PHILIPPINE CONSTABULARY.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 15510) to promote the efficiency of the Philippine constabulary, to establish the rank and pay of its commanding officers, and for other purposes, be made the special order for to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 15510) to promote the efficiency of the Philippine constabulary, to establish the rank and pay of its commanding officers, and for other purposes, be made the special order for to-morrow immediately after the approval of the Journal. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask a few questions.

I should like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he had an agreement with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] about this matter?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] saw me yesterday afternoon and said that he did not wish the bill to come up to-day, inasmuch as he had important business in Baltimore and could not be here. I then suggested to him that I would ask that the bill be taken up to-morrow, and he said that he personally would not object to that.

Mr. MADDOX. Are we to have any discussion on this bill; and if so, how long?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. So far as I am concerned, there may be as long discussion as the House is willing to submit to.

Mr. MADDOX. I think we ought to have some understanding about it now.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MADDOX. Really, I have not consulted with my colleagues on the committee. I do not know how long; but we ought to have a reasonable time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We can fix the time to-morrow, or I will suggest an hour on a side, or, if the gentleman thinks it sufficient, half an hour on a side.

Mr. MADDOX. I should say an hour on a side. As far as I am individually concerned, fifteen minutes will do me; but I do not know what my colleagues on the committee and other members on this side of the House want.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin modify his request in accordance with the suggestion?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do.

The SPEAKER. The request now is——

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first state the proposition before the House. The request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is that this bill be made the special order for to-morrow, and that one hour's debate on a side be agreed upon.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman if he will not further modify it so that the bill may then be read by sections and be open to amendment under the five-minute rule; because, Mr. Speaker, there are some parts of this bill that the gentleman's committee has no jurisdiction of, and that to my mind are bad legislative propositions.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will suggest to the gentleman that that opportunity will be afforded under the order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It seems to me that a bill of this importance ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole. I will ask if it is not there now?

The SPEAKER. The bill is now in Committee of the Whole, but possibly this unanimous consent might cut it out of that committee, unless it is understood by the House. What does the gentleman from Wisconsin say in regard to the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I could not hear what the gentleman from Tennessee said.

The SPEAKER. It was in the same line with the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that the bill ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Does the gentleman modify his request accordingly?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have no objection to that, although I do not think it is necessary.

The SPEAKER. Then the request is as just stated by the Chair, with the addition that the bill is to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection to the request as thus modified?

Mr. PAYNE. And general debate to be limited to two hours, an hour on a side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York suggests that debate be limited to two hours.

Mr. PAYNE. That has already been agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that was a part of the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. PAYNE. It was, and that is the reason I called attention to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have Friday excepted from the motion.

The SPEAKER. The request is for to-morrow.

Mr. MAHON. Then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is accordingly made by the House.

RETURN OF CERTAIN COLORS, ETC., TO HARVARD UNIVERSITY.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill 1099.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1099) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to return to Harvard University certain colors, silver cup, and Nordenfelt gun.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to give to Harvard University the 6-pounder Nordenfelt gun, the set of colors, including ensign, jack, and pennant, and the silver loving cup presented by Harvard graduates to the auxiliary cruiser Harvard at the opening of the war with Spain: Provided, however, That said gun shall be returned, in like order as when received, to the Government at any time when it may be required for use.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand exactly the full purport and effect of this bill. Does it entail any expense on the Government?

Mr. ROBERTS. No, sir; no expenditure on the part of the Government whatever, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman will pardon me. I thought it had some provision at the close, as the Clerk read, that the Government was required to put it in good order.

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, no, Mr. Speaker; that is a provision compelling Harvard College to return the gun to the Government in the same condition as received if the Government ever desires it. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the same procedure was had in the case of the colors, cup, and gun presented by Yale College to the cruiser Yale. They have been returned to the college.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ROBERTS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REFUND OF CERTAIN TONNAGE TAXES.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 6439) for the refund of certain tonnage taxes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, additional tonnage taxes, at the rate of $1 per ton, amounting to $7,352, heretofore levied on the steamers Santiago de Cuba, Santiago, Cienfuegos, and Olinda on entry at New York from Cuban ports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some enlightenment on this matter. I did not catch the bill as read. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, the bill is a Senate bill. It passed the Senate on the 11th of December and comes to the House with unanimous report from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. It is a bill to refund to some six vessels an amount aggregating $7,000, which sum represents money in the Treasury that was collected as tonnage dues on these vessels entering New York Harbor between the time when the law authorized the collection of these dues and when they would have ceased but for the delay of the President's proclamation. Under the law that we passed about a year ago refunding in general terms all of the irregularly collected tonnage dues the statute was not deemed broad enough to cover this small sum that was collected at a period not covered by the general statute. The general statute is set out in the report. The letter of the Treasury Department is in the report, recommending the passage of this bill. If the gentlemen is not satisfied with that statement, I will ask to have the report read at the desk.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is it a long report? It is almost impossible, Mr. Speaker, for us to hear what the gentleman said. If it is not a long report, I would like to have it read.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The letter of the Secretary is a very short one.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read to the House.

The report (by Mr. GROSVENOR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries has had under consideration the bill (S. 6439) for the refund of certain tonnage taxes, and report the same back with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The history of the legislation and the situation in regard to the claim is fully described and set out in the report of the Senate committee which follows, and which is adopted by your Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries:

[Senate Report No. 2207, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6439) for the refund of certain tonnage taxes, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Treasury Department, as will appear by the following letter, which, with the accompanying papers, fully presents the merits of the bill:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 6, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the letter from your committee, dated the 5th instant, transmitting bill S. 6439, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, for the refund of certain tonnage taxes, amounting to $7,352, heretofore levied on the Cuban steamers Santiago de Cuba, Santiago, Cienfuegos, and Olinda on entry at New York from Cuban ports.

The amount represents alien or penal tonnage dues imposed for a short period after the organization of the Cuban Government and before proclamation was issued by the President relieving Cuban vessels from the tax, which, it may be stated, is not now levied upon vessels of the United States or of any other nation. While the exaction was legal, it was inequitable, and in the opinion of this Department should be refunded by authority of Congress. This Department has no authority to refund the money and had no authority to waive its collection.

The facts regarding the matter are set forth more in detail in the report from the Department, dated the 2d instant, upon the subject, addressed to the President pro tempore of the Senate, which report this Department desires shall be considered as a part hereof. A copy is inclosed herewith for ready reference.

Respectfully,

L. M. SHAW,
Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 2, 1902.

SIR: I transmit herewith the draft of a bill authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund tonnage taxes, amounting to $7,352, imposed on certain vessels arriving in the United States from Cuba, and recommend its passage. The refund covers additional taxes of $1 per ton imposed at New York under sections 4219 and 4225 of the Revised Statutes, at the following dates and on the following vessels:

Dec. 7, 1898, Santiago de Cuba	$792
Feb. 6, 1899, Santiago de Cuba	792
Mar. 14, 1899, Santiago de Cuba	792
Mar. 22, 1899, Cienfuegos	1,346
June 14, 1902, Cienfuegos	1,346
June 23, 1902, Santiago	792
June 24, 1902, Olinda	1,492
Total	7,352

The imposition of these taxes has been a consequence of exceptional conditions, following the transfer of sovereignty over Cuba from Spain, through the United States, to the Cuban people, and the relief asked for is similar to that granted by Congress by the act of February 10, 1900.

The Santiago de Cuba entered New York on or about December 7, 1898, and February 6, 1899, without marine documents or any documents establishing her nationality. The collector thereupon, under sections 4219 and 4225 of the Revised Statutes, collected at each entry $1 per net ton in addition to the regular tonnage tax of 3 cents per net ton. The agents of the vessel state that the register had been surrendered at the Spanish custom-house prior to the war, in accord with Spanish regulations, to be sent to Madrid for approval.

By order of the President, dated December 13, 1898, regulations were promulgated by the War Department empowering Army officers in command at ports in Cuba to issue permits to engage in the coasting trade of the island to vessels owned by Cubans who renounced their allegiance to Spain. Such vessels, however, being without nationality, were subject on entry into the United States to $1 per ton additional taxes under sections 4219 and 4225 of the Revised Statutes. These taxes were imposed on the arrival of the Santiago de Cuba on March 14, 1899, and of the Cienfuegos on March 22, 1899, with permit issued by the military authorities.

Congress, by the act of February 10, 1900, authorized the refund of such additional taxes imposed after April 11, 1899, the date of the treaty with Spain. The four cases mentioned are similar in essential respects to those in which relief has already been afforded by Congress.

The act of February 10, 1900, gave to vessels owned by citizens of Cuba and documented as such by officers of the United States the rights and privileges of vessels of the most favored nations. On the establishment of the Cuban Government on May 20, 1902, Cuban customs officers canceled these documents issued by officers of the United States, thus depriving the vessels of the privileges bestowed by the act of February 10, 1900.

The notice from the Cuban Government, required by section 4228 of the Revised Statutes, on which the President may suspend the collection of the additional tax of $1 per ton, was not received until July, and on July 7 the President's proclamation was issued. In the meantime the Cienfuegos arrived at New York on June 14, 1902, the Santiago (formerly Santiago de Cuba) on June 23, and the Olinda on June 24, and in each case, as required by law, the collector of customs imposed $1 additional tonnage taxes.

Respectfully,

L. M. SHAW, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE OF THE SENATE.

[Department circular No. 83, 1902.]

CUBAN VESSELS AND THEIR CARGOES RELIEVED FROM DISCRIMINATING DUTIES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., July 7, 1902.

To collectors of customs:

The attention of officers of the customs, owners and masters of vessels, etc., is invited to the following proclamation by the President, dated July 3, 1902, relieving Cuban vessels and their cargoes from discriminating duties:

"Whereas satisfactory proof has been given to me by the Government of Cuba that no discriminating duties of tonnage or imposts are imposed or levied in the ports of Cuba upon vessels wholly belonging to citizens of the United States, or upon the produce, manufactures, or merchandise imported in the same from the United States, or from any foreign country:

"Now, therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by section 4228 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, do hereby declare and proclaim that from and after the date of this my proclamation, so long as vessels of the United States and their cargoes shall be exempt from discriminating duties as aforesaid, any such duties on Cuban vessels entering the ports of the United States, or on the produce, manufactures, or merchandise imported in such vessels, shall be suspended and discontinued, and no longer.

"In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the city of Washington the 3d day of July, in the year of our Lord 1902 and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-sixth.

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

Should such duties have been levied on or since the date of the proclamation, any application filed for refund will be forwarded by the proper officer with his report in the usual manner.

M. E. AILES, Acting Secretary.

There seems to be no objection to the bill. The claim is a perfectly legitimate and legal claim, and it was made the duty of the committee simply to refer to the law as it now stands, which is embodied in the bill (H. R. 5074) of the Fifty-sixth Congress, which is as follows:

"A bill relating to Cuban vessels.

"Be it enacted, etc., That vessels owned by citizens of Cuba and documented as such by officers of the United States shall hereafter be entitled in ports of the United States to the rights and privileges of vessels of the most favored nation, and they and their cargoes shall be subject to no higher charges in ports of the United States than are imposed on the vessels and cargoes of the most favored nation in the same trade.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to refund, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon application and satisfactory evidence, tonnage taxes and light dues which have been imposed on vessels owned by citizens of Cuba entering ports of the United States since January 1, 1899, which have been in excess of the tonnage taxes prescribed by section 11 of the act of June 19, 1886."

This left a hiatus, as explained by the Secretary of the Treasury, and it is but just and fair that this money should be refunded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF BEER AND LIGHT WINES IN POST EXCHANGES.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to submit the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution No. 347, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, requested to transmit to Congress the various reports received by his Department on the practical operation of section 38 of the act of February 2, 1901, which prohibits the sales of beer and light wines in post exchanges.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

HAWAIIAN SILVER COINAGE AND SILVER CERTIFICATES.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the minority members of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, the gentleman from Missouri, the gentleman from Tennessee, who are present, and with their approval, I ask unanimous consent that the House may now proceed to take up Senate bill 2210, as amended by the House committee, and reported favorably by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and dispose of it, with the understanding that there be thirty minutes of general debate on each side, and the bill to be read under the five-minute rule for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill 2210, with the understanding as to debate as stated by the gentleman. Does the gentleman desire to go into Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HILL. I suppose that would be necessary, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Coupling with his request the proposition that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, with general debate limited to one hour.

Mr. HILL. Thirty minutes on each side.

The SPEAKER. Before this request is submitted to the House the Clerk will report the bill.

An act (S. 2210) relating to Hawaiian silver coinage and silver certificates.

Be it enacted, etc., That the silver coins that were coined under the laws of Hawaii, when the same are not mutilated or abraded below the standard of circulation, shall be received at the par of their face value in payment of all dues to the government of the Territory of Hawaii and of the United States, and the same shall not again be put into circulation, but they shall be recoined in the mints as United States coins.

SEC. 2. That when such coins have been received by either Government in sums not less than $500 they shall be deposited as bullion in the mint at San Francisco, Cal., and shall be recoined as subsidiary coinage of the United States. And the superintendent of the said mint shall pay for such coins, at their face value, to the proper officer or agent of the Government depositing the same, the sum so deposited, in standard silver coins of the United States. The expenses of transmitting said coins to and from the Hawaiian Islands shall be borne equally by the United States and the Territorial government of Hawaii.

SEC. 3. That any collector of customs or of internal revenue of the United States in the Hawaiian Islands shall, if he is so directed by the Secretary of the Treasury, exchange standard silver coins of the United States that are in his custody as such collector with the government of Hawaii, or with any person desiring to make such exchange, for coins of the government of Hawaii, at their face value when the same are not abraded below the lawful standard of circulation, and the Treasurer of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to deposit such silver coins of the United States as shall be necessary with the collector of customs or of internal revenue at Honolulu or at any Government depository for the purpose of making such exchange under such regulations as he may prescribe.

SEC. 4. That any silver coins struck by the government of Hawaii that are mutilated or abraded below such standard may be presented for recoinage at any mint in the United States by the person owning the same, or his or her agents, in sums of not less than $50, and such owner shall be paid for such coins by the superintendent of the mint the bullion value per troy ounce of the fine silver they contain in standard silver coin of the United States, and such bullion shall be coined into subsidiary coinage of the United States.

SEC. 5. That silver coins heretofore struck by the government of Hawaii shall continue to be legal tender for debts in the Territory of Hawaii, in accordance with the laws of the Republic of Hawaii, until the 1st day of January, 1904, and not afterwards.

SEC. 6. That any silver certificates heretofore issued by the government of the Hawaiian Islands, intended to be circulated as money, shall be redeemed by the Territorial government of Hawaii on or before the 1st day of January, 1905, and after said date it shall be unlawful to circulate the same as money.

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act contained shall bind the United States to redeem any silver certificates issued by the government of Hawaii, or any silver coin issued by such government, except in the manner and upon the conditions stated in this act for the recoinage of Hawaiian silver.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. JENKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3210) relating to Hawaiian silver coinage and silver certificates.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the bill has been once read in the House, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading in committee be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the third reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] may have charge of the thirty minutes given to the minority.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri to control the time of the minority.

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the bill as read is a great deal more formidable than the results achieved by it. The facts are these: A few years ago under the monarchy in the Sandwich Islands a million dollars was coined, consisting of quarters, halves, and dollars—500,000 dollars, 350,000 half dollars, and the balance in quarters and dimes. It was all subsidiary coinage, being legal tender only for the sum of $10, the full legal tender in the islands being American gold coin. When the Sandwich Islands became annexed to the United States under the treaty, the existing laws were continued in force until repealed by act of Congress. The organic act making Hawaii a Territory, in the opinion of the people of Hawaii, has repealed the existing laws, and the laws of the United States, so far as coinage is concerned, are now the laws of the Territory.

This condition obtains, that there is substantially $900,000 of silver coinage in the Hawaiian Islands bearing the image and superscription of King Kalakaua, and it is not legal tender for anything. It is accepted and is passing current in the islands because the banks have nominally agreed to accept it until Congress takes action in regard to it.

Under these circumstances the postmasters throughout the islands have written the Post-Office Department asking for instructions because the banks are contemplating refusing to accept it. Their reason for doing so is that it is not lawful money and consequently can not be held by them as a part of their reserve. They can not exchange it for any other money outside of the country, and the islands are in a very embarrassed condition concerning it, and that alone would seem to justify the exchange. It will cost $10,000 for the United States to recoin this money, and it will cost $10,000 to freight it over to the San Francisco mint and back again. That is $20,000. We shall make by the operation, because it is subsidiary coin and probably never will come in for redemption, and the seigniorage on the recoined dollars will amount to $35,000.

Bear in mind that the dollars over there are subsidiary, just as the halves and quarters are here. So the net apparent profit to the United States by the transaction will be $15,000, and the people of Hawaii greatly desire that this shall be done, for they prefer to see in their daily business transactions, now that they are a part of the great American Union, they prefer to see the American eagle on their coins rather than the image and superscription of King Kalakaua.

The bill has passed the Senate unanimously, is approved on both sides, by Republicans and Democrats. It is a Senate bill, and I had the pleasure yesterday of reading a report which will be made in a day or two, signed by a Senatorial commission which went to the islands this summer. They took a great deal of testimony on this question, and the people came before the Senatorial commission and asked them to recommend that this money be recoined into United States money. That report is a unanimous one, signed by Democrats and Republicans also.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman says that this report is unanimous?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When did it become unanimous?

Mr. HILL. I was told yesterday that there was no objection to it on the part of anybody, and that it would be a unanimous report. It has not yet been filed in the Senate.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman was spoken to by Senator FOSTER?

Mr. HILL. Both by Senator FOSTER and Senator MITCHELL.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Have you talked with Democratic Senators to ascertain whether they approved it or not?

Mr. HILL. I have not. I did not suppose it was necessary.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I think it was very necessary, because they have not approved it. I am informed the "report" is yet in embryo.

Mr. HILL. That is all there is in this proposition. I hold in my hand, also, a Hawaiian paper, dated December 22, in which I find an article headed "Silver coinage," in which this change is strongly advocated. No harm is to come from this measure to anybody. The effect is simply to give to American people American money, with a profit in doing so to the United States Government. That is all there is in the proposition; there is no political tinge to it of any kind or character. As I have already said, the bill passed the Senate by a unanimous vote after a full discussion.

Now, there are two House amendments to the bill. One provides for the appropriation of $10,000 to pay the transportation charges. By the bill as originally drawn—drawn from a former bill which was before Congress previous to the admission of Hawaii as a Territory—it was provided that the expense of transportation should be divided equally between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands. Of course, as Hawaii is now a Territory, it has no funds with which to pay this expense. As we are to have the seigniorage which will arise, there will be a net profit of $15,000 over and above all expenses. The amendment has been framed by the Treasury Department and accepted by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The other amendment provides that we shall take up that money at its face value rather than exchange it and then turn it back to the islands at its coining value. The inhabitants of that Territory are our people, and it is only fair and honorable that we should treat them precisely as we did Porto Rico—take up their coinage and recoin it at its circulation value. It has always been at par.

Mr. BELL. The gentleman has spoken of the profit which the Government will make out of this transaction by means of the seigniorage. Now, suppose the Government should go into the market and buy the silver for this new coinage, could it not make the whole $600,000?

Mr. HILL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BELL. Then we are simply paying out the money——

Mr. HILL. If we should do that, we should simply transfer the loss to the people of the Hawaiian Islands by compelling them to sell this money at its bullion value, which would seem to be unfair and unjust by reason of the fact that Hawaii has been admitted as a Territory of the Union.

Mr. BELL. In other words, we are simply paying out of the Treasury $10,000 and the coinage expenses?

Mr. HILL. That is all; and we get in $35,000.

Mr. BELL. If we bought the bullion in the market, we should make the entire $600,000?

Mr. HILL. Certainly; there is no question about that.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to take $1,000,000 of Hawaiian silver money, coined at the mints of the United States, money of the same fineness and value as our own silver money, and recoin this money into United States subsidiary coin. I am not fully advised as to the legal-tender value of this money. The gentleman from Connecticut says that the dollars are legal tender to the amount of $10. At all events, when I was in Hawaii, being a member of the Coinage Committee, I made it my business to inquire about the usefulness of this money. I inquired of street-car men, of hotel men, of the barbers (who come in contact with everybody), of merchants, and of various laboring people with whom I came in contact, it being my custom to come in contact with people "on the ground floor," as well as, possibly, now and then, by special invitation, with those who adorn our "gilded halls."

But not in a single instance did I find anyone opposed to the continuance of this money exactly as it is. It has always circulated on a parity with our money. It was so circulating then, and it was so circulating when this matter was debated in the House, and it is circulating now at its face value with our money. There is not one particle of gold behind it; there never has been any gold behind it. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] who reported the bill the first session of this Congress, said in his speech on this bill that it has always circulated at its face value, and so it has. So that if we take this money and coin it now into a limited tender into half dollars, quarters, and dimes, we make it more limited than at least $500,000 of it is now.

In addition to that, as you will observe from the title of this bill, "An act relating to Hawaiian silver coinage and silver certificates," in addition to this change in this hard money that stays at home, and which does all the work those people want, we leave about $450,000 of "silver certificates," which are issued upon this silver money and are redeemable in this Hawaiian money. We give the Hawaiian people until 1905, by the face of this bill (section 5), to redeem this paper money; yet in the meantime, by section 6, by 1904 we shall have demonetized it—the Hawaiian coin—and ground it all up into the American coin. This paper money is not redeemable in our coin.

In addition to that we throw back on the Hawaiian government the redemption of this $450,000 of paper money, with no right to coin money, with no right to create a redeemer for it, with the result that that money will be so much lost at its face value in the pockets of the people, for it also circulates, as I understand it, on a parity with the balance of the money; we throw it back on those people without any power in the world of protecting and redeeming it at its face value or otherwise. That is a great injustice to those people. It is wrong to thus leave them absolutely with their money floating over there to this amount without any means of redeeming it, while in the meantime we destroy its redeemer, their hard money. Now, another thing, this Hawaiian coin is to be redeemed at its troy-weight value, not at its face value. We know now that the bullion in a silver dollar is worth somewhere between 30 and 40 cents. I will ask the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] what the bullion value is to-day of silver?

Mr. BELL. Between 47 and 48 cents.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. So that here is a million dollars in the hands of these people who are already threatened with famine, who are a people that are inferior to us in every sense of the word, and we are making them, with this million dollars in their pocket, take, not the face value of it as it now stands and circulates, but we make them take the troy weight value of it, which is 48 cents on the dollar. That is a very great injustice to them, and I can not be a party to it.

Now, the gentleman says that the American Government will make at least $15,000 out of it. Think of it—think of the injustice done by the edict of Congress—we are making $15,000 out of those people over there, with them having no vote here to oppose this matter, as I am now doing for them in a nonpartisan and in a fair way, sticking absolutely to the four corners of the record and to the facts.

Again, the gentleman says that a Senatorial committee has been over there and that they report these people want this done. Now, I talked with Senator FOSTER. He was kind enough to come over to see me. He said they invited in some bankers. The bankers wanted possibly to make something out of it, as possibly bankers do, as charged by our commissioners in the Philippine Islands.

Have we not in days gone by, in the halcyon days of our Republic, in the days of Jefferson, Monroe, and Jackson, down to 1857, circulated in our own Republic foreign coin and coins that were not circulated here at par? Yet these Hawaiian coins are circulating at par, doing full legal-tender duty, as much so as our gold that is here. Our gold dollars have been circulating with them on a parity, and yet there is such a demand over there for money that this limited tender, this silver dollar, with a little monarchy behind it, with no gold behind it, no resources behind it, has stood up and faced our gold dollar with a population behind it, with our wealth and power behind it, and we with the fell stroke of a pen propose to strike down that money and drive it out of that country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to say that we are not extending the limits of our Republic in the way that I should like to see them extended, if they are to be extended at all. We are adding these colonial appendages, as by a string. We are increasing the number of "people" subject to our jurisdiction. But strange to say, although we have increased the number by 10,000,000 people in the Philippine Islands, and I do not know how many in the Hawaiian Islands or how many in Porto Rico, yet every year the mint report shows that our circulation per capita is greater than ever before. If you destroy this money, if you remove it from Hawaii, you diminish our per capita circulation, when it should be increased.

What must take the place of it if we strike down this coin? American money that should stay here at home to do our work, instead of having the Secretary of the Treasury run off up to New York amongst the gamblers and Wall street rapscallions, unloading the people's money in that retreat, to save the people, the Government, and the Republic from panic and ruin. [Applause on the Democratic side.] By thus acting, they say there is not enough money for the "legitimate" business of our country. Yet you would strike down this money of Hawaii, forcing the sending of our money to Hawaii to transact their business, thus diminishing the per capita circulation at our own doors, taking so much money away from the people of the United States.

Gentlemen, you can not dispute these statements successfully, so I can not do otherwise than oppose this measure in justice to those people.

Again, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] says the Democrats—who did not go over there, I may say—Senator BLACKBURN was one. He did not go, and the other Democrats did not go; I do not know why. Three Republicans did go. They had made no report yesterday. It is unfinished. Senator FOSTER says they have not signed it. I asked him to let me read it. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, three years ago an effort was made to get this bill through the House of Representatives upon the urgent plea that unless something was done the Hawaiian dollar would likely go to a discount. It was contended at that time that it was an urgency measure, something that ought to be put through quickly to prevent repudiation. Mr. Chairman, we then predicted that inasmuch as the Hawaiian dollar had a legal-tender quality it would not go to a discount so long as it was limited as provided by the Hawaiian laws. Those laws fix the amount at 500,000 silver dollars and provide that they shall be a legal tender in payment of debts for amounts up to $10, and they pass there in payment of debts to any amount. These dollars have been mostly converted into silver certificates in denominations of $10 and more, and they circulate in the islands just exactly upon a parity with our own money, no discrimination whatever being made, no one refusing to take a silver certificate in the Hawaiian Islands.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have thought that this problem would solve itself if gentlemen upon the other side would permit it to do so. Day after day and week after week people go by the Hawaiian Islands to the Orient, and nearly everyone takes from the Hawaiian Islands some souvenir or token of his visit, and it is usually in the shape of a coin. I know that on the vessel that I was upon that visited the islands nearly every passenger took some of the Hawaiian money, and it would not take a very long time before that money would all be taken from the Hawaiian Islands and held as souvenirs—held for sale at a premium by coin dealers.

Mr. Chairman, I do not see why the Government of the United States should undertake this work now. I do not see why it should attempt to take a coin that is perfectly good, of the identical number of grains as our own silver dollar, and put it out of circulation. The dollar in the Hawaiian Islands contains 412½ grains of standard silver, the same amount identically as the United States coin. If gentlemen want to make this coin a full legal tender, they can do it by the passage of a bill which would not cost the Government 10 cents, whereas to convert this coin into other coin will cost, according to the gentleman's estimate, at least $10,000.

There is another objection which I have to this measure and that is, this bill provides that these silver dollars shall be melted down into subsidiary coins, not into like coins of the United States, but into subsidiary coin. It seems to me that there is no reason for that. The subsidiary coin is as much an obligation of the Government as the silver dollar, and it ought to be cared for just as well as the silver dollar. And there is a greater necessity in the Hawaiian Islands for silver dollars or silver certificates based on the same than there is for subsidiary coin. In fact, the Hawaiian Islands could not use the amount of subsidiary coin which this bill provides shall be the result of the recoinage of the silver dollars. For that reason it appears to me that we ought to coin them into money that they want, into money that they need, into money that their commerce will absorb, into coins of like denominations.

In the first place, the power to issue silver certificates based upon the silver dollars exists. The holder has had the right to have issued to him silver certificates. They are issued and in circulation and pass in the payment of all debts. To recoin the silver dollars which form their base into small coins would be simply to substitute for the paper money now in existence in the Hawaiian Islands subsidiary coin, not silver dollars. If there is any obligation on the part of the United States to take care of this money, of course it ought to be done; but, it seems to me, when two governments amalgamate and form one government, and each has money in circulation, each ought to take care of its own obligations. Silver bullion is at a discount. The United States can coin $1,000,000 of silver from bullion at a cost of about $400,000, but to take up the Hawaiian dollars and subsidiary coin will incur an obligation of $1,000,000. Is not the purchasing of the Hawaiian money by the issuance of our own obligations in effect making a present of $600,000 to the Hawaiian people?

But if there is an obligation, then of course that obligation ought to be carried out, cost what it may. But I do not know that there is any, and I would like the gentleman on the other side to point to me a statute or treaty that provides that we shall take care of their coins. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman from Colorado if he agrees with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] in his statement that it will be a great injustice to the people of the Hawaiian Islands; and in connection with that, does the gentleman from Colorado not know that all Hawaiian interests desire this legislation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, I believe the banking interest wants it, just like the banking interests of the United States want the silver of the United States redeemable in gold. I do not believe the people generally want it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Has the gentleman any information upon that point?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The only information I have is that I was there a very short time, and I inquired, so far as I could, among Americans there as to the currency, and there seemed to be no objection to the same.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is not general legal tender.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is legal tender to the amount of $10, and in addition to that the silver certificates issued upon that money pass for the payment of any debts.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. On the second proposition, does the gentleman agree with the gentleman from Tennessee that it would reduce the per capita circulation of the country to transfer this money to Hawaii?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It would have this tendency. The silver certificates now constitute the principal circulating medium of the Hawaiian Islands, and to supplant it with subsidiary coin would of course deprive them for the time being of the circulation necessary for commerce.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman from Colorado is of the opinion that for the time being this would reduce the per capita circulation in the United States, the Hawaiian Islands being a part of it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Temporarily. United States money in time will get there, I have no doubt.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to correct a statement that the gentleman from Colorado has made. This money is not legal tender, not for a cent, and has not been since the Hawaiian Islands were admitted as a Territory. It is just like tin, and circulates with the consent of the bankers. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. I beg to differ from the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman from Colorado will permit me, I notice that section 5 of the bill is somewhat in contradiction of the statement of the gentleman from Connecticut:

> That silver coins heretofore struck by the government of Hawaii shall continue to be legal tender for debts in the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. COCHRAN. They are legal tender.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They are legal tender to the amount of $10. I looked it up while we had this under discussion two or three years ago.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman will look to the organic act by which Hawaii was admitted as a Territory, he will see that it is not a legal tender.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not see how the organic act could affect the legal-tender value of money established by the Hawaiian government. It would be an impairment of the obligations of contracts to change it. There is no question but what the issuance of silver certificates has been made on this money, and they circulate absolutely in the payments of debts of any size.

Mr. HILL. The legal tender of the Hawaiian Islands is now and has been since their admission as a Territory American gold coin.

Mr. COCHRAN. And their coin is up to $10.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And their coin is also received as legal tender up to $10.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the passage of this bill and every reason seems to impel it. I am an American and believe in American money, and equality of rights and obligations to all our citizens. The Hawaiian Islands are as much a part of American territory as any State in the Union. They are fully under the Constitution in all its strength and force. The gentleman from Tennessee suggested in his remarks that this legislation was not desired by the people of the Hawaiian Islands. I have communicated with very many of the citizens of the Hawaiian Islands and in no instance, in no report that I have read, or recommendations made on the subject, or in personal communications, have I heard a dissenting voice, but all were in favor of the passage of this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. COCHRAN. What particular report does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I refer to papers that have been sent by the commercial bodies; to reports by the United States officers and Hawaiian authorities, from the Secretary of the Treasury on down, and statements by gentlemen that I have seen personally—one who was secretary of the senate of the Hawaiian legislature, Mr. Edgar Caypless; another, a member of the fire-claims commission in the islands of Hawaii, Mr. Pratt; another, Mr. Haywood, an ex-consul, and various gentlemen of that character that I have not time to mention. The Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. WILCOX] has persistently pressed this bill. The gentleman from Tennessee referred to the fact that it would reduce the per capita circulation of the United States. That is an error. This is a provision to stamp the device of the United States Government on a silver piece of a fineness and weight equal to the American money. Therefore that is untenable. The Hawaiian people are all in favor of this legislation. It means only the taking of nearly a million dollars of Hawaiian silver bearing the impress of the Hawaiian government and transferring to that silver the imprint of the United States Government.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does it not, in addition to that, retire a great volume of silver certificates, and does it not retire a large volume of those outstanding Hawaiian silver dollars and substitute subsidiary coinage for all this form of currency?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It substitutes subsidiary coinage only for the amount of the silver now in circulation.

Mr. COCHRAN. The whole million dollars will be subsidiary coinage.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman is correct. The Hawaiian Islands were annexed July 7, 1898, as a Territory of the United States and as a part of the United States, under the Constitution fully. From that time—for twenty-one months—until June 14, 1900, the revenues of the Territory of Hawaii—the customs duties, the postal receipts, the internal revenues—were received by the Hawaiian treasurer. At the time of annexation we assumed their public indebtedness to the amount of $4,000,000. They are American citizens and are entitled to American money, one of the rights of American citizenship. We assumed the $4,000,000 indebtedness as a part of the act of annexation, but with this assumption received their millions of public property. This will make their money worth now half a million dollars worth a million dollars, it is true, but it is now received by United States collectors there as if it were United States money, but it bears the impress of a foreign state.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Did we in that act assume to take care of their money or to make their money equal to ours?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. We did not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no statement in the act intimating anything of the kind.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. There is not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the gentleman not recognize that when the Hawaiian government takes this money and puts it into United States obligations, which obligations the United States are pledged to maintain at a parity, that it thereby makes for the Hawiian government about $300,000, and do not we make them a present of $300,000 when we pass this act?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I was about to come to that proposition, that of our moral obligation, as the gentleman urged in the last session of Congress and to-day on the floor, and if such moral obligation existed we ought to pass this bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly, if there was a moral obligation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Now, I invite the gentleman's careful attention to my remarks on this point.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the gentleman not recognize that when two nations consolidate there is a moral obligation that each shall take care of its own money?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If the gentleman will give me time, I will endeavor to make clear my views on this question of moral obligation. What is the gentleman's American theory for absorbing and taking up this money for the United States citizens in Hawaii? It is that tourists shall go there month after month and year after year, and by taking curios and souvenirs absorb a million of money belonging to American citizens, that the burden belonging to the Government shall in that eccentric and singular manner be discharged by individual citizens of our country and by foreign tourists in search of keepsakes.

That is his patriotic endeavor to assume the obligations of a people bound to us by the ties of American citizenship, and in this the gentleman loses sight of the benefits that accrue to us all as citizens of a common country.

Now, in June, 1900, we passed the organic law, taking away from Hawaii the customs duties, the internal-revenue and postal receipts; and those since that day have gone into the United States Treasury. The result of the passage of that act and the benefits to the United States Treasury is shown in a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury to me dated January 4, 1903, exhibiting a net realization to the Treasury of the United States from customs duties, internal revenues, and postal receipts of $2,585,000 from Hawaii alone.

It reads:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
DIVISION OF BOOKKEEPING AND WARRANTS,
Washington, January 6, 1903.

Hon. J. M. ROBINSON,
House of Representatives.

Respectfully,

L. M. SHAW, Secretary.

From these expenditures we must deduct the four million assumed by the United States in public debt, which assumption was provided for by the resolution of annexation in 1898, and is a closed chapter so far as the merits of this proposition is concerned.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do not the people of the Hawaiian Islands, by reason of having their sugar imported into this country free of duty, make ten times that amount each year out of the United States?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Oh, the gentleman would not hold that this operates purely to the benefit of the islands. What do we get by reason of the free admission of various commodities—a system that we on this side stand for always and everywhere? We of the mainland receive a corresponding benefit by reason of the free trade with Hawaii.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the gentleman mean to say that the price of sugar in the United States is modified by the free importation into this country of the small amount of sugar from Hawaii?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman must recognize that I can not go into a discussion of the tariff and trust question at this moment. He will find on looking up the report that a very large amount of sugar comes from Hawaii, reaching hundreds of thousands of tons, and in value reaching many millions of dollars, it being the principal and almost the sole industry there. The proposition carries its own answer, so far as is necessary to the present discussion. The letter I have submitted shows the receipts and disbursements. Did we not, when we assumed the indebtedness of Hawaii to the extent of $4,000,000, receive $4,000,000 of public property? Have we not Pearl Harbor, one of the most magnificent harbors in the world? That is a part of what we received in consideration of our assuming that indebtedness. We received $4,000,000 of public property and in addition $4,000,000 of public lands.

Those people in Hawaii are American citizens, standing upon an equality with all American citizens in this country, and therefore they are entitled to this consideration. When we make their money ours and our money theirs, it results in no loss. They want it; we ought to want it. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that we have to our credit from Hawaii in receipts from June, 1900, a net revenue of $2,585,000 with which to meet this expenditure that the gentleman speaks of as something like $300,000.

Those people being Americans, inhabiting American territory, and not standing as do Porto Rico and the Philippines, their interests calling for this measure, there being no financial question involved, as was in the campaign of 1896, the only proposition is, Are these American citizens, on American territory and under our Constitution, entitled to the same advantages, the same financial conditions, to which we are entitled? I submit that every consideration calls for the passage of this bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask my friend from Indiana——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has consumed all his time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Chair has not heard the proposition I was trying to state.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like the gentleman from Indiana to put also in the RECORD a statement showing why it was that the courts and other machinery of the government of Hawaii went to pieces, which I understand was because there was not enough money there with which to run the government.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman from Tennessee can do that in his own time and on his own credit and responsibility.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Such was the fact, although it is not in the official statement I have.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, at the time of the annexation of Hawaii the government of those islands had outstanding, in circulation, $1,000,000 in silver money. Copying our system, their law provided for the deposit of silver dollars in the treasury and the issue of silver certificates. Five hundred thousand silver dollars had been minted, and over four-fifths of these silver dollars were represented by silver certificates. The islands had $400,000 in subsidiary silver coin. This $1,000,000 forms the money of commerce of about 100,000 trading people in those islands. It is almost the only money in circulation there. In their affairs it cuts the same figure that our greenbacks, silver certificates, and silver coins cut in our affairs. It is to them what the paper currency of Holland and Belgium is to the masses in those countries—a local currency—almost the sole money of commerce. It has been and is to-day the lifeblood of commerce—the indispensable tool of commerce. It is at par with gold, and there is not the least likelihood that it will cease to be. It is not exportable, because it bears the stamp of the Hawaiian mints. So, no matter what the stress of hard times, this money of commerce will remain in the Hawaiian Islands. Why render it exportable? Who is to be benefited by doing so?

Three years ago the gentleman from Connecticut first concluded that it was essential to the welfare of the Hawaiian Islands that their money should be rendered exportable, so that as a commodity it would the better serve the purposes of the bankers and money dealers. He was just as insistent then as now. He declared then, as he does now, that the bankers were about to refuse to receive it—that a calamity was impending; but nothing of the kind has happened.

The trouble with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] is that he is trying continually to shape financial laws so as to help the banking business. He views money as a commodity pure and simple, and never as a tool—an implement to be used in effecting exchanges by the masses. He sees not the beneficence of a financial system which secures ample means of exchange to the many, whose trade is mainly in small transactions, but the inconvenience of such a system to the banker, who is thereby deprived of a field in which to farm out bank credits. As long as Hawaii's silver certificates and silver money fills the channels of trade, the banker must stand by and see the people get on with the minimum of bank credits. Convert all this silver into exportable subsidiary coin and in a little while the ideal system of entire dependency on bank credits will hold sway.

Mr. Chairman, I protest against this measure as part and parcel of a policy which for thirty-five years has subverted every precept of sound economics and reason in this country. For a generation Treasury policies, and more recently legislation, have proceeded upon the theory that to interpose the slightest barrier to the export of money as a commodity is vicious. The school of which the gentleman from Connecticut is a disciple have seemed to think that to even suggest a safeguard against the withdrawal of money from neighborhoods or its exportation involves dishonor and ruin. They have sought to so shape our financial laws and Treasury policies that when the international bankers and money dealers, as a means of profit, undertake to supply foreign money markets with needed specie—a mere business enterprise carried on for the profit there is in it—it is the duty of the public authorities—Presidents, legislators, and Treasury officials—to facilitate the enterprise. Instead of interposing barriers, we are told that it is the part of statesmanship to remove them.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, when disaster has resulted, as it necessarily must in times of great stringency, it has been pointed out that in every other country except ours there is a way of preventing or at least impeding the outflow of specie, and it is sternly and vigorously enforced. The Bank of England puts up the rate of discount and thus stops the flow of money out of England. The Bank of France increases its rates and pays out silver at its option, and prevents the outflow of gold from France. The banks of Germany put up the rate of discount, and that prevents the export out of Germany. But when our lawmakers approach this question, no matter whether it arises in connection with domestic exchanges, as in the matter under consideration, or out of the condition of international exchanges, the first cry of the Republican lawmaker is, how may we dovetail financial policies and the money-making schemes of bullion dealers and money merchants.

This money that is in circulation in the Hawaiian Islands has remained at a par with our gold and our national currency from the day the islands were annexed down to this time—about five years. It is at par now. It performs every office that money can perform. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], in the desperation of his fortunes, doubtless mistaking his imagination for his memory, tells us this money is not a legal tender. It is a legal tender. It was a legal tender at the time of annexation and must remain so, under the treaty, until the law making it a legal tender is repealed.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not now; I will yield to the gentleman presently. Undoubtedly by the treaty and the act of annexation it was continued as a legal tender, and undoubtedly no statute has been passed since demonetizing it. In the face of the gentleman's contention that it is not a legal tender is a section of the pending bill declaring that it shall continue to be a legal tender—a sufficient negation of his statement that it is not a legal tender. He says the organic act demonetized this silver money. Why, no such contention was ever made before, and there is absolutely no justification for it now.

Gentlemen refer to the fact that the money of the Hawaiians is not American money as if this were a misfortune. It is a blessing, because as long as it remains a local currency they will suffer no collapse from stringency. I would hail as a blessing to the whole country a system guaranteeing like immunity to the Western States. Great Britain has a system of provincial banks which furnish a local currency to the people of Scotland, Ireland, and Wales. Like this Hawaiian money, this bank currency is provincial. In times of panic it is not sent out of the neighborhood. It is useful only where it is uttered.

These provincial banks issue a large amount of this local currency—in Ireland, thirty millions; in Scotland, about thirty millions; in Wales, seven or eight millions; in England, in addition to the note issues of the Bank of England, five millions. In my judgment, this one feature of the British financial system is about the only one worth copying, yet it is the only one not sanctioned by the reigning American doctors of finance. It has measurably solved for England the conundrum over which the wise heads of the Republican party have perplexed themselves in vain for thirty years: How shall we make our currency more flexible? The British provincial banks of issue furnish to neighborhoods they serve precisely what this local coinage furnishes to the Hawaiian Islands—money with which to carry on their commerce day after day—money which can not be exported in good times or bad, because it is not the money of any other country.

In this connection, and as illustrative of the same proposition, I challenge attention to a significant chapter of our financial history. Since the formation of this Republic there has occurred just one panic in foreign countries which left us unscathed. In the early part of the century a panic abroad caused an appalling decline in values here and involved thousands in inevitable ruin.

Again in 1836 and in 1856 the same thing occurred. All these misfortunes were traceable to the export of specie from this country, responsive to the demands of foreign creditors who, driven to the wall by hard times, were compelled to collect from us. Then came a greater panic than any of these, a panic which involved British traders in greater losses than they had ever sustained before, and it was never heard of or felt by this country. I refer to the great panic of 1866, a panic unprecedented in the extent of the fall in prices and the widespread ruin it wrought. But we went along untouched and unscathed, our people hardly hearing of the fact that there was a panic abroad. Why? Because we were using a strictly local currency—paper money. The money of commerce in use in this country was not exportable.

It could not be withdrawn from the channels of trade and sent to foreign countries to fill up the vacuum in their circulation.

The silver money and silver certificates in use in the Philippine Islands is precisely such a currency. It serves the purposes of trade there from day to day. It is at par with our money. It is a blessing to the people of the islands. Its use injures no other section of the country. Three years ago the gentleman from Connecticut was seized with the fear that it would depreciate, but it retains equality with our gold. I am opposed to action based on the vagaries of the imagination of the gentleman from Connecticut.

I hope this bill will not pass. Possibly its passage would help a few bankers at Honolulu. I am inclined to think it would. Cancel and retire the Hawaiian silver certificates, and a money famine will follow. Then national-bank notes will take the place of this money, the people will pay and the bankers will receive interest on it. But, Mr. Chairman, no other interest and no other class in the Hawaiian Islands except the banking interest demands or will be benefited by this change in the law. All other classes will be injured by it. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will ask the gentleman from Connecticut to yield to me for half a minute.

Mr. HILL. I will do so with pleasure—one minute.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I sought to interrupt the gentleman from Missouri, but I will take this opportunity to say that the Delegate from the Hawaiian Islands has constantly insisted upon the passage of this law.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will throw that in with the other arguments that have been made in favor of this bill.

Mr. HILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote for the bill before the House; but as some of the distinguished leaders of my party are opposed to it, I do not care to cast that vote without giving a statement of the reason for it.

I do not think there is very much involved in the bill, either in the money question or in the matter of rights and humanity. But under the Constitution of the United States the power is vested in the Federal Government to coin the money of this country. It is vested there solely. It was the intention of the fathers that all the coin money used in this country should be of the same kind, that the coinage of the country should be uniform. For that reason they did not leave it to the States, but vested it in the Federal Government. Now, then, I find——

Mr. COCHRAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have only five minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will ask you if for the first fifty years foreign coin was almost exclusively used, notwithstanding that fact?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Hardly for fifty years, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN. Up to about 1856.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We had some to 1856, but as rapidly as the feeble Republic could do so it converted the Spanish mill dollar, to which my friend has referred, into coinage of the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does not the Constitution recognize the power to fix the value of foreign coin?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the intention of the fathers was that we should have one coinage, not the coinage of the States, but that where the eagle of the United States went it should represent a dollar, not of the State or Territory in which it is found.

There is only one question, and it is a very doubtful question, whether it is legal tender; but when we extended the Constitution of the United States to the Hawaiian Islands we extended the Federal laws, with all the general provisions, and thereby we extended the banking and currency laws of the country.

Mr. COCHRAN. Have not the States the power to make foreign coin legal tender?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not yield to the gentleman, as I have only a few minutes. When we extended our laws and carried the currency laws of the country to the Hawaiian Islands under that general provision, I believe it is probable we wiped out the laws of the Hawaiian republic that made this coinage legal tender. If that is so, this coinage is floated there by the will of the people and by the will of the banks and the will of the government to receive it. Now, why should that be the case? Why not convert it into the money of the United States? Why should we continue to have a coinage of a dollar on which we put the likeness of a negro queen? Why does that make that more valid and beneficial to the citizen of that country than to stamp the American eagle there and let it be an American dollar?

Now, as far as this case is concerned, it is true that they propose to coin two one-half dollars for a dollar. There is no loss. We simply substitute two good half dollars for every dollar. It will not take the money away from there. Necessarily the Government will have this money, and so will the banks. If this money is withdrawn it removes any doubt that the Government officials may have about accepting this coin, and instead of it being taken up and buried from circulation by curiosity hunters and relic seekers it is there and going to remain there, and remain for the benefit of the people. It does not cost the Government anything, because the difference in the seigniorage in coining it for the full amount and the subsidiary coin amounts to 7 per cent, and 7 per cent will overpay the cost of recoinage by more than $15,000. So that, so far as I can see, it will be a benefit to the people; and it is the duty of this country to see that American coin, stamped by American mints, takes the place of this one coin now circulating there. For that reason I will support the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. R. 148. Joint resolution to provide for the printing of a digest of the laws, decisions, and opinions relating to pardons and other acts of executive clemency under the United States and the several States; and

S. R. 149. Joint resolution providing for the reproduction of portraits to accompany eulogies of deceased Senators, Representatives, and Delegates.

HAWAIIAN SILVER COINAGE AND SILVER CERTIFICATES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HILL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the constitutional argument made by my friend from Alabama, and I will remind him that I have also read the Constitution, and that it gave to Congress the power "to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin." While we have always had that as law, we have had also foreign coin as part of our money which never circulated on a parity with American coin. This money is doing legal tender duty in Hawaii. In addition to that, in a few weeks—my friend from Maine will bear me out—we will be called on to pay for burning certain property in Hawaii to destroy diseases. Let this money alone and we will take it and pay these people, instead of our 200-cent dollars.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be but one argument against this bill and that is that the money is circulating at par, and therefore it is not wise to disturb it. I do not think that anywhere in the American Republic money should circulate with the face of any king or queen upon it.

But upon that question gentlemen are wrong in the position they take in regard to it. I will read from the official reply of the Hon. S. M. Damon to Commissioner Eustis under the date of December 22, 1902, cutting the entire letter down to the single proposition as to the money in circulation at par. He says:

The proposition appears to us to be so simple as to carry its own argument with it, and we merely mention it for the purpose of showing that the more considerable portion of the local business of this country is to-day being transacted with the currency of a defunct government which has absolutely no legal-tender value, which is intrinsically and in the marts of the world worth 66⅔ per cent less than its local conventional value. To prevent the panic, derangement of values, and entourage of commercial difficulties and perplexities which would ensue were any other course pursued, the banks of Honolulu have received Hawaiian silver coin at par with United States gold coin in all transactions and for all purposes.

That is, it is simply by agreement. The United States collector, the consul-general, prior to the Territory being annexed, tells me that he had the same arrangement; that he received it by an understanding with the banks that they would accept it from him. Now the question has arisen, how long are the banks going to keep that up, and the postmaster at Honolulu writes to the Post-Office Department as follows:

HONOLULU POST-OFFICE, Honolulu, Hawaii, May 20, 1902.

Hon. FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: With further reference to my letter of November 13 last, in re Hawaiian silver coin, I would again call your attention to the fact that some of the bankers here are again agitating the advisability of not receiving Hawaiian coin.

One bank here has deposited in its vaults about $200,000 silver, about four-fifths of which is Hawaiian, which they claim can not be sent to any other part of the United States in payment of debts, leaving about only one-fifth American silver available for that purpose.

While there is no threat made that they will refuse Hawaiian silver, there is a hint given that they may do so, in which case this office would have to do the same.

About the first of each month a great proportion of this coin is shipped to the various plantations to pay off the employees, but by the middle of the month it finds its way back to Honolulu again, considerable of it through the post-office, and is soon piled up in the banks as before.

I submit the above facts in order that the Department may be aware of the conditions that exist here, and perhaps take some immediate action before it is taken up here with perhaps serious results to the community.

Respectfully,

JOS. M. OAT, Postmaster.

It is money circulating by consent, with the image and superscription of the queen upon it. The purpose is to take it up and give back dollar for dollar in American money, with the eagle upon it. That is all there is to it. It is not a political question; it makes no difference whether this money circulates at par or not; it is a question whether we shall have American money in the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman is reading from a letter from somebody to somebody and regards that as his authority.

Mr. HILL. Not at all. I have consulted good and eminent lawyers in this House and submitted the papers to them as to whether, in their opinion, that money was a legal tender, and they were united in the opinion that it is not. Now, I add to that the official statement of the present Hawaiian government that there is no legal-tender quality that attaches to it at the present time.

Mr. COCHRAN. Has the statute making it a legal tender ever been repealed?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. By whom?

Mr. HILL. By the United States Government, referring to the organic act, which says:

That the Constitution, and except as herein otherwise provided, all the laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory as elsewhere in the United States.

Now, section 6 provides:

That the laws of Hawaii, not inconsistent with the laws or Constitution of the United States or the provisions of this act, shall continue in force, subject to repeal or amendment by the legislature of Hawaii or the Congress of the United States.

Now, I ask the gentleman, is a legal-tender act for a foreign coin made by a foreign government inconsistent or consistent with the laws of the United States?

Mr. COCHRAN. I will answer that. I believe the laws passed for the Hawaiian republic prior to annexation have the same binding force within their boundaries that the laws of an American State have. An American State has now the power to make any coin minted on the earth legal tender. It can, however, make nothing but gold and silver legal tender; and, with all deference to the distinguished lawyers on the other side, I advise that they take another look at this matter before giving a positive opinion upon it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that when this question was being discussed here in the House the gentleman from Ohio who reported the bill [Mr. SOUTHARD] stated that this money was all circulating at par with the money of the United States?

Mr. HILL. It is to-day, by agreement with the banks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for general discussion has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Connecticut concede that the banks over there have more power to degrade our money than the Government of the United States has to uphold it?

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. CONNER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries.

HAWAIIAN SILVER COINAGE AND SILVER CERTIFICATES.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

Section 2 was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. That when such coins have been received by either Government in sums not less than $500 they shall be deposited as bullion in the mint at San Francisco, Cal., and shall be recoined as subsidiary coinage of the United States. And the superintendent of the said mint shall pay for such coins, at their face value, to the proper officer or agent of the Government depositing the same, the sum so deposited, in standard silver coins of the United States. The expenses of transmitting said coins to and from the Hawaiian Islands shall be borne equally by the United States and the Territorial government of Hawaii.

The amendment reported by the committee, to strike out section 2 and insert the following, was read:

SEC. 2. That when such coins have been received by either Government they shall be transmitted to the mint at San Francisco, in sums of not less than $500, to be recoined into subsidiary silver coins of the United States, the expense of transportation to be paid by the United States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out in the proposed substitute for section 2 the words "subsidiary silver coins" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "coins of like denomination."

Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply provides that when this money, $500,000 of which is subsidiary coin and $500,000 Hawaiian dollars, shall be coined it shall be coined into money of the United States of like denominations.

I recognize that there is a difference between the Hawaiian coins and the United States coins in this: The United States silver dollar is an unlimited legal tender, while the Hawaiian dollar is limited in its legal tender quality to sums of $10. I am aware that the gentleman from Connecticut dissents from this view; but his very bill commits him to it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the power of issuing a silver certificate upon each one of these silver dollars, whether they be Hawaiian dollars or United States dollars, exists. The Hawaiian authorities had the right to issue silver certificates upon all these dollars, and of the $500,000 they have issued almost $450,000 in silver certificates. Now, this amendment simply provides that when you remelt these coins and convert them into United States coins for every dollar melted there shall be a United States dollar coined, and for every subsidiary coin melted, no matter of what denomination, there shall be a United States coin of like denomination issued. This policy would give the currency over there the same character that now exists, namely, the ability to pay large debts with silver certificates and smaller debts with small change. It seems to me the character of money which the people of Hawaii have found necessary to meet the needs of their commerce should be converted into identically the same character of United States money; in other words, that for a dollar of Hawaiian money there shall be a dollar of American money coined and for subsidiary coinage coins of corresponding denominations issued.

Now, the gentlemen upon the other side may say that this is converting a limited legal tender Hawaiian dollar into an unlimited legal tender American dollar, but I submit that the convenience of those people has to be taken into consideration. Their trade and their demands and their money have to be taken into consideration, and consequently we ought not to impose upon them the exchange of subsidiary coin for all of their currency, and that is what this bill provides, namely, the conversion of every one of their dollars and their silver certificates into subsidiary silver.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And there would be no loss to the holder on the dollar, either.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; there would be no loss to them in the way of exchange, because they would get a like dollar, which would have full legal-tender power, for this Hawaiian silver dollar.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. May I ask the gentleman a question for information?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand the gentleman to say that silver certificates are now outstanding against these Hawaiian silver dollars to the extent of about $450,000.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And if this bill passes with the gentleman's amendment, what would become of those?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, they have a provision in the bill, which I will read:

That silver coins heretofore struck by the government of Hawaii shall continue to be legal tender for debts in the Territory of Hawaii, in accordance with the laws in the Republic of Hawaii, until the 1st day of January, 1904, and not afterwards.

Now, that is supposed to operate in this manner, that the holder of a silver certificate, knowing that the silver dollar of Hawaii will not be legal tender after that time, will redeem his silver certificates in silver dollars and then ship them, or have the government ship them, to San Francisco for recoinage into American subsidiary coins.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will state to my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that the section which my friend from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] has just read provides that these silver coins shall remain as they are until the 1st of January, 1904; but the next section, 6, allows the silver certificates to remain as they are until 1905, and then there will be no existing coin to redeem those silver certificates, because they are redeemable in the Hawaiian coin on their face.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And not in the American coin?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No.

Mr. HILL. The amendment to section 2 was prepared by the Department, just as the amendment to section 8 was prepared by the Department. It is sent here by the Department to the committee. It simply expedites the manner of the exchange.

I think the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] is entirely mistaken as to the effect of this amendment. There will be no exact change of item for item, dollar for dollar, dime for dime. The Treasury Department will carry on this transaction precisely as they did in Porto Rico. They will probably send a man over there with an amount of money and give these people whatever they want, whether it is dollars or dimes or quarters, according to their requirements. It may all be paid for, for aught I know, in American gold or drafts on New York. They simply go over there and buy up this coinage at its face value, taking it in and recoining it. That is all there is to it.

Now, the effect of the amendment of the gentleman, I think, will be just simply this, that if the word "subsidiary" be stricken out, we will take half a million dollars of subsidiary coin and recoin it into full legal tender money of the United States. That would be the effect and the only effect of the amendment. The Treasury Department simply ask that they be left unhampered, so that they may go over and take up this coin and then give the people there anything they want for it—all dimes if they want it, all dollars if they want it—and then it becomes practically bullion in the United States Treasury at its face value. That is all there is to it. It would be an unfortunate amendment, I think. The committee were entirely unanimous, so far as I can recall, in regard to accepting the amendments of the Treasury Department, and I hope this will pass exactly as the Treasury Department desires to have it pass, in both of these cases, with reference to transportation and recoinage.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that he be recognized for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In answer to the gentleman, I want to say that the Committee on Territories, which had this measure up three years ago, reported a bill, and I think that bill was unanimously reported. It provided that the coins should be recoined into American coins of like denominations. We were perfectly willing to let that bill come up for consideration, but when the amendment which the gentleman from Connecticut offered, or said he would offer, came up, which provided that the silver dollars there should be recoined into subsidiary coin, then objection was made.

Mr. HILL. This was not my amendment. This is a Treasury Department amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think it was suggested by the gentleman and that he notified the Committee on Territories three years ago that he would move that, and that he would not consent to the bill going through if it had those words in it.

I call for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, on a division, demanded by Mr. SHAFROTH, there were—ayes 35, noes 41.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I call for tellers, and I should like to have the amendment reported so that it may be understood.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado will be again reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 11 of page 2 strike out the word "subsidiary" and insert, after the word "coin," the words "of like denomination."

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. HILL and Mr. SHAFROTH.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 78.

Accordingly the amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following, to be section 8:

"SEC. 8. That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of the expenses of transporting said coins from the Hawaiian Islands to the mint at San Francisco, and a return of a like amount in the subsidiary coins of the United States to the Hawaiian Islands."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. HILL, the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JENKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 2210) relating to Hawaiian silver coinage and silver certificates, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not, the Chair will submit them to the House in gross.

A separate vote was not demanded.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to; the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HILL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it would be proper to move that House bill 3056, being practically the same measure, be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

THIRD ANNUAL REPORT OF THE PHILIPPINE COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith send a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the third annual report of the Philippine Commission, covering the year ending October 1, 1902, and the laws passed by the Commission between July 1, 1902, and October 27, 1902.

I call your special attention to the recommendations contained in this letter of the Secretary of War. I most earnestly feel that the enactment of the measures already pending in your body for the betterment of the Philippine Islands is imperatively demanded by the situation in those islands, and serious calamity may come from failure to pass them. Furthermore, I with equal earnestness ask your attention to the recommendation of the Secretary of War in the accompanying letter, and urge its adoption, so that the sum of money therein specified may be appropriated for the uses and in the manner likewise specified, in order that the present distress in the islands may be remedied.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, January 7, 1903.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS AT JUNEAU, ALASKA.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4616.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 4616) to grant title to the town of Juneau, Alaska, of lands occupied for school purposes, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That certain real property now situated in the town of Juneau and district of Alaska, upon which the public-school building of the town of Juneau is now situated, and belonging to the United States of America, known as Government reservation No. 2, being all of block 23, except lots Nos. 5 and 6, in the town of Juneau, as the same appears of record on the official plat of the town-site trustee, be, and the same is hereby, granted to the incorporated town of Juneau for school purposes.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Add at end of the bill the following words: "and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to cause a patent to be issued therefor to such municipality upon proof of its incorporation."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad if the gentleman would tell us something about the value of this property and give a full explanation of the matter.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the situation of the property is simply this: Before the incorporation of the town of Juneau this reservation was used for school purposes. They have built valuable school buildings on the property; and now, since the town has been incorporated, they desire to get title to the land on which their school buildings are situated. At the time that the buildings were erected and the land originally located for that purpose there was no corporation that could legally accept title to that property. The value of the property depends upon the buildings that are upon it, and these buildings have already been erected at the expense of the citizens of Juneau.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This is the lot that is to be given. What is the size of the lot?

Mr. LACEY. The size is about a block. About an ordinary city block. The title is in the United States. The buildings have been erected on the site, and they are being used for school purposes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This bill simply donates to the municipality, as I understand, the ground upon which the buildings are erected, or the lot of ground, for school purposes alone. Is that it?

Mr. LACEY. That is the purpose, and it is recommended by the Department. The Department has no desire to have the Government continue in the ownership of the ground upon which the town school buildings are located.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And it has been reported by the committee?

Mr. LACEY. It is unanimously reported by the committee. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is this a free school?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, yes; it is a public school.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BIRTH AND DEATH REGISTRATION.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 184, requesting State authorities to cooperate with Census Office in securing a uniform system of death registration.

Whereas the registration of deaths at the time of their occurrence furnishes official record information of much value to individuals; and

Whereas the registration of deaths, with information upon certain points, is essential to the progress of medical and sanitary science in preventing and restricting disease and in devising and applying remedial agencies; and

Whereas all of the principal countries of the civilized world recognize the necessity for such registration and enforce the same by general laws; and

Whereas registration in the United States is now confined to a few States, as a whole, and the larger cities, under local laws and ordinances which differ widely in their requirements; and

Whereas it is most important that registration should be conducted under laws that will insure a practical uniformity in the character and amount of information available from the records; and

Whereas the American Public Health Association and the United States Census Office are now cooperating in an effort to extend the benefits of registration and to promote its efficiency by indicating the essential requirements of legislative enactments designed to secure the proper registration of all deaths and the collection of accurate mortality statistics, to be presented to the attention of the legislative authorities in nonregistration States, with the suggestion that such legislation be adopted: Now, therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States hereby expresses approval of this movement and requests the favorable consideration and action of the State authorities, to the end that the United States may attain a complete and uniform system of registration.

The amendments to the preamble were read, as follows:

In the second paragraph, first line, after the word "of," insert the words "births and."

In the sixth paragraph, fifth line, after the word "deaths," insert the words "and births;" also, same paragraph, line six, after the word "accurate," strike out the word "mortality" and insert in lieu thereof the word "vital."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendments to the preamble.

The amendments to the preamble were agreed to.

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

The joint resolution was then agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution requesting State authorities to cooperate with Census Office in securing a uniform system of birth and death registration."

On motion of Mr. BURLESON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. R. 148. Joint resolution to provide for the printing of a digest of the laws, decisions, and opinions relating to pardons and other acts of executive clemency under the United States and the several States—to the Committee on Printing; and

S. R. 149. Joint resolution providing for the reproduction of portraits to accompany eulogies of deceased Senators, Representatives, and Delegates—to the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11093. An act granting an increase of pension to Nannie M. Kimberly;

H. R. 13468. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph S. Mess;

H. R. 15605. An act to authorize and empower the Southwest Louisiana Rice Growers' Association, of the State of Louisiana, to construct a lock or locks and a dam in Bayou Vermilion, in the State of Louisiana; and

H. R. 15606. An act to authorize and empower the Rice Irrigation and Improvement Association, of the State of Louisiana, to construct a lock or locks and a dam in Mermentau River, in the State of Louisiana.

SITE FOR DEPOT FOR REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4096) to provide for a site for a depot for the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to acquire a suitable site upon which to establish a depot for the Revenue-Cutter Service, and for this purpose the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland if this is the same bill that the gentleman from Illinois objected to the other day.

Mr. MUDD. I do not know that there was any particular objection made to it.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not see the gentleman from Illinois here now and I think I will object to it.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LESTER indefinitely, on account of sickness.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House (at 2 o'clock and 12 minutes) adjourned until tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting reports of accounting officers of the Department showing what officers are delinquent in rendering their accounts and payment of balances—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an additional estimate of appropriation for the naval training station, Rhode Island—to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Supervising Architect submitting an estimate of appropriation for an additional building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16351) granting an increase of pension to Austin P. Merrell, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At a meeting of the Chesapeake Bay Fishermen's Protective Association, held at the Maltby House, in the city of Baltimore, on the 7th day of January, 1903, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this association views with genuine apprehension, as fraught with irreparable injury to the best interests of the menhaden fishing interests of the United States, the treaty negotiated by the Government of the United States with Great Britain, and signed at Washington on November the 8th, 1902, and relating to the commercial relations between the United States and the colony of Newfoundland, and most respectfully and earnestly request that the Senate of the United States, before which the same is now pending, will refuse to ratify and confirm the same.

Resolved further, That the secretary of this association forward a copy of these resolutions to each of the Senators from the States of Maryland and Virginia.

Resolved further, That the Hon. L. E. P. Denis deliver a copy in person to the Hon. George L. Wellington, Senator of Maryland.

GEORGE P. SQUIRE, President.

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. I present resolutions of Booth Camp, No. 255, Spanish War Veterans, of Albuquerque, N. Mex., favoring statehood for Arizona and New Mexico. I ask that the resolutions may lie on the table; but as they refer to statehood, in accordance with the precedent we have been establishing, I should like to have them read.

There being no objections, the resolutions were read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas it has been the sense of a majority of the Senate Committee on Territories to report adversely on the House bill admitting to statehood the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma, which was unanimously adopted by the latter; and

Whereas in their report they state that the citizens of these Territories, especially of New Mexico, are not fit to become citizens of a State: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That Booth Camp, No. 255, Spanish American War Veterans, of Albuquerque, N. Mex., do hereby call the attention of the honorable Senate of the United States to the fact that the Territory of New Mexico in the late war with Spain furnished proportionately as many, and perhaps more, volunteers than any other State or Territory in the Union, one man passing the rigid examination of the mustering officer for every 150 of population within her borders. The call of the President of the United States for volunteers found New Mexico's quota of 420 for the First United States Volunteer Cavalry, commonly known as the Rough Riders, filled within two days, with as many disappointed ones turned away. The second call for over 100 more men to fill the depleted ranks of the Rough Riders was filled with equal rapidity. The third call for four full companies of infantry for the First Territorial Infantry Regiment of Volunteers was responded to likewise, as was also the case in recruiting for the Thirty-fourth United States Infantry, which regiment saw service in the Philippines. That each and every man who went from this Territory did his full duty honorably in camp and on the battlefield can be attested by reference to the records of the War Department, as well as from the lips of the honorable President, Theodore Roosevelt, who commanded five troops from New Mexico, and to whom, at the first annual reunion of the Rough Riders at Las Vegas, N. Mex., he publicly pledged himself to support New Mexico and Arizona in their claims for statehood and stated that he would go to Washington and speak in our behalf. Be it further

Resolved, That while we call the attention of your honorable body to what New Mexico did in the war with Spain, we also wish to state that the feeling toward the flag of the United States will always remain the same, and that New Mexico would, in the event of another call, furnish twice or thrice the number mentioned who volunteered in the late war. Be it further

Resolved, That we call the attention of the honorable Senate to the fact that this was not only the case in the late war, but also in the war with Mexico, when New Mexico's volunteers to the Union Army of the United States was larger, proportionately, than that of any other State or Territory, and is a matter of record. Be it further

Resolved, That Booth camp join in the prayer of the great majority of citizens of New Mexico in asking that the coveted stars be placed in the great American Flag for the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to our good friend, the Hon. Matthew S. Quay, United States Senator from Pennsylvania, and to Hon. Bernard S. Rodey, New Mexico's Delegate in Congress.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on the Philippines, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 5th instant, proposing to appropriate $2,500,000 to enable the government of the Philippine Islands to advance money for the purchase of draft animals to be used in restocking the farms of the islands, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

A bill (S. 3514) granting an increase of pension to Theresia Ziegenfuss;

A bill (H. R. 14058) granting an increase of pension to Emil Pfeiffer;

A bill (H. R. 9977) granting a pension to Minerva Robinson;

A bill (H. R. 13143) granting an increase of pension to Susan Parker; and

A bill (S. 5952) granting an increase of pension to Henry L. Davenport.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3940) granting an increase of pension to Eliza C. Deery; and

A bill (S. 5662) granting an increase of pension to Henry Sickles.

Mr. QUARLES, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15066) to incorporate the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 6535) providing for the construction of light-house and fog-signal stations in Alaskan waters; and

A bill (S. 6536) providing for the construction of a tender for the Twelfth light-house district.

Mr. DEBOE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13565) granting a pension to Mary V. Scriven, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

MARY J. IVEY.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6693) granting a pension to Mary J. Ivey, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary J. Ivey, widow of Robert L. Ivey, late of Capt. J. A. Newman's company, Georgia Volunteers, and Capt. John C. Pelott's company, Florida Volunteers, Seminole Indian war, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORTAL, N. DAK., SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 15006) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statute in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It designates Portal, N. Dak., a subport of entry in the customs collection district of North and South Dakota, and extends the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," to said subport.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish Portal, N. Dak., a subport of entry and extend thereto the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880."

Mr. NELSON. I move that the bill (S. 6228) to establish Portal, N. Dak., a subport of entry and extend thereto the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, be taken from the Calendar and indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

OUTAGE OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 179) to amend the internal revenue laws, to report it favorably, without amendment, and to ask for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that all distilled spirits now in internal-revenue bonded warehouses or which may hereafter be produced and deposited in such warehouses shall be entitled to the same allowance for loss from leakage or evaporation which now exists in favor of distilled spirits produced, gauged, and so deposited prior to January 1, 1899, and subject to the same conditions and limitations.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMBER AND STONE IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am authorized by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16066) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the use of timber and stone for domestic and industrial purposes in the Indian Territory," approved June 6, 1900, to report it back favorably, without amendment, and as it will only take a minute to consider it, I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PROCTOR introduced a bill (S. 6798) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Sheldon; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. QUARLES introduced a bill (S. 6799) granting an increase of pension to Frank Lee; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DILLINGHAM introduced a bill (S. 6800) to authorize advances from the Treasury of the United States for the support of the government of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WELLINGTON introduced a bill (S. 6801) for the relief of Louise Steuart; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BEVERIDGE introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6802) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Kent;

A bill (S. 6803) granting an increase of pension to Ephraim Herriott;

A bill (S. 6804) granting an increase of pension to Aaron H. Watts; and

A bill (S. 6805) granting an increase of pension to Junius Abbott.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 6806) granting a pension to Mary A. Viel; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAPP introduced a bill (S. 6807) for the relief of the heirs of Rinaldo Johnson and Ann E. Johnson, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 150) tendering the thanks of Congress to the members of Company C, Ninth United States Infantry; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 151) tendering the thanks of Congress to Gen. Adna R. Chaffee and the officers and men under his command in China; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $46,500 for the assayer in charge, the clerical force, wages for workmen and assistants, and for incidental and contingent expenses at the assay office in Seattle, Wash., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12270) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians in the State of New York, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF MISSOURI.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate Senate bill 3316, being a bill to amend an act to create a new division in the western judicial district of the State of Missouri, approved January 24, 1901.

DISEASES OF TROPICAL COUNTRIES.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to send to the Senate copies of the reports of Dr. Samuel Holt Hodgson, of the Marine-Hospital Service, on the diseases of tropical countries of America, or any reports of their officers touching diseases of the insular countries of the Western Hemisphere in 1898 or since that time.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 184) requesting State authorities to cooperate with Census Office in securing a uniform system of birth and death registration was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Census.

GRANT OF SCHOOL LANDS TO JUNEAU, ALASKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4616) to grant title to the town of Juneau, Alaska, of lands occupied for school purposes, and for other purposes; which was, in line 11, after "purposes," to insert: ", and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to cause a patent to be issued therefor to such municipality upon proof of its incorporation."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not understand that the amendment imposes any additional limitations, but it permits patents. I therefore move concurrence in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HAWAIIAN SILVER CURRENCY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2210) relating to Hawaiian silver coinage and silver certificates.

The amendments of the House were, on page 1, to strike out all after line 9 down to and including line 5, page 2, and to insert:

SEC. 2. That when such coins have been received by either Government they shall be transmitted to the mint at San Francisco, in sums of less than $500, to be recoined into subsidiary silver coins of the United States, the expense of transportation to be paid by the United States.

On page 3, after line 20, to insert:

SEC. 8. That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of the expenses of transporting said coins from the Hawaiian Islands to the mint at San Francisco, and a return of a like amount in the subsidiary coins of the United States to the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Ohio to make a little explanation. Those are the only changes, I understand. Will the Senator state the effect of the changes?

Mr. FORAKER. They are the only changes made, and they are made upon the recommendation of the Treasury Department simply to facilitate the exchange of the coin.

The amendments were concurred in.

ANTHRACITE COAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day. It will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. VEST on the 5th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to prepare and report a bill amending "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, so that the tariff duty shall be removed from anthracite coal and the same be placed on the free list.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, it is evident that the resolution proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], if adopted, would not afford any measure of practical relief to the large number of people in this country who are suffering on account of the scarcity and high price of coal. I assume that the sympathies of every member of this body are as keen as those of the Senator from Missouri for those who under adverse circumstances are struggling at this inclement season to find the means of keeping warm, and I assume also that we are all as anxious as he is to do anything which can be done within the constitutional power of Congress to relieve the suffering of these people.

I will ask the attention of the Senate for a few moments to the practical character of the Senator's resolution. The Senator seems to be anxious that something should be done immediately to relieve the people, in which I agree with him, but he suggests a very unusual method to accomplish that result.

In the first place, he insists upon the formality of instructing the Committee on Finance to prepare and report a resolution to put anthracite coal on the free list. If the Senator was in the hurry he seems to imply by his language, he could have prepared at his desk in one minute a resolution, and could have presented it for the consideration of the Senate at once.

In the next place, his resolution is only partial in its application to the duties upon coal. It only applies to anthracite coal. The importations of anthracite coal into the United States have always been infinitesimal in amount, and would be under any circumstances. In a total importation, for instance, in the month of November, of, I think, something like 400,000 tons, the total anthracite importation into New York was about 63,000 tons.

The coal which would be most certain to come in, whether the duties are reduced or not, is the semibituminous or semianthracite or bituminous coal, such as is mined in Wales and in Canada and in other parts of the world; and this would still be dutiable if the resolution of the Senator from Missouri was adopted.

In the next place, the Senator proposes to afford this relief through a declaration of the power of the Senate to originate revenue bills. The precedents in the Senate and in the House, as well as the restrictions of the Constitution itself, from my standpoint, preclude that action. I understand, of course, that the Senator from Missouri may hold a different view. A different view has been announced by Senators upon the other side of the Chamber. But I submit to the Senate that an attempt to afford relief, which, as the Senator says, is demanded at once, through a method which would only precipitate a discussion here and elsewhere as to the constitutional rights of the Senate and as to the constitutional prerogative of the House of Representatives—a discussion which in its very nature would outlast the coal famine—is not a practical method of securing results.

Mr. HOAR. The House has always taken a position to the contrary.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; the House of Representatives has always affirmed the position to the contrary, and the Senate has universally yielded, whatever might have been the individual opinions of Senators as to that contention.

So far as I can see, the purpose of the Senator's resolution is simply to furnish the text for a political speech, or a series of political speeches, or to open here a partisan discussion upon the tariff, and especially upon the duty on coal and its relation to the trusts.

The Senator was kind enough to say, in the course of his discussion, that the reference of this resolution to the committee of which he is a member would be consigning it to the tomb of the Capulets. I will say to the Senator that the committee already have jurisdiction over this subject by the bill which was introduced by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]; that is, so far as jurisdiction can be conferred, and the reference by the Senate to the committee. If this matter is referred to the committee, I promise that Senator and the Senate that that committee will take the matter up at once and consider it in all of its aspects, with a view, if possible, of affording, by some constitutional method, the relief which he seeks.

Now, what has been done in somewhat similar cases by Congress in the past? I think the latest was an appropriation of the funds of the National Government to furnish shelter and food to the people of Galveston. There are a considerable number of other cases which have been supported, very often promoted, by Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, whose opinions as to the constitutional power of Congress are entirely at variance with my own. But there have been a number of cases that might, perhaps, in a certain sense be considered as precedents for the action in this case.

The case of Galveston I have already alluded to. I remember another case in which we appropriated money from the National Treasury to buy seeds for planters whose lands had been overflowed in the Mississippi Valley. I remember also that in certain cases we have remitted duties upon building material, and, possibly, upon other articles, to rebuild the city of Chicago and to relieve Eastport, Me., if I remember correctly, and, I think, in a number of other cases. In fact, Congress has undertaken, with the acquiescence, as I said, of Senators whose views upon this subject are radically different from my own generally, to furnish from the National Treasury means of relief in cases of distress and suffering. Therefore I am not entirely hopeless that some means may be found, if we shall have the acquiescence of the gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber, for the relief of some portion of the distress in this case.

The question of the proper duties upon coal is not an entirely new one in this Chamber. In the time I have been here I have heard it frequently discussed. So far as I know, there has been with a few exceptions a pretty nearly unanimous demand upon the other side for free coal. That demand has been most vociferously asserted for twenty years in this Chamber, always, I believe, except one day in the year 1894, when a tariff bill was here from the House of Representatives which removed all the duties upon coal. The Committee on Finance, then a Democratic committee, there being a considerable Democratic majority in this Chamber, had reported a bill. It proposed a duty of 40 cents on coal. The Senator from New York, Mr. Hill, when that item was reached, made a motion to strike out that item from the bill and to leave coal free, as it had passed the House of Representatives. Those of us who had listened to the arguments of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and his associates upon this floor day after day and month after month for years in favor of free coal were curious to see what would happen when the vote was taken upon that proposition. The Senator from Missouri and all of his associates upon that side, with the exception of Mr. Hill, voted against free coal and for the retention of a duty of 40 cents. In other words, for every day of twenty years, except the one day when it could have been had by their own votes, these gentlemen were in favor of free coal.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Missouri helped to frame the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri, of course, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, was one of the three Senators who framed the bill. He was a leading member of the Finance Committee and one of the members who voted against the free coal and for the imposition of the duty upon it. He was followed, as I said, by the solid vote of the Democratic side of this Chamber with the exception of the Senator from New York.

You have always been in favor of free coal when your opinions were of no value to the country. On the one day when by your own votes you could have given the country what you call the boon of free coal you deliberately and unanimously voted the other way.

I suggest that it comes with ill grace from Senators who have occupied this position to criticise the act of the Senate in 1897 in making the changes which they did in the House schedule.

The Senator from Missouri is mistaken in that regard when he says that the Dingley bill, so called, as it came from the House of Representatives, imposed a duty of only 40 cents a ton on coal. It imposed a duty of 75 cents, which was reduced here to 67 cents. It imposed a duty upon coal slack and culm, as I remember it, of 30 cents, which was reduced here to 15 cents.

Now, I do not believe that the Senator from Missouri or any Senator in this body will seriously claim that the duties upon coal have had anything to do with the existing conditions. The Senator alluded in the course of his remarks to the high price of wood in Missouri and said that the people were suffering on that account. Is that owing to the fact of the duties upon coal? The coal product of the United States to-day is equal to three-fourths of the combined product of the two other largest producing countries in the world—Great Britain and Germany. We are producing under normal conditions in the United States nearly 300,000,000 tons of coal. The largest importations which have ever taken place have been 400,000 tons in a month, or about 1 per cent of the current consumption.

The Senator alluded to the fact that the price of coal had been advanced from five to ten, twelve, or fifteen dollars a ton. Was that on account of the 67 cents duty which was imposed on coal containing less than 92 per cent of fixed carbon? Can any Senator contend that the duty has had any particular practical effect upon existing conditions?

Perhaps I should say a few words—I do not intend to occupy the time of the Senate at any length—in regard to that peculiar provision of the existing law which imposes a duty upon coal containing less than 92 per cent of fixed carbon. As I stated on the day before yesterday, in answer to the question asked me by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], that provision was inserted at the instance of a Senator from the Pacific slope, my friend the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS].

The statement was made to the committee that in California, from Australia, and possibly from British Columbia, large importations were being made of a semibituminous or a semianthracite coal containing a comparatively small per cent of carbon, which was being admitted into San Francisco as anthracite coal, free of duty. It was said to us that the admission of that coal was a fraud upon the revenue, was a fraud upon the coal producers of Washington and the other States on the Pacific slope, and that it should not be permitted any longer to go on. We were also told—and furnished the statements of experts—that any coal which contained 92 per cent or a greater amount of carbon was anthracite coal; that the Welsh coal contained at least 95 per cent of carbon; that true anthracite coal would still continue to be admitted to this country free of duty, and that the only kind of coal to be affected by the change were those of the nature I have suggested, of a semibituminous character, which were really bituminous coal and should be classified and a duty levied upon them as upon other bituminous coal.

This provision—and I say this in justice to the Pennsylvania interests, where all the anthracite coal deposits in this country are practically located—was opposed emphatically by the representatives of that industry. They said: "We do not want any duty upon anthracite; we are to-day exporting a very large amount of coal; and under no possible conceivable circumstances can there be any considerable importation of anthracite coal." Notwithstanding this protest, the committee, believing that there was certainly something in the statement of the Senator from California that was entitled to equitable consideration, adopted finally the provision which went into the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator from Rhode Island will permit me to say that in that proposition I had the support of my then Democratic colleague in the Senate, Mr. White.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is true.

Now, I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he allow this resolution, without contest, to go to the committee of which he and myself are both members and that we there honestly and earnestly take up this question with a view to seeing if we can, within our constitutional rights and privileges, find some method by which we can furnish relief promptly and efficaciously to the people who are suffering in the manner which the Senator has so graphically described.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, if any additional argument were necessary with me why this resolution should not go to the Committee on Finance it has been furnished by the remarks of the chairman of that committee. It can be read between the lines that he is opposed to the adoption of the resolution.

As I said the day before yesterday, why should this resolution go to the Committee on Finance? Bills and resolutions are sent to committees in order to obtain information. What information do we desire? How long are we to debate this question when the country is in the condition in which it is now? If a blizzard should come, as is now threatened, what would be the result in the seaboard cities, throughout the country? There would be suffering, disease, and death; and in the meantime the Committee on Finance would be looking for some constitutional method to give relief to the freezing people of the country.

Mr. President, I object to the resolution going to that committee. I repeat, that it goes to the legislative tomb of the Capulets. I have served in this body long enough with the Senator from Rhode Island to know that if he wants to destroy a bill or resolution, no member in this body is more adroit or successful. What chance would the resolution have in that committee after what he has said here to-day?

The Senator speaks of the great inconsistency on my part and on the part of other Democrats who want to put anthracite coal on the free list, and he cites the fact that when the Wilson bill—also called the Wilson-Gorman bill—in 1894 was before this body, the then Senator from New York, Governor Hill, who was opposed to the bill which we reported, with whom I contended for a week on this floor while the Republicans of the Senate sat silent, enjoying the combat between two Democrats, moved to put coal on the free list; and he did it, as every Senator here knew, for the purpose of embarrassing the majority of the Finance Committee, then Democratic, and for the purpose of beating the bill that we were then attempting to pass through Congress.

The Senator from Rhode Island knows as well as I know how that 40 cents a ton happened to be put upon coal in the Wilson bill. It is an open secret, known to everybody, that there were five Democratic Senators opposed to the bill who were in such a position that they were enabled to dictate what should be placed in the bill, as without their votes its defeat was absolutely certain. A large majority, and, in fact, all except those five Senators, were in favor of free coal.

I can speak now without violating any rule of the Senate of what happened in the caucus and the committee so far as the Democrats were concerned in regard to that coal tax. The President of the United States, at that time Mr. Cleveland, urged free coal upon the Congress, and we endeavored—I mean the majority—to put such a provision in the bill.

But, to use the plain vernacular, we were held up and told that if we dared to put free coal into the bill the measure would be defeated, and without four of the votes out of the five of those opposed to the bill defeat was absolutely certain. We compromised upon 40 cents a ton. Those were the best terms that the majority could obtain; and when an opponent of the bill joined the Republicans, who were anxious to beat it in any way, and moved to put coal upon the free list, we voted against the motion in order to carry out the compromise and pass the measure with a duty on coal of 40 cents on the ton.

But what does that amount to now? What does it now matter how anybody voted in 1894? Is that an answer to the poor, freezing people who now demand immediate relief from present conditions? The question with us is, What shall we do now? Shall we spend our time in sending a relief measure to a committee that we know to be opposed to it? Is that the remedy we propose?

The Senator speaks of the constitutional objections to the Senate moving in this matter. The Constitution of the United States says that all measures "for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives." That provision came down to us, as every schoolboy ought to know, from that terrible struggle in England between the Commons and the Lords and the King; and the Commons finally triumphed, after a civil war, by putting the provision into the laws of England that all taxing bills or bills to raise revenue should first come from the immediate representatives of the people. If Senators will take the trouble to examine the debates on the Constitution in 1789, they will find that this provision in the Constitution of the United States came to us from our British forefathers, with the addition that after a bill to raise revenue had originated in the House of Representatives and come to the Senate the power of amendment in this body was expressly provided for.

But, Mr. President, I am anxious to secure some sort of a vote, and with a few other remarks in answer to the Senator from Rhode Island and in justice to myself, I shall leave this matter to the Senate.

I stated yesterday that Mr. Dingley, the author of the Dingley bill, had declared that the duties in that bill were made higher than they would have been in order to form a basis or margin for the creation of commercial treaties or reciprocal treaties or arrangements with foreign nations. I made that statement upon information which I believed to be absolutely correct, and I will ask the Secretary to read the newspaper clipping which I send to the desk from the Washington Post of September last, to which my attention was called at the time, and that statement was repeated several times after its first publication.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

> The Post has repeatedly stated that Mr. Dingley and his Republican associates on the Ways and Means Committee put some of the schedules higher than they would have been if they had not been framed with a view to early reduction through reciprocity treaties. The Bulletin asserts that Mr. Dingley, while he was engaged in framing the present tariff, frankly declared in a private conversation with the editor of the Bulletin that he believed that some of its schedules were too high to be permanently maintained. He said:
>
> "We are purposely making them too high, because we want them as a basis which will enable us to offer foreign countries material inducements to enter into reciprocity treaties with us. When other nations seek closer commercial relations with the United States we can largely reduce duties in many directions in return for the entrance of American products into their markets without depriving our own industries of the protection which they really need."

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. What is the date of the communication or editorial, whichever it may be, which has just been read?

Mr. VEST. September 20.

Mr. HALE. Last September?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary informs the Chair that the editorial is dated September 20, 1902.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish——

Mr. VEST. Did the Senator from Maine ask me another question? I could not hear.

Mr. HALE. I was going to say—I do not wish to interrupt the Senator by saying anything that will interfere with his time—upon this newspaper article that is brought in, containing a most remarkable statement of what Mr. Dingley, who was a colleague of mine in the House of Representatives, said in some private way, that the statement is not made until nearly four years after Mr. Dingley's death. It was never made in his lifetime, though he lived and was a great and useful public servant for a year or more after the passage of the bill bearing his name.

Mr. Dingley was a man of great integrity, private and public. He secured the confidence of the great body of which he was a member by an outright, plain, and simple way of stating his convictions upon every subject. He mastered the details of every subject. He was subjected in that body to constant questioning and scrutiny and the clearest and closest and fiercest observations; and yet never during the time when he was ably conducting to a final and triumphant passage the great bill that bears his name was any intimation given or heard from anywhere that, deliberately, the schedules in the Dingley tariff bill had been marked up, as a tradesman marks up his goods, in order to take them down afterwards. That was not Governor Dingley's style of legislating.

I have no doubt whatever that this report is entirely baseless. If any man to-day has led himself to believe that Governor Dingley ever made such a statement as that, he is mistaken.

The Dingley bill had the merit of entire freedom and clearness and amplitude, and shirked at nothing. It never pretended to be anything more than it was—a great, magnificent, and munificent gift to the American people in the cause of protection and prosperity.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish merely to say a word about this matter of the constitutional right of the Senate to institute a bill like this.

The introduction of bills or resolutions in the Senate is well enough to make known the individual opinion and purpose of their author or on which to hang debate, but they are as idle and futile as a method of advancing desired legislation as can possibly be imagined.

The House of Representatives has declared more than once in formal and in informal controversies with the Senate that, in its judgment, a bill to reduce or abolish a duty came within the constitutional privilege of the House, because, although it did not precisely raise revenue, the revenue which it took away must be replaced or might ordinarily be required to be replaced by the raising of other revenue, which would be germane and almost inextricable in the same bill, and, therefore, the two subjects were absolutely inextricable.

The House of Representatives once, as I am reminded by my honorable friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], passed unanimously a resolution to this effect:

Resolved, That this House maintains that it is its sole and exclusive privilege to originate all bills directly affecting the revenue, whether such bills be for the imposition, reduction, or taxes, and in the exercise of this privilege, in the first instance, to limit and appoint the ends, purposes, considerations, and limitations of such bills, whether relating to the matter, manner, measure, or time of their introduction, subject to the right of the Senate to "propose or concur with amendments, as in other bills."

Mr. President, that resolution was not only supported by the unanimous vote of the House, which is pretty important authority, but it also was supported by very high individual authority. It is signed Samuel Hooper, long chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House of Representatives, one of the clearest-headed, wisest, and ablest of men who ever dealt with that difficult branch of legislation. Mr. Hooper is dead.

The next name signed to that report is that of WILLIAM B. ALLISON, in whose eulogy in the course of nature it is not likely it will be assigned to me to take part, and I, therefore, will omit what every other member of the Senate knows it is not necessary to say.

The third authority is that of Mr. Daniel W. Voorhees, the last Democratic chairman of the Finance Committee in the Senate, and the chairman of the committee that reported the last Democratic tariff bill.

Now, in the face of that claim of the House of Representatives so supported—and that was not the first time the House had taken that attitude—is it not apparent that the Senator from Missouri introduces this resolution for the purpose of making his admirable speech, and that he can not possibly have the least idea that within the six or seven weeks which remain of this session he shall first have persuaded the House of Representatives to yield its constitutional prerogative and then have settled the perplexing question of the duties on coal?

But, Mr. President, that is not all. The greatest constitutional authority in this country—save Marshall, as we all agree on both sides—Mr. Webster, declared in the Senate that, whatever might be the opinion of the Senate on this question, it was in the nature of the case absolutely clear that it was a matter which must be settled always by the sole opinion of the House of Representatives, and that, whatever the Senate might think, the House was the sole constitutional judge of the extent, meaning, and scope of that constitutional provision.

A little reflection will show that Mr. Webster was clearly right. We can not refuse to consider a House bill on such a subject, because we are bound to consider their bills, and we do not deny that they have the right to originate them. So of course we can not interfere with their bills. On the other hand, the House has a perfect right to refuse to consider bills which it regards as bills for raising revenue, when they come from the Senate, on the constitutional ground that we have nothing to do with that subject in its origin, and we can not help ourselves.

So practically the Constitution has tied our hands, and the worst thing that can happen to the cause of relieving the present distress of the people by getting free coal, either for a time or permanently, is what the Senator from Missouri has caused to happen, as far as he can—that is, the stirring up of a controversy between the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. VEST and Mr. MORGAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a single moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MORGAN. I thought the Senator from Missouri had yielded the floor.

Mr. VEST. Of course I will yield for a question. I have never declined to yield to anyone since I have been a member of this body.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will withdraw the request if it is not agreeable to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I am perfectly willing to yield to the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. I simply want to make a statement, which will take about two minutes, to supplement the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The Senate itself in precisely the same character of case arrived at the same conclusion in 1844——

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think, Mr. President, that this resolution can be disposed of until the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] have been discussed to some extent.

Mr. ALDRICH. In 1844 a bill was offered in the Senate to reduce the duties imposed by the act of 1842. It was referred to the Committee on Finance, of which George Evans, a great man from the State of Maine, one of the ablest men we have ever had at the head of that committee, was chairman. He reported it back with a resolution that a bill to reduce duties was not within the constitutional power of the Senate to originate and pass.

This resolution was discussed for several months. It was finally passed on the 31st day of May, 1844, by practically a unanimous vote of the Senate—by a vote of 31 to 4—and among the Senators supporting it I will mention the names of James A. Bayard, Thomas H. Benton, James Buchanan, Rufus Choate, John M. Clayton, Nathaniel Niles, William C. Rives, James F. Simmons, and Silas Wright.

Both sides of the Chamber, all the political parties, united in the solemn declaration that in their opinion a bill to reduce revenue was not such a bill as it was competent for the Senate of the United States to originate.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I was very well aware when I introduced this resolution of the great difference of opinion that existed upon the constitutional question which has just been discussed. I preferred offering the resolution, however, to introducing a bill, because, as I stated day before yesterday, I believed that the bill would be referred to the Committee on Finance under the ordinary rules of the Senate and would there be disposed of in a pigeonhole and never be heard of afterwards.

My object in offering the resolution instructing the Committee on Finance was to call attention to the condition of the country and to direct the attention of Congress particularly to the necessity of some action. I was aware perfectly, without further information on the subject, that the House of Representatives would resist our right even to reduce taxes, as they have always done, but when the President of the United States called upon Congress in his message to remove the duty on anthracite coal, and more than a month elapsed, and we were in the midst of a coal famine, with the hardest months of the whole winter at our doors, and nothing was done by his own party, I thought that even a poor Democrat could make a suggestion which might hurry action upon this important question.

I waited until after the recess; waited until coal had come to such a price as to be beyond the reach of the poor, and even the middle classes, in the seaboard cities and throughout the country. No action was taken; no suggestion was made; and it seemed to me, without any partisan view or any personal object—my career being about to close in public life—it seemed to me, as a matter of sheer duty, that somebody should take the initiative, and excite, if that is the proper word, some action by the Congress of the United States in this great emergency.

All I want is a vote, because the expression of opinion even by the Senate of the United States will hasten action upon the part of the House and do away with the necessity of spending weeks in the discussion of the constitutional rights of the Senate to lower taxes. I have my own opinion on that question, notwithstanding the great authority cited by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Rhode Island. I have endeavored to study the origin of that clause in the Constitution, and I believe the Senate has the right to reduce taxes, no matter what may be said by the House of Representatives. The Supreme Court of the United States has never decided to the contrary. All that can be cited here are the opinions of public men and votes in the Senate upon that question years ago.

But, now, Mr. President, I was prevented from placing before the Senate a paper which I want the Secretary to read. I will ask him to read this letter, with the accompanying newspaper clipping, and I will explain how and why I obtained it. I recur now to the statement in regard to Mr. Dingley, for whom I had very great regard and against whose memory I would not utter one single syllable or suggestion. He was a pure man. I did not agree with him politically, but I served on committees with him, and I always found him a perfectly frank, honest public man in every regard. Our personal relations were always of the kindest character. I realized in his case, as in that of many others of political opponents, the great truth uttered by President Garfield, when speaking of his political opponent, Allen G. Thurman, alluding to their personal relations, that the sweetest fruit often hung over the party wall. That is my experience.

After my attention was called to these repeated publications in the Washington Post that Mr. Dingley had made this statement to the editor of the Philadelphia Bulletin, knowing the Bulletin to be a stanch Republican paper, a great defender of the protective system, I telegraphed to the editor of that paper and requested him to write me what were the facts and if Mr. Dingley had ever made the statement attributed to him by the Post; that I had quoted the statement, giving the substance of it, in the Senate; that it had been emphatically contradicted by the Senator from Rhode Island, the chairman of the Finance Committee; that I did not want to be put in the position of manufacturing a statement which might be construed to reflect upon a public man, now dead, for whom I had the kindest regard.

Now I will ask the Secretary to read the letter and the extract inclosed.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE EVENING BULLETIN,
THE BULLETIN COMPANY, W. L. MCLEAN, PRESIDENT,
Philadelphia, January 6, 1903.

Hon. GEORGE G. VEST,
United States Senate Chamber.

DEAR SIR: The statements referred to in the inclosed editorial article, which was published in the Bulletin September 20, 1902, were made in a conversation between Mr. Dingley and a writer who is now on the staff of the Bulletin. The interview took place in March, 1897, at the hotel in Washington where Mr. Dingley was stopping, and he was then engaged in framing the tariff which afterwards bore his name.

Mr. HALE. Will the Secretary again read the statement with respect to the date when the conversation is alleged to have taken place?

The Secretary read as follows:

The interview took place in March, 1897.

Mr. HALE. That is the date.

The Secretary continued and concluded the reading of the letter, as follows:

The interview took place in March, 1897, at the hotel in Washington where Mr. Dingley was stopping, and he was then engaged in framing the tariff which afterwards bore his name.

The conversation, you will bear in mind, was entirely of a private and confidential character.

Yours, very truly, WILLIAM PERRINE.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. VEST. Let the Secretary read the article.

The Secretary read as follows:

PUBLIC SENTIMENT AND THE TARIFF.

The stir which has arisen in Republican ranks over the question of tariff revision in accordance with the lines laid down in the Iowa Republican platform calls attention to the fact that a foundation for the substantial modification of existing high duties already exists in the list of reciprocity treaties which have long been pending before the United States Senate.

There are more than a dozen of these treaties, including commercial agreements with France, with most of the West Indian Islands, and with several South American countries. If President Roosevelt should urge their ratification, and if he should be able to command a sufficient number of votes in the Senate to secure the acceptance of this policy, an important step would be taken toward the removal of trade restrictions which a growing body of Republican sentiment is disposed to consider as onerous and unnecessary.

In connection with this development it is worth while now to recall the fact that the late Representative Dingley, while he was engaged in framing the present tariff, frankly declared in a private conversation that he believed that some of its schedules were too high to be permanently maintained.

"We are purposely making them too high, because we want them as a basis which will enable us to offer foreign countries material inducements to enter into reciprocity treaties with us. When other nations seek closer commercial relations with the United States we can largely reduce duties in many directions in return for the entrance of American products into their markets without depriving our own industries of the protection which they really need."

The death of the former chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has removed the seal of secrecy from this statement to us, and his words are of especial interest at the present time when the question of lowering duties is engaging the minds of so many Republicans. Nobody in his senses would ever have accused Mr. Dingley of disloyalty to protection principles. His utterances five years ago, before the trust issue had assumed present proportions and before such consolidations as the United States Steel Company were created, assuredly indicate that if this particularly stanch protectionist were in public life to-day his voice would be heard in favor of judicious tariff changes which should curb the accumulation of gigantic profits at home and strengthen the foothold of American commerce abroad.

That this was the fixed purpose of President McKinley when in his memorable last speech at Buffalo he declared, "The period of exclusiveness is past," can not be doubted by reasonable and unprejudiced men. If McKinley's successor, in his speeches throughout the West where Republican belief in tariff modification is apparently steadily increasing in strength, shall enunciate the same purpose, it looks as if he might not only command a formidable degree of public support, but deprive the Democrats of about the only available asset in the way of political issues which they have left for 1904.

Mr. HALE and Mr. VEST addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator from Missouri yielded the floor?

Mr. VEST. I prefer, if the Senator from Maine will permit me, to make a few remarks, and then he can take the floor.

Mr. HALE. I will certainly wait until the Senator finishes.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it will be said, doubtless, as was stated the other day by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that the reciprocity clause of the Dingley Act was inserted by the Senate and not by the House of Representatives when Mr. Dingley framed the bill. But that amounts to nothing when analyzed. It is perfectly consistent with the report made by the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin as to what Mr. Dingley told one of the editors or correspondents of that paper. Those remarks are perfectly consistent with the statement by Governor Dingley that the duties were put higher with a view to reciprocity in the future. That he did not put the provision for reciprocity in the bill in the House amounts to nothing as an argument, because he might have contemplated, as was eventually the case, reciprocal arrangements in the form of treaties. Those treaties are now pending in the Senate.

Not to weary the Senate by further remarks and arguments on this question, I have here a newspaper extract which I will ask to have inserted in my remarks without being read. It is taken from the Evening Post of New York, and gives a very valuable statement in regard to the legal status of the question of the duty on anthracite coal after the passage of the Dingley Act. I wish it to be read and laid before the Senate to show that the question whether there is a duty on anthracite coal has been determined by the courts, including the Supreme Court of the United States, and that the legal status of this question has been fixed absolutely by judicial interpretation. I will ask the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read as follows:

"The two sections (415 and 523) of the act may be combined, and form one clear, concise, and logical enactment, providing that coal of any description whatsoever, containing less than 92 per cent of fixed carbon, is liable to a duty of 67 cents per ton, while anthracite coal, containing 92 per centum and more of fixed carbon, is to be admitted free."

An appeal was taken by the importer from the decision of the United States circuit court to the United States circuit court of appeals, and the opinion of that court will be found in 100 Fed. Rep., 442 (Feb. 5, 1900), and this court unanimously sustained the lower court, and in its opinion states:

"The ordinary and plain meaning of these paragraphs would seem to leave no doubt as to their proper construction. Read in pari materia they are susceptible of but one meaning. * * * If it be true, as appellant claims, that no anthracite coal exceeds the per cent on which the duty is imposed, then the argument here made should be addressed to Congress, with the view of securing a change in the law, instead of to the courts. We do not make the law, nor have we any right to amend; and it is not within our province to question its wisdom, policy, or expediency."

The importer tried to appeal from this decision to the United States Supreme Court, and presented his petition to that court for a writ of certiorari, which was denied April 23, 1900. And presumably the Supreme Court held the same views of this law as the lower courts, otherwise it would no doubt have granted the petition.

So that this question of whether anthracite is free has been litigated to the fullest extent permissible under our laws. And the question as a matter of law is fully and finally settled, and has been for several years.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, there is another point. My attention has been called to a very singular condition of affairs at certain ports of entry of the United States on the Atlantic seaboard. Since the passage of the Dingley Act the collectors, appraisers, and naval officers to whom by law is committed that duty have analyzed and tested all coals coming into the United States from foreign countries, and if they found that there was less than 92 per cent of fixed carbon they have imposed a duty of 67 cents a ton. If, on the contrary, the analyses and tests showed that there was more than 92 per cent of fixed carbon, the coal was permitted to enter duty free. This was in strict accordance with the provisions of law, and they simply observed their oaths when they carried out their duties under those provisions.

When it became evident that any adjustment of the difficulties in the anthracite region was almost impossible, and when the President found it his duty to ask for interviews between the coal barons and the representatives of the labor unions, the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Shaw, issued an order—a most remarkable order, it seems to me—in September last, that after October 1 when a controversy arose between the United States and the importers of foreign coal as to whether they were dutiable or not all doubts should be solved by the officers at the ports of entry in favor of the importer. This was obviously done by the Secretary of the Treasury to induce the importation of foreign coal without touching the sacred white elephant of the Dingley tariff.

Under that instruction a singular state of affairs has come to pass. At two of the largest ports of the United States, Philadelphia and New York, the officers—the collectors—instead of applying the analyses and tests which the law requires, take the affidavit of the importer as conclusive; and of course—I say "of course," that is human nature—he endeavors to make the impression that his coal is above 92 per cent of fixed carbon in order to escape any duty at all.

At two other ports, the two next in size, Boston and Baltimore, the officers refuse to pay any attention to this extraordinary order by the Secretary of the Treasury, and they now apply the analyses and tests as was their duty and is their duty to do. So we have one rule in one port and another in another; and I ask the Secretary now to read three letters, one from the collector of the port of Boston, one from the collector at Baltimore, and one from the collector at Philadelphia. These letters were in reply to applications by Mr. W. J. Gibson, a reputable attorney in New York, and were published by him in the Evening Post. I will ask the Secretary now to read the three letters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

CUSTOMS SERVICE, OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR,
Baltimore, Md., December 10, 1902.

WILLIAM J. GIBSON, Esq.,
31 Nassau Street, New York, N. Y.

SIR: This office is in receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, asking to be informed if any duty has been collected at this port on anthracite coal since October 1, 1902; and if an analysis or test is made of all anthracite coal imported where it is alleged to contain 92 per cent or more of carbon.

Replying to your first inquiry, I have to say that duty has been assessed on anthracite coal since the date mentioned; and to the second, analysis has been made of all anthracite coal imported here.

Respectfully, yours, P. F. STONE, Collector.

CUSTOMS SERVICE, OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR,
Boston, Mass., December 10, 1902.

WILLIAM J. GIBSON, Esq.,
Attorney at Law, 31 Nassau street, New York.

DEAR SIR: Replying to yours of the 9th instant, I would say that since October 1 last duty has been collected on all anthracite coal imported into this port. There have been importations of such since the 7th idem.

An analysis or test has been made of all such coal where the importer claimed or made oath it contained 92 per cent or more of fixed carbon.

Respectfully,

GEORGE H. LYMAN, Collector.

CUSTOMS SERVICE, OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR,
Philadelphia, Pa., December 10, 1902.

WILLIAM J. GIBSON, Esq.,
31 Nassau street, New York, N. Y.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 9th instant, I have to inform you that since October 1, 1902, there have been two cargoes of anthracite coal imported into this port. The said coal was classified free of duty under paragraph 523 of the present tariff act. No analysis was made. The coal was passed free of duty upon the oath of the importer that it did not contain less than 92 per cent fixed carbon.

Respectfully,

L. G. MARTIN,
Special Deputy Collector.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have had those letters read to verify my statement that at one port one rule obtains and at another port on the same seaboard a very different rule obtains. I do not bring this to the attention of the Senate as a reflection upon the Administration, but I do bring it to the attention of the Senate to show that the Secretary of the Treasury unites with the Secretary of the Navy and with the President of the United States in advancing and promoting the idea that the introduction of foreign coal is the remedy and the mode of relief for the terrible condition that now prevails in the United States.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, only a single word in reference to the introduction into this question of alleged private communications from Governor Dingley of a character wholly and radically opposed to all his public utterances upon the question and therefore involving him in a charge of insincerity.

Governor Dingley's memory is very dear to the State of Maine. His character was well established there. His range of vision and action was greatly enlarged beyond that State, and he became an authority in whom men in Congress and throughout the United States were glad to trust and believe, and when he died he had a world-wide reputation based upon what is the rock foundation of good reputation—character. No man entitled to that reputation ever did what it is alleged that Governor Dingley did—declare that the bill whose paternity was his did not to the public convey the purposes of its authors and framers, but was a delusion and a snare, and, to repeat the illustration I have used once, that in it he had marked up his goods in order that they might be cut down afterwards.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that he is probably using stronger language than the occasion warrants. I can see nothing that reflects upon Governor Dingley in this matter in the light of events. The fact that we have pending before the Senate these very reciprocity treaties in which there are great concessions on tariff duties, and which would encourage trade if they were ratified by this body, is the strongest evidence to my mind that whatever may have been Governor Dingley's purpose in putting these duties high, the policy of his party has been exemplified in the fact that those treaties have been had with foreign powers and are now pending here and that nothing but the selfish greed of the people whose protection is reduced prevents the ratification of the treaties.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. And I do not think Governor Dingley, if I may be permitted, as one humble Democrat, to express the opinion, needs any defense whatever.

Mr. HALE. The Senator would hear from Governor Dingley if he were alive and present upon this floor when this charge has been made, and he would hear from Governor Dingley in no uncertain tones.

I am not dealing with the general question of reciprocity treaties. Let us see what it is that the advocates for a change in the tariff upon coal, or whatever it may be, are driven to for argument—the alleged declaration of the man who had charge of the Dingley bill. Now, what is it? That in March, 1897, Governor Dingley made the statement privately, not it seems to an editor whose name we know, but to a correspondent whose name we do not know.

Mr. CARMACK. A member of the editorial staff.

Mr. HALE. We do not know his name. It is all unknown and blind. It is that Governor Dingley at that critical time, in March, 1897, made the deliberate statement that he had marked up the schedules on the Dingley bill for the purpose of giving away a portion of them upon reciprocity agreements and arrangements that were afterwards authorized by the bill.

Mr. President, to begin with, nothing was heard by anybody that Governor Dingley had made that remarkable statement until September, 1902—more than five years afterwards—when a newspaper makes this declaration; and at the time when it is alleged that this conversation took place, in March, 1897, not one single thing with reference to reciprocity had been embodied in the bill. Governor Dingley, who was not only able and intelligent, but perfect and complete in his knowledge of the subject, having charge of the bill, trusted by his associates, sustained in the entire bill, had never thought, apparently, certainly had never uttered a word indicating, that there were to be incorporated into the bill these reciprocity arrangements. The bill passed the House and came to the Senate on the very last day of March. Everything in relation to reciprocity was afterwards inserted here in the Senate.

The Senator from Missouri sees the dilemma he is put into, because he has looked at the dates and finds it was impossible that Governor Dingley could have said that. The Senator says he might have had that in his mind and intended to do that. Governor Dingley was a man who, if he had a measure of legislation in his mind upon a bill he had charge of, would have incorporated it into the legislation while the bill was in his hands. But it came——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I simply wish to ask the Senator whether it might not have been possible that Governor Dingley, when speaking of reciprocity treaties or instruments of any kind, had in his mind a reciprocity treaty which would not be authorized by the House of Representatives, but which would originate with the Executive in the same way as the pending reciprocity treaty between this Government and the Government of Cuba?

Mr. HALE. No; that is not possible. Governor Dingley was under fire constantly. The debates will show that there was no range of this question he was not interrogated upon, and it is remarkable——

Mr. BACON. The Senator certainly did not understand my inquiry. Possibly it was my fault that I did not make it plain. The Senator will recognize the fact that it is contended by many that a treaty for the purpose of effecting reciprocal arrangements relative to the tariff can originate with the Executive and be ratified by the Senate in the absence of anything in a legislative enactment by Congress directing or authorizing the same. An illustration of that fact is found in the pending treaty between the United States and Cuba for a reciprocal reduction of tariff duties.

Now, the inquiry I make of the Senator, and I do it in furtherance of what I think is justice to Governor Dingley and to remove any idea of impropriety, is whether it is necessary that Governor Dingley should have anticipated the matter of reciprocity and at the same time have limited it to a case where it would have been authorized, as it ultimately was, in the Dingley Act, or might he not have had in contemplation a reciprocity treaty such as that which is now pending between the United States and Cuba, which has not had any legislative authorization?

Mr. HALE. But the allegation is that in this furtive way it was communicated to one man, unknown to us, nearly six years ago. The allegation is not that he was contemplating a possibility that some form of reciprocity might affect this bill, but that he stated broadly and squarely to this unknown man, this anonymous source, that he had deliberately put his schedules up for the purpose of afterwards cutting them down.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, with my knowledge of Governor Dingley, that is simply impossible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator—while it is not in my province, and certainly I have no interest in this unknown man—that I presume his name could be obtained if necessary. The editor of the Bulletin, as I take it, has communicated to the Senator from Missouri this fact, and he in a measure becomes responsible for its authenticity. If we are going to go at this discussion along lines of circumstantial evidence, as the Senator is contending for a view here based on his knowledge of Governor Dingley's character, it seems to me that we could bring up evidence on the other side and show that it would be impossible for an organ so dyed-in-the-wool protectionist as the Bulletin to slander the father of protection, or rather its highest exemplar in the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to make one remark?

Mr. HALE. Yes; I do not intend to take much time of the Senate, but I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I beg the Senator's pardon. I merely wish to say that while the Senator was speaking I have sent for the report and the debates on the Dingley bill, and I find it to be true that the committee, which reported it by Governor Dingley, put in a report and in that report and in the debates Governor Dingley and his associates on the committee, among them Mr. GROSVENOR and other men now well known, dealt with the different items where the tariff was raised in their bill, and stated their reasons, the reasons being permanent reasons relating to the necessity and present interests of the country, so that they said to the House every time, "We ask you to put this up so high for this reason," and "We ask you to put this other one up so high for this reason." So that it is totally inconsistent either with frankness or veracity that they should have had this other motive.

Mr. HALE. There is another consideration, Mr. President. I fancy that all of us really look upon this thing pretty much alike. Not many of us are of the importance that Governor Dingley was, but none of us, in our attitude upon a great public question, would want five years after our death to have our sincerity impugned by the irresponsible statement of somebody who said he had a private conversation—yes, a confidential conversation, one involving any kind of word that shows a sacredness about it—five years before. This was never brought to light and never referred to until nearly five years afterwards, and more than three years after Governor Dingley's death. Would any of us want to be subjected to that? We all feel alike about it.

There is no substance in this charge. If the Senators who are in sympathy with the Senator from Missouri have no stronger argument than this to make, and must ransack the past, turn up the grave, and bring up alleged private conversations that have slept for five years in order to show insincerity on the part of men who have had charge of the tariff bill, they are very hardly pushed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HALE. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. President, after the alleged date of this alleged conversation the tariff bill was before Congress for months and months until midsummer. It was in conference a long time, Governor Dingley heading the House conferees. In the meantime this unknown party, who could have made a tempest by his disclosure, and if he had had the manliness, if you call it that, of doing it openly, when Governor Dingley was alive to answer him, sits in silence and never intimates to a listening country that the author, the framer, the finisher of that bill had disclosed to him his insincerity, and that he was marking up his goods that he might cut them down afterwards.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. Is it possible, Mr. President—certainly it is not probable—that any man to whom Governor Dingley gave his confidence and talked as it is alleged he talked, if he was going to do it afterwards would not do it when Governor Dingley was alive to smite him and declare him, whoever he might be, a falsifier?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. I submit to the Senator from Maine that there is no accusation here against Governor Dingley's character, or his insincerity, or his honesty, or his manliness.

Mr. HALE. The Senator and I disagree about that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course the circumstantial evidence, however, is all on the line or on the side of there being no such purpose or intention, and the Senators who sympathize with the Senator from Missouri are not so hard put to it for argument, as the Senator will find before he gets out of this trust question.

Mr. HALE. This is certainly put forward now as the proper time, because——

Mr. TILLMAN. We have only been reassembled for three or four days, and we have hardly got over our Christmas drunks yet, if any of us were so unfortunate as to get drunk. But I contend that the Senator is setting up and tearing to tatters here a man of straw, and it is not an essential part of this debate anyway as to whether Governor Dingley ever said this or not.

Mr. HALE. I did not introduce this episode or bring Governor Dingley into this matter.

Mr. TILLMAN. I dislike very much to be defending a protectionist whom I do not know, but a man who undoubtedly must have been honest and whose intentions we can not lay to so low and dirty a motive as the Senator seems to impute to him is brought forward here and is hammered and clubbed, you might say, with epithets as regards his falseness, his charge of slander against Governor Dingley, and all that kind of thing. I dislike to see even a dog treated in that way.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator whether he thinks——

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, on the intimation of the Senator from Alabama that he desires to discuss this matter further, I ask that it may go over, not losing its place. The Senator from Pennsylvania wants to go on with his bill.

Mr. QUAY. I will withdraw my request until the Senator from Maine can conclude his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the resolution lie on the table, retaining its present position. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. VEST. If the resolution lies on the table, does it come up at the end of the routine business to-morrow?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will come up in the morning hour. It retains its present position on the table just as a resolution coming over from a previous day, and it will come up on the completion of the morning business to-morrow morning.

Mr. VEST. If that is the case, then I have no objection.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that, after the routine business to-morrow morning, I will ask to have the militia bill laid before the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me in order to make a motion affecting the convenience of Senators?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn until Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield for that purpose?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This motion is not a subject of debate.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know that. I note the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] who has the pending bill in charge.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have already consulted him.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is all right. I simply did not want any unfairness taken of his absence.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should not do that anyway.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was agreed to.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, yesterday when the resolutions of the nonpartisan convention representing the people of Oklahoma and Indian Territory was laid before the Senate the question was asked whether or not that included any Indians or representatives of any tribes or nations. I knew nothing more at that time save what the dispatches in the daily papers showed; but since then I have information to the effect that the Chickasaw, Choctaw, Creek, Cherokee, and Osage Indians were represented in the convention, and that more would have been present were it not for the circumstance that on account of the allotments of land under the Dawes Commission the Indians are very largely detained at home.

Just one word more before the Senator from Minnesota proceeds. My attention has been called to a resolution of the Spanish-American War Veterans, Booth Camp, presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] this morning and read. It requires merely one comment, because when that comment is made it will be seen that the resolution has no foundation upon which to rest. There are two whereases in the resolution, the second of which is—

Whereas in their report they—

The Committee on Territories—

state that the citizens of these Territories, especially in New Mexico, are not fit to become citizens of a State: Therefore, be it

Resolved—

Mr. President, that statement, which is the foundation of the resolution, shows conclusively on its face that the camp did not and could not have had before it at the time the report of the committee of which they complain, because the committee's report makes no such statement. On the contrary, it is stated and repeated that of many of the citizens down there there are among them excellent qualities of citizenship, and that for very many of them absolutely too much can not be said. Yet in the face of that distinct statement, a conspicuous statement of the report, we have a resolution here which is based upon the allegation that our report states that the citizens of these Territories are not fit to become citizens of a State. This simply proves, therefore, the worthlessness of the resolution based upon a statement which, if they had had the report before them, would have disproved the statement itself.

Mr. President, the resolutions therefore show on their face, I say, that the camp did not have before them and could not have been aware of the statements of the report, which are not in accordance with what the resolutions say the committee stated. It can only be explained upon the ground that a report was given to them of somebody's opinion as to what the committee said, and they took that inference as to what the committee said for a fact, and thereupon included that statement made to them as being what the committee had actually said. If it be true that the whereas on which a resolution is based is not only not correct, but states the reverse in part of what the committee said, the value of the resolutions themselves will become apparent to the whole Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is recognized. Does he yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand the Senator from Minnesota does not desire to speak longer than 4 o'clock this afternoon. I would therefore ask unanimous consent that the time from 4 until 5 o'clock this afternoon be given to the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the Calendar. There are somewhere about 200 cases, I think, on the Calendar.

Mr. BATE. We can not agree to that unless it is distinctly understood that it does not affect in any way whatever the statehood bill. We can not give up the right it has as the unfinished business of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unanimous consent asked would be that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension cases after 4 o'clock. That would be the way the Chair would put the request.

Mr. BATE. The Senator who is looking after the measure on our side, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], is not here. I do not know, however, as it is suggested that the time after 4 o'clock shall be devoted to these bills, that we ought to make any objection. I understand that the Senator from Minnesota is to go on until 4 o'clock and that then the matter the Senator from North Dakota speaks of comes up.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes, for simply one hour after 4 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs to assure the Senator from Tennessee that it could not interfere with the position of the statehood bill.

Mr. BATE. The status of it I want kept.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock and thenceforward on this same day the unobjected pension cases may be considered and that the pending bill may be temporarily laid aside for that purpose. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to say that we ought to consider some other bills beside pension bills. I would suggest to the Senator to say "bills on the Calendar."

Mr. FORAKER. May I inquire what is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from North Dakota is that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside at 4 o'clock and that thereupon the unobjected pension cases may receive consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the Senator will change his request.

Mr. McCUMBER. There are quite a number of pension bills—over 200—now on the Calendar.

Mr. MORGAN. Suppose there are, Mr. President; the beneficiaries of those bills are not the only persons in the United States who are entitled to the attention of this body.

Mr. McCUMBER. The others are comparatively few. However, if the Senator objects, I will modify my request.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will include the Calendar as proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota change his request?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask what is the request? I want to make an inquiry before I consent to it. Does the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] propose to address the Senate in continuation of his speech?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He does, until 4 o'clock.

Mr. FORAKER. He does not contemplate concluding to-day? I wanted to inquire whether or not he thought if we went on until 5 o'clock he could get through to-day.

Mr. NELSON. No, I think not. I think it will take me fully another day.

Mr. FORAKER. It will take another day after this?

Mr. NELSON. After to-day, to finish my remarks.

Mr. FORAKER. In view of the adjournment over until Monday, I was hoping the Senator might be able to conclude to-day; but inasmuch as the Senator could not conclude to-day, I will agree to the request of the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock the pending bill be temporarily laid aside and that unobjected cases on the Calendar shall receive consideration in their regular order. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have up to this time devoted my attention in my remarks to the consideration of the cases of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico. I now propose to give consideration to the case of the Territory of Oklahoma, including the Indian Territory, to show that these Territories ought to be united and admitted as one State, and also to show that it would be unjust and utterly cruel and a great hardship to leave the great mass of the white people who are now living in the Indian Territory without any government and in the condition which they now occupy.

I have always, Mr. President, been a friend to the people of Oklahoma. Some two years ago a bill which they were more interested in than were the people in any other Territory or any State of this Union—the bill known as the free-homestead bill—was, on my motion, taken up and passed by the unanimous consent of the Senate. I was glad I had that opportunity to encourage and aid those worthy and progressive people to secure their homesteads on the same terms as people in other portions of the country.

Mr. President, I do not want anybody to understand or believe that in this matter of uniting the Territory of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory into one State it is a notion of my own or that it is something which has simply come from the committee. In order to show the Senate that I and the majority of the committee in reporting the substitute for the House bill and in advocating the union of Oklahoma and Indian Territory are not actuated by any selfish considerations; that we are not actuated by anything but the good of the people of the Territory; in fact, that we are moving in this manner in obedience to the public sentiment and the unanimous will of those people in support of that, and in order to show the good faith in which we are acting, I ask to have certain communications, letters, telegrams, and newspaper articles read to the Senate, because they will demonstrate that in this matter we have the people of that country with us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks that certain communications, telegrams, and newspaper articles may be read.

Mr. NELSON. And that they be appended in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the papers referred to will be read.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, there is not much time left to enter into any extended argument this afternoon; but I desire to call attention to some pertinent facts in reference to the Territory of Oklahoma.

Oklahoma was originally a part of the Indian Territory. It was carved out of that Territory and established as a separate Territory in 1890. By the very act establishing the Territory the right was reserved to annex it to any other Territory or to any State. I want to quote the part of the law bearing on this subject. I read from page 209 of a compilation of the organic acts of the several Territories.

> Congress may at any time hereafter change the boundaries of said Territory or attach any portion of the same to any other State or Territory of the United States without the consent of the inhabitants of the Territory hereby created.

This, Mr. President, as you will see, leaves it optional with Congress, without consulting the inhabitants of that Territory, to annex it to any other Territory or to any State. So there are no legal or constitutional restrictions to the plan proposed in the substitute bill reported by the committee.

While Oklahoma has an ample number of people for representation in the other House of Congress, about equal to the ratio for two Representatives, yet there are other questions in connection with that Territory which make it plain that it ought not to be admitted as a separate State, but should be admitted in connection with the Indian Territory. While it has ample population for statehood, yet, on account of its limited area, its ragged, irregular, and unnatural boundaries, it should not be admitted separately.

I desire to point out on this map [indicating] its situation and boundaries. This map of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory shows the ragged and broken lines of Oklahoma on the east side, and also shows that combining Oklahoma and the Indian Territory into one State will make a magnificent State, nearly equal in area and dimensions to the States north—to the States of Kansas, Nebraska, North and South Dakota. It will be a little less in area than North Dakota, and it will be, if I remember aright, some 9,000 square miles less in area than the State of Kansas. Of those four States immediately north of it and in the same range, Kansas is the largest, Nebraska is the next largest, South Dakota next, and North Dakota next. Oklahoma and the Indian Territory united in one State would be next in area.

On account of the broken boundaries of the Territory of Oklahoma, to which I have called the attention of the Senate; on account of the limited area of the Territory; especially on account of the commercial, agricultural, and trade conditions, and also on account of the character of its soil and climate, it ought, for the good of the people who have settled in that Territory, for all future time to be united with the Indian Territory. The population of the two would, on the basis of the census of 1900, entitle this proposed State to four members in the House of Representatives. In area the two would be a fair average State. Separately each would have an area considerably less than any other State west or south of the original thirteen States.

In this connection I beg leave to quote from a table which I have in my hand:

The Indian Territory has an area of 31,400 square miles and Oklahoma 39,030 square miles. The two Territories have an aggregate of 70,430 square miles. The average area of the 45 States of the Union is 61,100 square miles. That would make Oklahoma and Indian Territory combined about 9,000 square miles more than the average. The average area of the 19 States west of the Mississippi River is 96,691 square miles. The smallest State today west of the Mississippi River is the State of Louisiana, with 48,720 square miles.

The areas of the States and Territories west of the Mississippi River are as follows:

	Square miles.	Acres.
Minnesota	83,365	50,691,200
Arkansas	53,850	33,948,800
Missouri	69,415	43,990,400
Iowa	56,025	35,504,000
Louisiana	48,720	29,068,800
North Dakota	70,795	44,924,800
South Dakota	77,650	49,184,000
Nebraska	77,510	49,177,600
Kansas	82,080	52,288,000
Texas	265,780	167,865,600

I do not claim that in the case of Texas the rule as to area ought to govern, because Texas came into the Union under peculiar conditions, having been a republic of its own making prior to its admission; but take the other States, the mountain and the Pacific coast States, and their areas are as follows:

	Square miles.	Acres.
Colorado	103,925	66,332,800
Utah	84,970	52,601,600
Idaho	84,800	53,945,600
Montana	146,080	92,998,400
Washington	69,180	42,803,200
Oregon	96,030	60,518,400
California	158,360	99,827,200
Wyoming	97,890	62,448,000
Nevada	110,700	70,233,600
Number States 19, total	1,837,125
Average, area	96,691
Area Oklahoma	39,030	24,851,200
Area Indian Territory	31,400	19,840,000
Total	70,430

It will be perceived from this list, as I have already stated, that there will be three States that will be of about the same size as the combined State if these two Territories be admitted as one State—Missouri, with 69,415 square miles; North Dakota, with 70,795 square miles, and Washington, with 69,180 square miles. These two Territories combined as one State would have an area almost exactly equal to each of these States; and, as I said, the four States from south to north immediately north of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory have the following relative areas:

Kansas, the first State, 82,080 square miles; Nebraska, immediately north of that, 77,510 square miles; South Dakota, immediately north of that, 77,650 square miles, and North Dakota, 70,795 square miles.

So that in the matter of area we are doing no injustice by combining these two Territories, but we are putting them on a par with the sister States in the same range and within the same degrees of longitude and having, practically, in many respects, the same kind of climate, especially in the matter of rainfall and aridity.

Now, when we take the States east of the Mississippi River and west of the thirteen original States, we see that even in the case of those older States they are much larger in area than either Oklahoma or the Indian Territory separately. The area of Florida is 58,680 square miles; Alabama, 52,250 square miles; Mississippi, 46,810 square miles; Tennessee, 42,050 square miles; Kentucky, 40,400 square miles; Ohio, 41,060 square miles; Indiana, 36,350 square miles; Illinois, 56,650 square miles; Michigan, 58,915 square miles, and Wisconsin, 56,040 square miles.

The average of the States, west of the thirteen original States and between the Mississippi River, is 48,920 square miles, and the very smallest of them is Indiana, with 36,350 square miles. So when we glance at these figures of the area of the respective States, it must be evident to everybody who gives any thought to the subject that in the matter of area this proposed State, composed of the Territory of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, would compare favorably with their older sister States, and it would be putting them on a parity and a footing of equality.

With the exception of the little strip immediately north of what we call the "Panhandle" of Texas—with the exception of that strip, which they used to call the "Public Land" strip—the State formed by the junction of these two Territories would make a regular parallelogram bounded on the north by the State of Kansas, on the east by the State of Arkansas and a part of Missouri, on the west by the State of Texas, and on the South by the State of Texas, or, rather, by the Arkansas River. That would give the proposed State clear, well-defined, homogeneous boundaries, and would avoid the broken and ragged boundaries that you now find between the Indian Territory and Oklahoma.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I want to observe to the Senator from Minnesota, if it be agreeable to him, that if he has reached the point in his remarks where he is going to use the map, it would be well, the hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, when another order comes up, for him to suspend until Monday, when more Senators will be present to see the map demonstration.

Mr. NELSON. That would be agreeable to me.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The hour of 4 o'clock is here, and I understand there is an order of the Senate to take up the Calendar.

Mr. NELSON. Under the unanimous-consent agreement that was made this afternoon, I suppose I am not entitled to the floor longer than 4 o'clock.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And besides, I think more Senators than are present ought to see the Senator's demonstration of the boundary lines as given by the map.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order agreed upon by unanimous consent was that at this hour the Calendar of unobjected cases should be taken up for consideration. The Secretary will state the first case on the Calendar.

LABELING OF WINE.

The bill (S. 1347) for the proper labeling of wine purporting to be champagne was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that that bill be passed over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD.

The bill (S. 3342) for preventing the adulteration, misbranding, and imitations of foods, beverages, candies, drugs, and condiments in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and for regulating interstate traffic therein, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

READJUSTMENT OF ACCOUNTS OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 2341) to authorize the readjustment of the accounts of Army officers in certain cases, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was heretofore passed by the Senate, and a motion was entered to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. WARREN. I have authority from the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to withdraw his notice of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

CIVIL APPOINTMENTS OF EX ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 3310) to amend section 1754 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the preference in civil appointments of ex Army and Navy officers was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is somewhat interested in that bill, and I therefore ask that it may go over. I have no objection to it personally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

ABANDONED PROPERTY IN INSURRECTIONARY DISTRICTS.

The bill (S. 362) to revive and amend an act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and acts amendatory thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. That bill will lead to much discussion, and I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

CLAYTON G. LANDIS.

The bill (S. 4782) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to try, adjudicate, and determine the claim of Clayton G. Landis, administrator of David B. Landis, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. I notice that the Senator who has that bill in charge is not in the Chamber, and I therefore ask that it may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MARTIN subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago Senate bill 4782 was passed over. I should like to have that bill taken up now. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is more especially interested in it than I am, but I do not see any reason why it should not be taken up. It simply refers a case to the Court of Claims.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4782) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to try, adjudicate, and determine the claim of Clayton G. Landis, administrator of David B. Landis, deceased. It proposes to refer to the Court of Claims the claim of Clayton G. Landis, administrator of David B. Landis, deceased, late of Lancaster, Pa., for internal-revenue tax paid to the United States by the decedent as surety on the bond of Jacob F. Schaeffer, distiller, with full jurisdiction to try, adjudicate, and determine the claim, and to render judgment in claimant's favor for such amount as may be found just and due by the court, without regard to the statute of limitations. The right of appeal to the Supreme Court is expressly reserved to the Government and to the claimant.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the report in that case may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. MARTIN April 29, 1902, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4782) for the relief of Clayton G. Landis, administrator of the estate of David B. Landis, deceased, beg leave to submit the following report:

This claim is made on behalf of the estate of the late David B. Landis, deceased, who, in his lifetime, was a prominent citizen of Lancaster, Pa., and was the president of the Conestoga National Bank, one of the leading financial interests of Lancaster at the time of his death. During his lifetime he became bondsman for Jacob F. Schaeffer, who was a distiller in the city of Lancaster. Mr. Schaeffer's bonded warehouse was destroyed by fire in October, 1893, while he was attending the Columbian Exposition, in Chicago. The fire destroyed more than 40,000 gallons of whisky on which the Government tax had not been paid. This whisky was insured for its actual value only, not including the Government tax. The owner had taken out policies of insurance, which were in force at the time of the fire, and the companies which issued these policies charged incendiarism and resisted the payment of the insurance. The companies were sued and the cases were tried in court.

When the evidence of the complainant was concluded, the companies practically gave up their line of defense and settled for nearly the full amount demanded by the plaintiff. There was no dispute or contest as to the quantity of spirits in the warehouse and destroyed by the fire. The whisky had been taxed by the Government to the amount of $43,016.40 when it was manufactured. The books of the Treasury officials showed this fact unmistakably. Pending the determination of the insurance cases the collection of the tax was suspended by the Government.

Mr. Schaeffer received the insurance money by virtue of the settlement above referred to, and proceeded to rebuild the distillery property and manufacture another large stock of whisky. Then, after a delay of nearly three years, the Government renewed its demand for the payment of the tax on the spirits that had been destroyed by fire. Mr. Schaeffer asked the Government to abate the tax, but it refused to do so and proceeded to enforce collection. Mr. Schaeffer was not able to pay the loss and did not have sufficient property to make it good, and therefore his bondsman, David B. Landis, was called upon to pay the taxes and thus prevent the utter sacrifice of Mr. Schaeffer's property.

On the 25th day of February, 1897, David B. Landis, as surety to the Government for Jacob F. Schaeffer, paid to R. E. Shearer, then collector of internal revenue for the ninth district of Pennsylvania, the sum of $45,167.22, taxes assessed on distilled spirits that had been destroyed by the fire, that amount being made up of $43,016.40 taxes and $2,150.82 for a 5 per cent penalty added to the taxes. This payment was made by Mr. Landis out of his own funds. He made repeated applications to the Government to have the case reopened and the moneys so paid by him refunded, but he was denied all relief. He was assassinated on the 7th day of April, 1898, and letters of administration were issued to his son, Clayton G. Landis, who is now prosecuting this claim in that behalf. The summary demand for this large amount of money by and the payment of it to the Government impoverished the decedent, and his estate now seeks an opportunity to have the claim which he had urged upon the Government heard and decided by an impartial tribunal.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABRAM G. HOYT.

The bill (S. 2869) for the relief of Abram G. Hoyt was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

CURRY COUNTY, OREG.

The bill (S. 3280) for the relief of Curry County, State of Oregon, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator having that bill in charge not being present, I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

COL. H. B. FREEMAN.

The bill (S. 4832) for the relief of Col. H. B. Freeman was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that that bill may be considered and passed at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to relieve Col. H. B. Freeman, Twenty-fourth United States Infantry, from the obligation to refund $1,761.60, paid to him under a decision of the Acting Secretary of War as commutation of quarters while on duty as acting Indian agent, Osage Agency, Pawhuska, Okla., from the 10th of December, 1896, which decision was overruled by the Comptroller of the Treasury, notwithstanding that the monthly claims which were based upon it had been approved by the auditing officers and paid, month by month, for upward of three years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CENTRAL ARIZONA RAILWAY COMPANY.

The bill (S. 4363) granting the Central Arizona Railway Company a right of way for railroad purposes through the San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that that bill may be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

MAJ. CORNELIUS GARDENER.

The resolution introduced by Mr. PATTERSON on April 30, 1902, relative to the calling of Maj. Cornelius Gardener as a witness as to conditions in the Philippine Islands, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over without prejudice.

CLAIMS FOR INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The bill (S. 3544) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that that bill may be passed over, as there are amendments to it that will probably lead to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

LAKE TAHOE, CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA.

The bill (S. 1969) to conserve the flood waters of Lake Tahoe, in the States of California and Nevada, and to regulate the overflow thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that that bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

The bill (H. R. 159) providing for free homesteads on the public lands for actual and bona fide settlers in the north one-half of the Colville Indian Reservation, State of Washington, and reserving the public lands for that purpose, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that that bill may go over.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let that bill go over, Mr. President. I understand the Supreme Court on last Monday handed down a decision which might affect the bill, and I should like an opportunity to look at that decision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

CODE OF LAW FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 5299) to amend sections 897 and 903 of subchapter 7 of chapter 19 of an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. In the absense of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], I ask that that bill may be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

UNIVERSITY OF MONTANA.

The bill (S. 3953) granting additional lands adjacent to its site to the University of Montana was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over without prejudice.

Mr. BERRY. Unless the Senator from North Dakota has some particular reason for asking that the bill go over, I should like to have it considered. It is a bill in which the Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON], who is not in his seat, is very much interested.

Mr. McCUMBER. I asked that it might go over because I did not see the Senator from Montana in his seat.

Mr. BERRY. He is very much interested in the bill. The Committee on Public Lands has reported it, and I think it ought to be passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. My objection was made upon the basis that he was not present.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the Senator from Arkansas understands the nature and the features of the bill, I think we might take it up.

Mr. BERRY. There is a report explaining it which is very short. The Senator from Montana is very much interested in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 4, before the word "University," to insert "State of Montana for the use of the," and in line 9, after the word "twenty-six," to strike out "the east half of the southeast quarter of section twenty-seven;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the State of Montana for the use of the University of Montana the following described land lying within Missoula County, Mont., and adjacent to the site of said university in said State, namely: The south half of section 26; the south half of the northeast quarter and the south half of the northwest quarter of section 26, all situated in township 13 north and range 19 west, the same to be used for a site for an observatory for said university.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting additional lands adjacent to the site of the University of Montana to the State of Montana for the use of the said university."

MAJ. WILLIAM KENDALL.

The bill (S. 2924) for the relief of the legal representatives of Maj. William Kendall was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any explanation of the bill? I should like to hear some explanation of it or to have the report read.

Mr. CLAPP. What does the Senator remark?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some explanation why the Government is to pay for rations furnished by a sutler to soldiers.

Mr. CLAPP. I can not explain that, for this reason——

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill go over for the time being, retaining its place.

Mr. CLAPP. It was reported at the spring session——

Mr. KEAN. There is a report.

Mr. CLAPP. I have not the report at hand. Let the bill go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

RECORDING AND JUDICIAL DIVISIONS OF ALASKA.

The bill (S. 4068) to redivide the district of Alaska into three recording and judicial divisions was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. McCUMBER. Unless some member of the Committee on the Judiciary desires to have the bill considered at the present time, I suggest that it go over.

Mr. HOAR. My impression is, although I will not be absolutely sure, that the bill came from the Department of Justice and has been very carefully considered. It was taken by the committee largely on the strength of the recommendation of the Department of Justice.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is a written report.

Mr. HOAR. There is a written report. Perhaps the Senator from North Dakota will hear it.

Mr. McCUMBER. This may be a long bill and therefore take considerable time.

Mr. HOAR. It will not take very long. I do not wish, of course, to press a bill about which any member of the Senate has serious hesitation. It is a matter which was committed to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SIMON] for final consideration, and if I am not mistaken the bill was prepared at the Department of Justice and taken by the committee largely on the authority of the Department.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that it may be passed for the present.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; let it be passed for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I ask the Senate to return to Senate bill 4068, to redivide the district of Alaska into three recording and judicial divisions, so that the bill and report, which contains one page, may be read.

May I state beforehand that the condition of things is exceedingly inconvenient there now? There are parts of the judicial district with which the marshal and the judge who dwell in it can not have any communication from November to June; namely, the Aleutian Islands. So there is an absolute failure during this period on the part of the people as it is now to get a United States judge or to get any authority exercised by the United States marshal.

This bill was prepared at the Department of Justice on very full consideration and consultation with the judges and governor. It was reported from the committee at the last session. Of course I do not want to press anything upon which there is a serious doubt, but I do think the Alaska people do not get as prompt legislation always as could be desired. If this bill is to be passed, it ought to be amended by making it take effect next July instead of last July.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out, in line 16, page 2, the word "two" and insert "three;" so as to make it read "nineteen hundred and three."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

The report submitted by Mr. SIMON May 22, 1902, is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4068) to redivide the district of Alaska into three recording and judicial divisions, report the same back to the Senate and recommend its passage.

The purpose of this bill, as implied by its title, is to redivide the district of Alaska into three recording and judicial divisions. Under section 13 of the act entitled "An act making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1900, the judges for the district of Alaska met and by an order divided the district of Alaska into three recording divisions, such recording divisions corresponding in boundaries with the three judicial divisions of the district. Since such division was made, by reason of increase in population and business in the Territory and the shifting of such population and business, it is found necessary to readjust the same and therefore redivide the district of Alaska for judicial and recording purposes. Such redivision is primarily made necessary by the fact that there is but little business to be done in the present third division, while there is a large amount of business to be done in the second division. The amount of business to be done in the first division is larger than that to be done in the third division.

The redivision provided for in this bill is also made necessary because during the period from November to June the marshal and the judge at St. Michael or Nome can have no communication with the Aleutian Islands, a part of which are now embraced in the second division.

The bill (S. 4068) was prepared under the direction of the Department of Justice and has its approval. The bill also was prepared after consultation with the several judges of the district courts in Alaska, and, as your committee is advised, the redivision of the district as made by the bill meets with the approval of such judges.

In view of these facts your committee recommend to the Senate the passage of the bill.

ASSAY OFFICE AT TACOMA, WASH.

The bill (S. 5928) to establish an assay office at Tacoma, Wash., was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

EASTERN BAND OF CHEROKEE INDIANS.

The bill (S. 5229) to authorize, settle, and compromise certain litigation pending in the circuit court for the western district of North Carolina was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. My impression about the bill is that a compromise has already been agreed on. It comes from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and my recollection about it is that a compromise has already been agreed upon between the Department of Justice and the litigants, if I am not mistaken. I think the reading of the report will so show, if the Senator will permit the report to be read.

Mr. McCUMBER. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn, and the bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, of North Carolina, the sum of $4,000, for the purpose of compromising and settling an action at law and a suit in equity instituted by authority of an act of Congress in the circuit court for the western district of North Carolina, at Asheville, in said State, in the year 1872, and brought for an account and settlement and an adjustment of equities between said Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, of North Carolina, and W. H. Thomas and William Johnston, and subsequently heard by Rufus Barringer, John H. Dillard, and Thomas Ruffin, as arbitrators, in the year 1874.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Perhaps the Senator from North Dakota desires to have the report read. My recollection is perhaps not very accurate about the matter. Congress authorized the suit to be brought by the Attorney-General or by his direction, and it has been pending in the courts there until the present time. It has been pending for a long time, and, as I remember it, the Department of Justice has now recommended that the suit shall be compromised by the payment of this money.

Mr. QUARLES. That is right.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. As the matter came up in the Committee on Indian Affairs, my recollection is that we all thought that was a proper disposition to be made of the controversy.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Interior both recommend it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is my recollection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 4202) to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BATE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

RICHMOND P. HOBSON, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The bill (S. 3983) authorizing the transfer to the retired list of the Navy of Naval Constructor Richmond P. Hobson, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in the case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MORGAN (to Mr. COCKRELL). I wish you would not do that.

Mr. COCKRELL. He ought to stay in the service.

Mr. MORGAN. He is not fit for service.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, this officer is in the Navy, and he has been examined in the regular methodical way and pronounced fit for duty, and now Congress proposes to pass upon it, and say he is not, and to place him on the retired list. It does not seem to me it is placing this officer in a proper position. If he is fit for duty and trying to get on the retired list, then he ought not be put there. This seems to be an extraordinary case.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, at the time of that examination Captain Hobson was fit for duty on that day. But since that time other examinations have been made by eminent surgeons, and they say to Captain Hobson, and he is perfectly aware of the fact, that he is going to be a blind man; that the postponement of the destruction of his visual organs is merely a question of time, and is only being hastened by putting him on active duty in the Navy. He can not perform this duty.

Mr. HOAR. Is this the famous officer of the Merrimac.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. He can not perform the duties. I have known this man from his childhood. He is as conscientious in this application as a man possibly can be. He has suffered from this difficulty or trouble with his eyes from various causes, commencing no doubt with his work in Cuba, but more particularly by the work to which he was assigned in the Philippines and on the coast of China. He is a very conscientious man and does not want the Government of the United States to support him merely because he has been gallant and renowned in his military action. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not press his objection.

This case has been up twice before, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who is very deeply interested in the matter, called it up and insisted upon its being heard. I yielded the floor to him at the time in order that it might be done, and the suggestion was made that the Senator from Kentucky had some objection to it. I inquired of the Senator from Kentucky to-day and he said he had none in the world. The Senator from New Hampshire, before going away, left me a message to take care of this case and to see to it. He is very much interested in it. I can not explain the situation technically, as he could. He understands it perfectly well. Mr. Hobson is condemned to blindness, and nothing can save him from it if he lives ten or fifteen years.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to say that I can not now withdraw my objection to the bill, and I will give my reasons.

We have an Army and a Navy. We have laws providing for the examination of their officers as to fitness physically for the performance of duty. These boards are assembled upon the application of the officer at any time. There are hundreds of those boards.

Now, here is a board of the Navy Department, assembled in just the same way. It is composed of eminent surgeons in the Navy. There is presumed to be no prejudice among them against the officers whom they examine. They have examined this man and say he is fit for duty.

Mr. MORGAN. When?

Mr. COCKRELL. At the time set forth in the papers.

Mr. MORGAN. He is not fit to-day.

Mr. COCKRELL. We are told that he is not now fit for duty, although he was then. Well, what is the remedy? That officer could, within ten days after the refusal to retire him, have applied again and had another examination. But is Congress to be made a court of appeals to hear the application of every officer who may be brought before a board and who may be refused retirement because the surgeons of the Army or the Navy say he is fit for duty, and are we then to sit here as a court of appeals and take the testimony of civilian physicians in this matter when, if the first report is wrong, another board can be summoned and a fair trial can be given?

I have no disposition to keep Commander Hobson in the Navy if he is not fit for duty—by no means—but it is a question as to how he shall be retired, whether Congress shall be made a court of appeals to hear all these matters upon the testimony of civilians, disregarding the certificate of the board of examining surgeons, and taking the position that although then fit for duty he has since become unfit for duty, and that is shown by a civilian board, when he has never been ordered before another official board, which could be done.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not intend to delay the Senate on an occasion like this. It is not just to the Senate.

Mr. BATE. This time is set apart for the consideration of unobjected cases.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to ask, though, that the whole report be put in the RECORD. The Senator from Missouri has predicated his remarks upon only a partial statement of the case. The report itself shows sufficient reasons. Here is the recommendation of the President in his message to the Senate that this man be retired. Here also is the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy and of the Chief of the Bureau of Construction requesting his retirement.

I can not do justice to Captain Hobson on this occasion, but I do not intend that his reputation shall be damaged by any sinister objections made against him at all. So the bill can go over, but I give notice that I will call it up from time to time and have a full discussion and a full examination of this man's case and his character.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to say, Mr. President, out of order, as both of us have been talking, that his character is not involved in this matter at all.

Mr. MORGAN. It is bound to be.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a question of physical condition. Nobody has impeached his character. It is simply a question of his physical condition, and the Senator from Alabama can not twist the argument on anything else than on his physical condition to perform the duties of his office.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Alabama is not in the habit of twisting anything, he will inform the Senator from Missouri. He is as straight as a die. He is as straight as the Senator from Missouri. I am stating facts here, and I am defending a man who has been impeached either incidentally or directly. I have stated here that Captain Hobson knows perfectly well that he is irreclaimably condemned to blindness. We are keeping him on service in the Bureau of Construction which he can not perform. It requires the nicest possible eyesight. The Department will not transfer him to the line. They would have to promote him over the heads of various officers to do so. Here he stands without duties except to get furloughs from time to time. It is all he can do. It is due to this very exceptional case—for there is not one like it in the United States, and there has never been one like it—that we should pass the bill. I think the Senate of the United States might take the liberty of exercising its judgment upon the recommendation of the President and the Secretary of the Navy and the Chief of the Bureau of Construction. When the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is back in this Chamber he will state to the Senate reasons which he knows of as a physician, which induce him personally to take a very great interest in this matter. Let the bill be passed over.

I ask that the report may be published in the RECORD.

The report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER May 27, 1902, is as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3983) authorizing the transfer to the retired list of the Navy of Naval Constructor Richmond P. Hobson, United States Navy, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Department, as will appear by the message of the President herewith attached. Captain Hobson's statement is also appended, as well as the report of the board of medical survey which condemned his eyes.

[Senate Document No. 202, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In June, 1900, Naval Constructor Richmond P. Hobson, then on duty at the naval station, Cavite, P. I., was found to be suffering from "compound hypermetropic astigmatism, retinal hyperæmia, and trachoma," and an operation was performed for the latter. On the 28th of June, 1900, he was admitted to the naval hospital, Yokohama, Japan, the hospital ticket stating: "Retinitis. There is good evidence it was in line of duty. While on duty at Hongkong during the past year he suffered from weakness of eyes, particularly after exposure to glare of sun or while subject to the irregularities of light on board the ships under repairs." On September 7, 1900, he was discharged from the naval hospital at Yokohama and ordered to the United States, and was subsequently granted six months' leave of absence on account of continued "irritation of retina."

In January, 1902, Naval Constructor Hobson appeared before a retiring board, the medical members of which, after an examination of his case, made the following certificate:

"At present there is apparently only a slight retinal irritation, but by the exercise of reasonable care it should not give great trouble.

"An ophthalmoscopic examination not made and deemed not essential.

"We believe, therefore, that Mr. Hobson is fit for active duty."

Upon this state of facts the retiring board decided "that Naval Constructor Richmond P. Hobson, U. S. N., is fit for active duty."

Without suggesting that any injustice has been done by this finding, and while in effect pronouncing it correct, Mr. Hobson states, in a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, February 5, 1902, that "the duty required in the Construction Corps in connection with plans and blue prints, and in connection with inspection and supervision in the glare of shipyards and navy-yards, requires just the kind of use of the eyes that is painful and injurious and would tend to thwart their recovery;" that the condition of his eyes has improved since his return to the United States while on special duty not in the usual line of work of the Construction Corps; but that "under these favorable conditions the irritation and sensitiveness continue, and show that" he "should not undertake work that taxes the eyes * * * in the future." He accordingly asks special legislation authorizing his retirement as for disabilities incurred in the line of duty. This request is approved by the Chief Constructor and by the Secretary of the Navy.

In consideration of the foregoing, but especially of the gallant service rendered by Mr. Hobson in the sinking of the Merrimac in the harbor of Santiago during the recent war with Spain, I recommend the enactment of a suitable measure for his relief.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 17, 1902.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1902.

SIR: (1) Referring to my application of January 17 to be ordered before the retiring board on account of my eyes, and to the Department's letter of January 27 informing me of the report of that board, to the effect that I was fit for duty, I have the honor to state, while I can perform duty, and in that sense am fit for duty, yet the duty required in the Construction Corps in connection with plans and blue prints and in connection with inspection and supervision in the glare at shipyards and navy-yards requires just the kind of use of the eyes that is painful and injurious and would tend to thwart their recovery. Under these circumstances I believe I should not continue such work, and since it appears that relief can not come through the retiring board, I respectfully request the transmission to Congress of the application I hereby make for special legislative authority for such relief. Because of the unusual nature of this request, I beg to add the statement below.

(2) My service in the Navy has covered about seventeen years, and never counted a day on the sick list or even excused list until my eyes were condemned by a medical board assembled in Cavite in June, 1900, as a result of which I was invalided to the naval hospital at Yokohama and thence to the United States, and upon the recommendation of a specialist granted six months' leave on account of my eyes. When I entered the naval service my eyes were strong and sound. They stood the strain incident to general service and to Construction-Corps work until my service in Cuba, when they gave trouble in the glare incident to the wrecking duty, particularly that in raising the Maria Teresa, where the conditions were severe. Proceeding straight from this wrecking duty to duty in Hongkong, the trouble became aggravated during sixteen months of work under severe glare in inspecting and directing the reconstruction of the gunboats Isla de Cuba, Isla de Luzon, and Don Juan de Austria.

The trouble became acute, under the effect of glare, and a physician was consulted, who prescribed dark glasses and a lotion, but without effectual relief, and the trouble became further aggravated in the duty at the Cavite Navy-Yard, and a specialist at Manila, who operated for granulation of the lids, reported a serious condition of congestion of the retina, that led to my being invalided home. Since my return to the United States the condition has improved with special duty not in the usual line of the Construction Corps. But under these favorable conditions the irritation and sensitiveness continue and show that I should not undertake work that taxes the eyes for my regular work in the future.

(3) Thus my service in the Navy has been particularly severe on my eyes and has injured them and put them at a disadvantage for continuing the work of my corps. I do not think I should be required, before getting relief, to continue such work until they become so much injured as to render them unfit for use.

(4) I respectfully call attention to the fact that this voluntary application might be met by existing law were I in the line of the Navy, under which law officers of the line have been retired upon voluntary application since July 1, 1900, the officer in each case retiring with the rank next higher than the one held at the time of application.

(5) In seeking thus to be relieved from active duty I beg to add that I am completely devoted to the Navy, and in any course of work that I might undertake in the future I should endeavor at all times to serve the Navy and the country; my single purpose, earnest and steadfast, being to render a maximum of useful service during my lifetime.

Very respectfully,

R. P. HOBSON,
Naval Constructor, United States Navy.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 8, 1902.

SIR: Complying with the request made in your letter of the 6th instant, I have the honor to send you herewith two copies of a report dated Cavite, P. I., June 4, 1900, of a board of medical survey in the case of Naval Constructor Richmond P. Hobson, United States Navy.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM H. MOODY,
Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

UNITED STATES NAVAL STATION,
Cavite, P. I., June 4, 1900.

SIR: In obedience to your order of June 2, 1900, we have held a careful survey on Hobson, Richmond Pearson, naval constructor, and beg leave to report as follows:

1. Present condition, unfit for duty.
2. Disease or injury, retinitis.
3. Probable future duration, indefinite.
4. Recommendation, that he be transferred to the United States naval hospital at Yokohama, Japan, for treatment and further disposition.
5. Origin, in the line of duty; incident to duty in the Tropics.

Very respectfully,

F. J. B. CORDEIRO,
Surgeon, United States Navy.
OLIVER D. NORTON,
Surgeon, United States Navy.
GEO. PICKRELL,
Surgeon, United States Navy.

To COMMANDER IN CHIEF UNITED STATES
NAVAL FORCE ON ASIATIC STATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

HERBERT O. DUNN.

The bill (S. 1866) for the relief of Herbert O. Dunn was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEAN and Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

UINTAH RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 5657) to prevent discrimination in grazing permits on the Uintah Reservation was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

PUBLIC LAND ACCOUNTS.

The bill (S. 1473) regulating the settlement of the accounts between the United States and the several States relative to the disposition of the public lands, and for other purposes, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Let the bill go over. It is quite lengthy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

PAYMASTER JAMES E. TOLFREE, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The bill (S. 5724) for the relief of Paymaster James E. Tolfree, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to James E. Tolfree, paymaster, United States Navy, $4,000, in full for all losses of both Government and personal property incurred by him by reason of the destruction by fire of the Windsor House, at Yokohama, Japan, on the morning of February 8, 1886.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am not going to object to the passage of the bill, but I do not believe the Government is legally liable for the payment of claims such as this bill represents. I know that it is the practice to do it. I simply wanted to state what my opinion was.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES BLAKE, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The bill (S. 5725) for the relief of Pay Clerk Charles Blake, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Charles Blake, pay clerk, United States Navy, $700, in full of all losses of personal property incurred by him by reason of the destruction by fire of the Windsor House, at Yokohama, Japan, on the morning of February 8, 1886.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF FOREST RESERVES.

The bill (S. 3374) to protect forest reserves, and for other purposes, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BERRY. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

AMERICAN ACADEMY IN ROME.

The bill (S. 4980) to incorporate the American Academy in Rome, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Library with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 1, page 1, line 4, after the name "Angell" to insert "Arthur T. Barney;" in line 7, after the name "Chandler," to insert "William A. Clark;" in line 9, before the name "Draper," to strike out "A" and insert "F;" in line 11, after the name "Gage," to insert "Richard Watson Gilder;" in line 12, after the name "Gilman," insert "Arthur T. Hadley;" in line 3, page 2, after the name "La Farge," insert "Charles Lanier;" in the same line, before the name "McMillan," strike out "James" and insert "William C.;" in line 9, after the name "Rhinelander," insert "Elihu Root," and in line 16, after the word "politic," insert "in the District of Columbia;" so as to make the section read:

That Edwin A. Abbey, Samuel A. B. Abbott, Charles Francis Adams, James W. Alexander, James B. Angell, Arthur T. Barney, Edward J. Berwind, Edwin H. Blashfield, William A. Boring, Daniel H. Burnham, Nicholas Murray Butler, John L. Cadwalader, Frank W. Chandler, William A. Clark, Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, Frank Miles Day, William E. Dodge, William F. Draper, Charles W. Eliot, Theodore N. Ely, Marshall Field, Charles L. Freer, Daniel Chester French, Henry C. Frick, Lyman J. Gage, Richard Watson Gilder, Daniel Coit Gilman, Arthur T. Hadley, Charles C. Harrison, John Hay, Thomas Hastings, William H. Herriman, Abram S. Hewitt, Henry L. Higginson, Charles L. Hutchinson, William M. Kendall, John La Farge, Charles Lanier, Austin W. Lord, Charles F. McKim, William C. McMillan, Frederic MacMonnies, William Rutherford Mead, George Von L. Meyer, Charles Moore, J. Pierpont Morgan, H. Siddons Mowbray, Frederick Law Olmsted, jr., Francis L. Patton, Robert Swain Peabody, George B. Post, Henry S. Pritchett, Herbert Putnam, Frederick W. Rhinelander, Elihu Root, F. Augustus Schermerhorn, J. G. Schurman, Carl Schurz, James Stillman, Waldo Story, Augustus St. Gaudens, James Knox Taylor, Henry Walters, John Q. A. Ward, George Peabody Wetmore, Henry White, Stanford White, William C. Whitney, Egerton Winthrop, their associates and successors, are hereby created a body corporate and politic in the District of Columbia by the name of the American Academy in Rome, for the purpose of establishing and maintaining an institution to promote the study and practice of the fine arts and to aid and stimulate the education and training of architects, painters, sculptors, and other artists, by enabling such citizens of the United States as shall be selected by competition from among those who have passed with honor through leading technical schools or have been equally well qualified by private instruction or study to develop their powers and complete their training under the most favorable conditions of direction and surroundings.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I heard only part of the bill read. What is the home of the corporation?

Mr. MORGAN. Rome.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Washington.

Mr. COCKRELL. The home of the corporation is in Washington City.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But there is a provision in it which authorizes the company to own real estate in Rome.

Mr. COCKRELL. In Italy.

Mr. SPOONER. It is a District of Columbia corporation?

Mr. WETMORE. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the bill go over. I object to its further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

BRIG OLIVE FRANCES.

The bill (S. 3034) for the relief of the owners and officers of the brig Olive Frances and others on board said brig was announced as next in order.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the report be read, or some portion of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. WARREN. It is quite a long report and, as the Senator who reported the bill is absent, I ask that it may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over without prejudice.

SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The bill (S. 3900) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a sealer and assistant sealer of weights and measures in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1895, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over without prejudice.

APPOINTMENT OF ENLISTED MEN OF THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 6059) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the appointment of an enlisted man or apprentice as a commissioned officer or pay clerk shall not be regarded as a discharge from his enlistment; and any enlisted man or apprentice who has been, or may be, so appointed may, upon the honorable termination of his service under such appointment, be permitted to serve out his enlistment, and upon honorable discharge therefrom shall be entitled to the benefits of continuous service under the conditions prescribed in section 16 of the act approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SHAMOKIN, PA.

The bill (S. 5694) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Shamokin, in the State of Pennsylvania, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and to cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Shamokin and State of Pennsylvania, the cost of the site and building, including vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed $100,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

F. C. BOUCHER.

The bill (S. 2991) for the relief of F. C. Boucher was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been before the Senate at a former date, and the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there a report upon the bill?

Mr. KEAN. There is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report.

Mr. SPOONER. I think I objected to the bill on a former occasion. I object to it again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over, without prejudice.

ACCEPTANCE OF DECORATIONS, ETC.

The following were the bills next in order on the Calendar:

A bill (S. 6134) to authorize Col. Theodore A. Bingham, United States Army, to accept a decoration conferred upon him by the Government of the French Republic;

A bill (S. 6135) to authorize Capt. R. P. Rodgers, United States Navy, to accept a decoration conferred upon him by the Government of the French Republic;

A bill (S. 6136) to authorize Mr. H. H. D. Peirce, Third Assistant Secretary of State, to accept a decoration conferred upon him by the Government of the French Republic; and

A bill (S. 6137) to authorize Arthur M. Beaupre, formerly secretary of legation and consul-general of the United States to Guatemala, to accept a silver inkstand presented to him by the English Government.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that these bills be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and also the bill (H. R. 11576) granting permission to Capt. B. H. McCalla and others to accept presents and decorations tendered to them by the Emperor of Germany and others.

Mr. HOAR. The bills have been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. CULLOM. They have been reported from the committee, and I desire to have them referred back to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bills referred to are recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

RAINY RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire now to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CLAPP. Before that is done there is a bridge bill on the Calendar which I should like to have considered. It is necessary on account of the passing season that the bill shall be acted on, so that they may get to work. I should like to have unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. CULLOM. Is it a long bill?

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir; it is not a long bill. It is Senate bill No. 6446, reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM. I yield for the purpose of allowing the bill to be taken up, if it does not take too long a time.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 6446) to provide for the construction of a bridge across Rainy River, in Minnesota; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 1, after the word "War," to insert "and until approved by him the bridge shall not be commenced or built;" so as to make the section read:

That the International Bridge and Terminal Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, be, and the same hereby is, authorized and empowered to construct and maintain a bridge over the Rainy River at the head of the falls in the river, in section 27, in township 71 north, of range 24 west, of the fourth principal meridian, in the county of Itasca and State of Minnesota: Provided, That the plan, location, and elevation of the bridge shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, and until approved by him the bridge shall not be commenced or built.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 11, after the words "United States," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of railroad trains over the same, and the approaches thereto, upon the payment of a reasonable compensation therefor, and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon the rules and conditions to which each shall conform in the use of said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal telegraph and telephone purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota to make a request.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I asked that this hour might be given to the consideration of the Calendar, with the hope and expectation that we would reach the pension bills. Being disappointed in that, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, at 4 o'clock, we take one hour for the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the Calendar. I understand this is satisfactory to those having other bills in charge.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that on Monday, at 4 o'clock, the unobjected pension cases may receive the consideration of the Senate for one hour. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. McKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution requesting the President to return to the Senate Senate bill 3316, being a bill to amend an act to create a new division in the western judicial district of the State of Missouri, approved January 24, 1901; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 12, 1903, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 8, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PHILIPPINE CONSTABULARY BILL.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 15510) to promote the efficiency of the Philippine constabulary, to establish the rank and pay of its commanding officer, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LACEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Philippine constabulary bill, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That officers of the Army of the United States may be detailed for service as chief and assistant chiefs of the Philippine constabulary, and that during the continuance of such details the officer serving as chief shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of brigadier-general, and the officers serving as assistant chiefs shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of colonel: Provided, That the difference between the pay and allowances of brigadier-general and colonel, as herein provided, and the pay and allowances of the officers so detailed in the grades from which they are detailed shall be paid out of the Philippine treasury.

SEC. 2. That any companies of Philippine scouts ordered to assist the Philippine constabulary in the maintenance of order in the Philippine Islands may be placed under the command of officers serving as chief or assistant chiefs of the Philippine constabulary, as herein provided.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, this bill, the committee will observe, contains two sections. The first relates to the constabulary and provides that the officer in chief command of the constabulary in the islands shall have the rank and pay and emoluments of a brigadier-general of the United States Army. It also provides that the increase in compensation shall be paid out of the insular treasury.

The second section of the bill relates to the native Philippine scouts now enlisted in the Regular Army of the United States, and provides that when they are detailed to serve with the constabulary they shall be under the command of the chief of constabulary. Under an act passed by the Philippine Commission, there has been organized in the islands what is known as the Philippine constabulary. It now numbers about 6,000 men, all of whom are natives of the islands.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Are those who have command of the police native officers?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They are not. The command or the selection of the commander of this force is left entirely with the Commission.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They are not natives?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They are not.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I see under the second section of the bill that they are placed under the command of officers serving as chiefs or assistant chiefs of the Philippine constabulary. They are turned over to the police force. Does the gentleman think that is a safe proposition?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Undoubtedly; it is so safe that it is approved of by the Secretary of War, it is approved by General Young, it is approved by General Corbin——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That does not make it any better if it is wrong. I suppose the gentleman is aware of the fact that they are not responsible to anybody except the Commission; they are not responsible to the Army, and yet you turn over our soldiers to do police duty under the command of a police officer. I ask you again if you consider that a safe proposition?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I was about to reply to that, and if the gentleman will permit me to conclude the reply, I think he will be satisfied. It satisfies General Young, it satisfies General Corbin, it satisfies the Secretary of War, and it further satisfies Governor Taft, of the Philippine Commission. It also satisfies Governor Wright, who appeared before our committee and warmly advocated the passage of the bill as it is presented. It also satisfies Col. Clarence R. Edwards, in charge of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, dealing purely with civil affairs in the islands. The gentleman from Georgia, I think, somewhat misapprehends the situation. There are in the islands what is known as a constabulary force.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is the police force.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just a moment. It is a police force primarily, but it can be taken for the purpose of national defense. It can be taken by the Philippine Commission for general defense of the archipelago.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, just there. If it is taken for defense, should it not be under a Regular Army officer?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; they are under a Regular Army officer now.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Not by this bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This bill provides that the man in command of the constabulary shall have the rank and pay of a brigadier-general. To-day the man in command is Captain Allen, of the Regular Army. The bill provides also, and it is the law, that, with the consent of the military authorities, a brigadier-general of the Regular Army can be appointed.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. To whom are they responsible?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. To the Philippine Commission. The Commission has entire charge of the enlisted men of the command and responsibility for its discipline under laws which they have passed.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They could not possibly be court-martialed. As I understand, these are troops of the United States put under the command of a police officer, and the entire responsibility for what may or may not be done rests upon that police chief; and whatever offenses he may be guilty of, you can not bring him before a court-martial.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. These are not soldiers; they are practically a police force of the island—a constabulary enlisted for two years.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] allow me to ask him a question or two? As I understand, this bill does not by its own force put scouts under the control of the chief of the constabulary, but that would have to be done with the consent of the War Department.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] has not been talking about scouts, but about a constabulary. The scouts constitute an entirely different force.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand this constabulary to be a sort of military organization, composed of men enlisted for a definite term.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes, for two years.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It serves a purpose similar to that of the militia in one of the States; and its business is to do police work—to maintain order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This constabulary, as I understand, is made up of natives.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Excepting some of the officers.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes, sir.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman allow me a question? The gentleman from Georgia seems to be under the impression that the officer in charge of this constabulary would not be subject to court-martial. If he were, as the bill provides, a Regular Army officer of the United States, he would be subject to court-martial, would he not?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; but the bill does not provide that he must necessarily be a Regular Army officer.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It does everything but that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But I do not understand there is the slightest point in the objection attempted to be raised by the gentleman from Georgia, because it is not necessary for the discipline of the police force that they should be subject to court-martial; there is no necessity for that at all.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman does not understand me.

Let me put my statement in another form and see whether he sees the force of it. Suppose there should be disorder in Chicago; would you turn over United States troops to the police court of Chicago? Would you dare to do such a thing as that?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There is an implied fallacy in the gentleman's question, which I hope he will see upon reflection. There is all the difference in the world between the status of the State of Illinois and its relation to the Government of the United States and the status of the government of the Philippine Islands. There is no analogy whatever.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then take New Mexico instead of Chicago.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We can not, as the Congress of the United States, pass a statute affecting the police force of the city of Chicago. There is, therefore, no point in the gentleman's interrogatory. We can, however, do what we please with the municipal police force of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The very fact that we can not do what I have suggested in Chicago is the reason why we ought not to do it in the Philippine Islands. That is the point I make.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As I understand, under the provisions of this bill a second lieutenant can be detailed as chief of the police force, with the powers of a brigadier-general?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have anticipated that question; yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I think this is a very dangerous bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the bill is vicious, is it not strange that its bad qualities should have escaped the observation of men whose life profession has been that of military officers, and also of other men like Governor Taft and Governor Wright, and the other members of the Philippine Commission?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I had the power to detail or appoint these officers perhaps I might think it a good thing that such authority should be exercised. Possibly, if I were empowered to appoint a second lieutenant and make him practically a brigadier-general for life, I might not perceive the objection to it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If my friend from New York will take the pains to examine the testimony of Colonel Edwards and Governor Wright upon this very point, he will see that there is nothing tenable in his objection—nothing whatever.

Mr. FITZGERALD rose.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Governor Wright, in speaking upon the necessity of having some leeway in the selection of the commanding officer, said:

> We would endeavor to secure the very best kind of men we could find. The officers who have become brigadier-generals are generally elderly men, who would not care for that sort of work. It is a kind of duty which requires a very alert, driving man, in the full vigor of manhood, and I think you can best get him out of the captains and majors, to be frank about it; and that is what we want.

They have selected Captain Allen, of the Regular Army—originally a volunteer officer—who has an exceptionally brilliant record, and is a man of most unusual qualifications for the position. Governor Wright says, as does Colonel Edwards, that Captain Allen is a man of great physical energy and of unusual ability. They also say, what is patent to everybody who reflects upon the situation, that the matter of personnel is of prime importance in the Philippine administration. We can not select any and every brigadier-general and expect that he will do proper service as the head of the constabularly of the Philippine Islands.

It requires a man of unusual qualifications. They found the ideal man in Allen, and they want to retain him. He has under his command 6,000 men. A captain in that position does not have rank commensurate with his duties and responsibilities. The Commission wish to select the best man obtainable, not necessarily a brigadier-general nor a major-general. There are major-generals to-day in the service of the United States who would not be fitted to command the constabulary of the Philippine Islands, and it is especially so when we come to the selection of these officers.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask for information. How many assistant chiefs does this bill create?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The constabulary act organizing that force in the island provides that there shall be four subdivisions and that each of these shall have a chief. For some time there has been a vacancy among those chiefs, there being at present but three.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This uses the term "assistant chiefs."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, those are the assistant chiefs.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Who?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. These three men already having command under the chief. One of them has command of about fifteen hundred men. They each have command of approximately two thousand—fifteen hundred to two thousand men. That number is under Allen as commander in chief.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I see you make each one of the assistant chiefs a colonel.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Each has from 1,500 to 2,000 men under him, and he ought to have that rank. I also wish to remind the committee of the fact that these men have by their efficiency enabled us to reduce the force of the army in the Philippine Islands. That is the opinion of Governor Taft, as it also is of Governor Wright. They have been exceedingly efficient. From the 6,000 men in the constabulary there have been less than 25 desertions. Their cost per capita is about $250 a year to the insular government.

Mr. CANDLER. If the gentleman will allow me, I understand there is nothing in this bill to prevent the appointment of any officer of the United States Army to this position.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; and he will retain it simply while he acts as commander in chief of the constabulary force.

Mr. CANDLER. Then an officer of lower rank appointed under this bill would receive the pay of a brigadier-general?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; because he would be doing a great deal more service than many brigadier-generals are doing.

Mr. CANDLER. Then a lieutenant or captain or any officer of lower rank could be appointed to that position and receive that pay under this bill?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; but he would be commanding 6,000 men, in the discharge of duties which are arduous and dangerous and of vital importance to that archipelago, and therefore of great importance to this country.

Mr. CANDLER. Would not that permit the officers so appointed to advance in rank above other officers of the United States Army?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They hold that rank only while they command that constabulary force. The bill so provides.

Mr. CANDLER. Then I notice further that this bill provides that the payment of these officers shall be out of the Philippine treasury.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. Is there any money in the Philippine treasury out of which to pay them?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. A sufficient fund there for that purpose?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. In case of a deficiency would it not have to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The United States Government will not have to pay one penny of it. The bill especially provides that it shall come out of the insular treasury.

Now, besides the constabulary force, there are about 5,000 native Filipino scouts in the Regular Army. When any number of these scouts are detailed to-day to assist the constabulary, they usually go in small numbers, and are under command of a lieutenant or captain of the Army. The duty of that officer is primarily to the United States through the Regular Army. There is also the constabulary force, the commander in chief of which, or the commander of any number of which, is primarily responsible to the insular government. We have then a conflict of authority. The purpose of this bill is to unite the two bodies of troops when they are performing police duty there in the islands under the command of the chief of the constabulary force.

I think that is all I have to say at this time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. THAYER. If the gentleman will allow me, it is possible that the question I am about to ask has been answered, but I was unable to hear what was going on. I would like to ask how many persons are contemplated as assistants? I notice there is to be one commander in chief, and how many assistants are there to be under this bill?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the constabulary force is organized under an act passed by the Philippine Commission. That act provides that there shall be a commander in chief of the constabulary, and four assistants. There are four grand divisions of territory, so to speak, each of which has a constabulary force numbering from fifteen hundred to two thousand men—certainly a thousand or more—and each of those separate divisions is under the command of an officer.

Mr. THAYER. Then the number would be limited to four assistants, would it?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. THAYER. And what extra expense would have to be paid out of the Philippine treasury above what is now paid?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The difference between their present pay and the pay of a colonel.

Mr. THAYER. Does the gentleman know how much that is—how much will be the extra expense entailed upon the Philippine treasury?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is the difference between the pay of a captain and the pay of a colonel. The pay of a brigadier-general, I will say, is $4,500 a year and $50 a month for quarters. The pay of a colonel I do not remember, and I shall have to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] how much that is.

Mr. HULL. It depends on the length of service. The flat pay of a colonel is $3,600.

Mr. THAYER. And the pay of a captain?

Mr. HULL. The pay of a captain, mounted, is $2,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then it would be the difference between $2,000 and $3,600.

Mr. THAYER. For each person?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes. I yield now to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to my colleague [Mr. MADDOX.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago I reserved the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves the remainder of his time.

Mr. MADDOX. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill, and I propose to give some reasons for it now. I do not think we ought to pass it. I do not think it is necessary. I am opposed to it generally; I am opposed to imposing additional tax on these Philippine people which I consider at this time an outrage. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the purposes and objects of this bill are simply to promote a captain who is in charge of the constabulary force in the Philippine Islands to the rank and pay of a brigadier-general. The bill provides that the difference in pay between that of a captain and that of a brigadier-general shall be charged to the insular funds—they shall pay this difference. He is to be provided also with assistants, who shall rank as colonel, and the Filipinos shall pay the difference in price between the rank now of a lieutenant or captain and that of a colonel, and it must be paid out of the Philippine funds.
